INTRODUCTION.

IN presenting the following translations of the Vyavahāra Mayūkha of Bhaṭṭa Nīlakaṇṭha and the Smṛiti of Yājñavalkya, together with a few notes on Āryan (or Hindu) Law in the form of Appendices, I have to make a few preliminary remarks.

The Hindu Law is the law of the Ārya community in India. As it is at present understood and administered in courts of justice, it is but a small fragment of the entire body which is properly known as the Dharmaśāstra. This is now ordinarily divided into three divisions of Āchāra, Vyavahāra, and Prāyaschitta. I say now, because, strictly speaking, such a distinct partition of the Dharmaśāstra into several distinct departments was not quite settled till the time of the later Smṛiti-writers, and particularly Yājñavalkya, Manu, Nārada, and Gautama. Yājñavalkya, Parāśara, and other Smṛitis are divided into different Adhyāyas, and each Adhyāya has been divided into prakaraṇas (sections). These distinct sections have been used separately for their various purposes, and yet always with the central idea of Dharma being kept in view, and as parts of a whole. Vyavahāra, apart from Āchāra, (which latter includes Prāyaschitta,) is not considered by the people in their daily concerns, and it is only during very recent years that sometimes administrators have shown a tendency to work these divisions like so many Acts of a modern and temporal legislature. The object of early Āryan writers has been more to inquire and lay down the rules for Āchāra and Prāyaschitta than about Vyavahāra (or the Civil law). The last has always been considered a very minor matter; for, as might naturally be expected, sages who extolled the virtues of an ascetic, or a house-holding ascetic who kept food for only twelve days in his house,¹ could not be expected to provide a complicated and laborious scheme of succession. The erection of fresh hermitages was always contemplated at each marriage, and marriage itself was inculcated simply as a means to a spiritual end.² Again, when the life of the Ārya began with the study of the Vedas, and ended with an immediate abandonment of the world and entrance into the fourth order, whenever the student was sufficiently subdued in his passions and desires,¹ the modern views either of law or social system could not be expected to prevail. It need not surprise us accordingly if we occasionally find a want of harmony between the ideas of the nation of the present day and the Spirit of the Sacred ordinances of the Vedas and Smritis. While it would be correct to say that there is perhaps no other nation on earth which has preserved so much of its antiquity intact as the Áryans of India, it is not right to assert that they have been perfectly stationary in all respects. The simultaneous existence of perfect conservatism in regard to some institutions and a wide departure from the old grooves in others is a circumstance which is often not clearly realised by foreigners; and hence it is that some of our administrators are found either trying to restore us according to their notions to the pristine simplicity of our old institutions, or going to the other extreme and unduly giving effect to their own theories of progress by trying to adapt our old texts to the modern ideas of European civilization. Either process is in my opinion fraught with evil. Thus a Hindu or Áryan householder, directly he enters the married state, is commanded to have his own sacrificial fires.² He has his own sphere of duties, marked out for him up to the point of final emancipation. Even in worldly matters he is advised to live separate, to have his own daily fire-sacrifices, and to live as the head of his own family. Hindu society has more or less conformed to these principles. In provinces where the mercantile elements preponderate, and questions of the collection and distribution of wealth chiefly arise, segregation of interests is the rule and congregation the exception. This is well understood by the community; how far it is followed by our courts, our readers must inquire and judge for themselves. Again, according to the Áryan code, there is no provision of law clearer than that a Bráhmaṇa's wealth can only be inherited by Bráhmaṇas.³ This was followed for a long time, but in the year 1860 the Hindu law was set aside, and the common law of England was declared to govern the case.

Other instances of a misapprehension, or improper application of the law, will be noticed in their places further on. These arise, as it seems to me; from a very contracted view of the Áryan law. It is useful, therefore, to enquire what this law is and has been. Taking the Dharmaśāstra in its proper sense, it may be laid down to be the law of the Áryas. The question naturally arises—who were the Áryas, and who their present representatives are? Some have confined the term Árya to the three twice-born classes.¹ Is it so fixed? Has it been so always?

The Vedic origin of the four classes of Átyas as detailed in the *Purushasūkta*² is well known. The occurrence of this hymn in the last or 10th Maṇḍala has been commented on. But the Panchakshiti (consisting of the four classes, together with the Nisháda) occurs in the 10 earlier Maṇḍalas of the Rig-veda;³ and although the origin of the four classes as detailed in the Purushasūkta may be open to remark, the mention of four classes even in the earlier portions of the Rig-veda, and the early part of the Taittiríya or the Black Yajur-veda,⁴ proves their existence in those early times.

Again, the Áryas are known as the inhabitants of a certain tract of country named Áryāvarta. But this has been of indefinite extent. Manu, as expounded by Bṛighu, indeed lays down its limits with apparent definiteness in ch. ii. v. 22;⁵ but in defining the 'sacri-ficial country,' or Yājñiyadesa as it is called in Sanskrit in a very vague way in the next following verse,⁶ it appears to me that Manu, or rather his pupil Bṛighu, owns that in his time the Áryas had not confined themselves to what was technically called the Áryāvarta as defined in the preceding verse. For by Yājñiyadesa he evidently means what the word Áryāvarta would etymologically import;⁷ because the performance of sacrifices according to Manu was a privilege of the Áryans alone. Again,

² Rig-Samhitá x, 90, 12. The same origin is given in the Black Yajush-Samhitá kanḍa vii, Adhyāya i, Anuvāka i.

आसमुद्रानु वै पूर्वा दासमुद्रानु पश्चिमात् । तयोरेवान्तरं गिर्यो रायोर्वतं विदुर्वाचाः ॥

Translation:—"As far as the eastern, and as far as the western oceans between the 40 two mountains just mentioned, lies the tract which the wise have named Áryāvarta, or inhabited by respectable men."

⁶ For the text and translation of the verse see above p. 158, ll. 8—10.

⁷ Kullūka explains its etymology as follows: आयो अभावतैस्ते पुनः पुनर्द्वयवन्तीति आर्थावर्तः । Translation:—"Áryāvarta [is so called] because Áryas are here successively born."

the limits assigned by the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki I. 40, 4—6 to the 'sacri-ficial country' are identical with those of the technical Āryāvarta of Manu. The Vīramitrodaya in its comments on verse 2 of Yājñavalkya chap. i, says that the country therein indicated is the whole Bhārata-varsha.¹

The Mahābhārata Karnaparva, Adhyāya 40, vv. 20—48 (Bombay ed. 1. 74 p. 1) mentions certain districts which were inhabited by Āryas, and yet were considered as unsuited to the performance of sacrifices. On the other hand, the *Vyākṛteṣa Māhātmya*² (a part of the Vārāha Purāṇa) states that certain districts very near the Cape Comorin and 10 certain other islands, were inhabited by the Āryas. All these facts confirm what there are other independent grounds for holding—namely, that the original limits for the residence of Āryas were gradually extended, so as to include the whole of Bhārata Varsha, which the refer-ences³ in the footnote show to be identical with the Hindusthāna of the present day. Pāpini Adhyāya ii., Quarter iv., Sūtra x.

Vṛttī.—They are [said to be] niravasita [expelled] whose dish after meals is not purified even by the [prescribed] means. In the case of words importing Súdras other 80 than these, the copulative compound is in the singular.

The Mahā Bhāṣya of Patañjali, Adhyāya ii., quarter iv., Āhnika ii.—[In the Sūtra] ‘of unexpelled Súdras,’ [the word] aniravasitānām (of unexpelled) is used. What [is it from which] non-expulsion [is meant]. [It may be] ‘not expelled from Āryāvarta [the country of the Āryas].’ But what is Āryāvarta? [The country] to the east of Ādarśa, to the west of Kālākavana, to the south of the Himalayas, and to the north of Pārijātra. If so, [the Samāhāra compound] Kishkindhagandhikam (Kishkindha and gan- 40 dhika) Sakayavanam (Saka and vanam) and Saurpakraucham (Saurpa and kraucha) cannot be explained; [because, says Kaiyata, all these are tribes of Súdras living outside the Āryāvarta]. If so, then [let the meaning be] ‘not expelled from the habitations of 40 Āryas.’ But what is a habitation of the Āryas? A village, a station for herdsmen, a town, a locality of traders. If so, then in the midst of large mansions, Chāṇḍālas and Mṛitapas [often] live and [the itaretarayogadvandva compound] Chāṇḍālamṛitapāḥ (Chāṇḍālas and mṛitapas) cannot be explained. Mṛitapas is explained by Kaiyaṣa as those who are known by the name of Dombās in the vernaculars; and by Nāgojī- bhāṣya as those who living in the vicinity of a cemetery take the clothes, fuel, &c. on a corpse.] If so, then [let the meaning be] 'not expelled [or debarred] from sacrificial rites.' In this way, too, [the Samāhāra dvandva compounds] takshāyaskāram (a carpenter and an ironsmith), rajakatantuvōyam (a washerman and a weaver) cannot be explained. If so, then [let the meaning be] 'those are antravasita (not expelled) whose dish after meals is purified in the [prescribed] ways; and those are niravasita (expelled) whose dishes after meals cannot be purified even by the prescribed means.

[To avoid repetition, the passage of Kaiyata is here not translated, as its operative part is already translated in the translation of the passage from the Bhāshya.]

Nāgajībhāṭṭa's Bhāshya Vivaraṇa.—It should be understood that the word Śūdra 10 stands in this Śūtra for one not belonging to the three varṇas (classes).

The above shows that at the time of Patañjali, the Āryas had no confined definite spot as their peculiarly sacred place.

The test of determining the Āryas from their place of habitation being thus found unsatisfactory, the next test that occurs is to find out their classes and the determination of their limits. It is suggested that the four divisions mentioned in the R̥g-veda (x. 90); the Vajasaney Samhitā of the Yajurveda (xxxi. 1—16), the Atharvaveda (xix. 6), the Bhagavadgītā (iv. 13), the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (iii. 6, 30—34), the Brihadāraṇyaka (i. 4), and Manu (I. 31), are meant to be the divisions 20 of the Āryan community; but as this is not the place to enter into a disquisition either on the 'castes' or the classes of 'Āryas,' I content myself for the present by saying that even this test is at the present time quite unsatisfactory. At the time of Manu's Code, or rather Bhṛigu's version of Manu, an attempt to exclude the Śūdra from the pale of Āryanism is clearly observable (see for instance ch. x. 66, 67, and 69; and ch. ii. v. 39). But it would also appear that the process of segregation was not then so far advanced, as it is now; for in several places, the Śūdra does appear to be included within the sacred line (see ch. v., v. 189 and ch. x., v. 57). There must have been some confusion 30 of classes in the time of Manu which has further developed itself in modern times; for, according to some Purāṇic accounts, the intermediate classes of the Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas have entirely disappeared; and the first and the last classes have been split up into so many subdivisions, that it is now hard to determine whether a certain individual does or does not come within the pale of the Āryan law. The Purāṇic view may, to a certain extent, be correct as regards the Śūdras. But, as far as the history of the different provinces of India shows, both Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas do exist, although they again have sub-divided themselves, and have degenerated in their practices like the other 40 Āryan classes.

For the benefit of the Ārya community as above described, the Śruti or the Vedas furnished a body of law prescribing the ritual. The Veda in its threefold division of (1) Sanhitā, (2) Brāhmaṇa, and (3) the Āraṇyaka regulated the different stages of the ceremonial. But even in those early times, usage or custom seems to have supplied the basis of the law, for, as Bhīṣma observes in the Mahābhārata, usage or practice is the root of all Dharma.¹

The words of Śāṅkara that āchāra is the source of authority in all matters of Dharma must be always kept in view.² This done, we may now examine the sources of the Vedic law as founded by the Āryas.

The whole of the Veda seems to have been one work—afterwards divided into four, Rīch, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvan.

Some writers take the number of Vedas to be three, and leave Atharvan out of account.³ Others again place this Veda in the same category as the first three, as having been separated and arranged by 10 Vyāsa.⁴ That it is one of the four Vedas is undoubted,⁵ and its non-inclusion in the sacrificial scheme is well accounted for by the constitution of the triplicate ceremonial so well explained by Śāyana in his introduction to the Rīg-Veda. Each of these four Vedas has many śākhās or branches. According to the Charaṇa-Vyūha current amongst the followers of the Rīg-Veda in these parts, the Rīg-Veda has five branches; the Yājush has two divisions, the black and the white; the first has eighty-six, and the second fifteen branches; the Sāman has one thousand branches; and the Atharvan has nine. Of these very few now exist. A commentary on the Charaṇavyūha gives 20 the following account of the extent of the different Śākhās in different parts of India⁶ :—

‘तत्र प्रच्य उदीच्या नैऋत्यस्तत्र वाजसनेयानां पञ्चदश भेदा भवन्ति प्राच्य उदीच्यनैऋत्यस्तिक्षो दिक्षायां (?) वाजसनेयवेदोत्पत्तिः ॥ महाधेवि ॥ पृथिव्या मध्यरेखा च नर्मदा परिकीर्तिता ॥ दक्षिणोत्तरयोर्भागे शाखाभेदश्च उच्यते ॥ १ ॥ नर्मदादक्षिणे भागे आपस्तम्ब्या इत्यायनी ॥ राणायनी रिपला च यक्षकन्याविभागिनः ॥ २ ॥ माध्यन्दिनी शाङ्खायनी कीथुमी शौनकी तथा ॥ नर्मदोत्तरभागे च यक्षकन्याविभागिनः ॥ ३ ॥ तुङ्गन कृष्णा तथा गौरी सद्याद्रिः शिखरादधि ॥ आ आन्ध्रदेशपर्यन्तं बभ्रुचक्षा इत्यायनी ॥ ४ ॥ उत्तरे गुर्जर देशे वेदे बभ्रुचकीर्तिनः ॥ कीषीनकी ब्राह्मणं च शाखा शाङ्खायनी तथा ॥ ५ ॥ आन्ध्रादिदक्षिणप्रदेशीयैर्वासागरकावधि ॥ यक्षुर्देवस्तु तैत्तिरीयं (?) आस्तम्यी प्रतिष्ठिता ॥ ६ ॥ अथर्व-

- Translation :—"Of the Vajasaneyins living in the east, the north, in the south-west, there are fifteen divisions. In the said three quarters the Vajasaneya Veda was originated. The Mahārṣya [states the following]: The Narmadā is declared to be the middle line (equator) of the earth. The different śākhās [existing] on the north 10 and south of it will [here] be declared. In the regions south of the Narmadā, [the Śākhās] Āpastambī, Āśvalāyanī, Rāṇāyanī, and Pippalā [exist, the followers whereof are] sharers in respect of sacrifices and marriage [i.e. are an exclusive community in the said respects]. In the regions north of the Narmadā, the Mādhyandinī, Śankhāyanī, Kauthumī, and Śaunakī are sharers in respect of sacrifices and marriages. Up to the Tungā, Krishnā, Godā, the summit of the Sahyādri, and the Ānīthra country the Āśvalāyanī of the R̥g-Veda [prevails]. In the northern Gujjar country, the Veila is declared to be the Rich, the Brāhmaṇa Kaushītakī, and the śākhā Śankhāyanī. Commencing from the Andhra country in the south-east direction, and up to the Godā and the sea, the Tattirīya Yajur-Veda, and [it] śākhā Āpa-tambī prevails. The 20 Adhvaryus, the Udgatṛis, and the Hotṛis have several Sūtras, [but] where the Sūtra caste, and the occupation is [similar], there [alone] marriage [will take place]. Commencing from the Sahyādri in the south-western direction, up to the sea, the Hiranyakeśī śākhā prevails, in the vicinity of Paraśurāma. From the M-yūra mountain up to the Gujjar country in the north-western direction, Maitrāyaṇī [prevails]. [In the countries named] Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kalīnga, Kāśīna, and Gurjara, the [śākhā] Mādhyandinī of the Vajasaneyi [Veda, prevails]. The first śākhā of the Vajasaneya, named Kāṇva, has been spread by sage Yājñavalkya over all countries."

Practically the following are the principal Śākhās now existing in these parts¹ :—

- 30 Rig-Veda Śākhā.
(1) Śākala.
(2) Bāshkala.
Yajur-Veda (1) (a) Taittirīya Proper.
(b) Maitrayaṇī.
[These are not associated with by their coreligionists.]
(2) Śukla—
(a) Kāṇva.
(b) Mādhyandinī.
40 Sāma (1) Rāṇāyanī.
(2) Kauthumī.
Atharvan (1) Śaunaka division of the Pippalāda branch.

¹ See Max Müller's Sanskrit Lit., pp. 363—377. The lists there given will have to be settled. Thus Āśvalāyana śākhā does not now exist. The Sūtra of that Rishi is used by the followers of the Śākala śākhā. The Atharva is hardly known. There is only one Brāhmaṇa family in Benares which follows it as a study, and these are a few scattered followers of this Veda in other places.

As regards the Yájusha, the following occurs in another commentary on the Charaṇa-Vyūha recently obtained from Benares :—

The followers of the several branches are distinguished by the Sūtras, which they respectively follow in their ritual. 'Thus it is laid down':—

बह्वर्णं वा स्वष्ट्रघ्नोक्तं यस्य कर्म प्रकीर्तितम् ।
तस्य तावति शान्कार्ये कृते सर्वं कृतं भवेत् ॥

Translation :—Whether the ritual enjoined by the Gṛihya Sūtra proper to one's self be great or small (i.e. complete or incomplete), when that ritual is observed, the whole is observed.

Other authorities quoted by Hemādri run in the same direction, and practice supports the same conclusion. This speaks of one class of 30 Sūtras, namely, the Gṛihya, describing the duties of a Brahmachāri and a Gṛihastha (a householder having a wife). Another class of Sūtras are the Śrauta or the Vedic sacrificial Sūtras. These are very important in a religious point of view ; but in regard to the every-day duties of the Āryas of the present day, they are in a great measure out of date, except to a very small class of the Brāhmaṇa community.²

Veda to which it belongs.		Remarks.	40
1. Áśvalāyana	Rich	Relates to the duties of a Hotri.
2. Āpastamba	Taittirīya or the Black Yajurveda	A small portion of Nos. 3, 4, and 10 relates to the duties of Hotri in the Darśapūrṇamāsa ; while the rest is devoted to the work of the Adhvaryu.
3. Baudhāyana
4. Satyashādha
5. Bharadvāja
6. Vādākā

These Sūtras, both Grihya and Śrauta, which (where they have not been superseded by the Purāṇas and usage) still command the respect of the followers of the respective śākhās, and are studied as one of the six *angas*¹ or complements of the Veda. The Śrauta Sūtras of the R̥ich, Yājush, and Sāma Vedas are all used to supplement each other in the Śrauta sacrifices.²

All the ordinary ceremonies of the Āryas, so far as they are governed by the Sūtras, are regulated by the Grihyas Sūtras. The Vedic sacrifices alone are regulated by the Śrauta Sūtras, and in this respect the 10 Sūtras of all the three Vedas (R̥ich, Yājush, and Sāman) are used together for the parts to be taken therein by the different officiators. But of the Taittirīya Sūtras, some one only of the following is used by the Adhvaryu:—Āpastamba, Baudhāyana, Satyāśhādha, or Kātyāyana. Out of these four, Baudhāyana is used most; next comes Āpastamba, and after him Kātyāyana. In the Bombay Presidency, the Grihya Sūtras most followed are the Āśvalāyana, Satyāśhādha, Kātyāyana,

	Veda to which it belongs.	Remarks.
7. Karmāntasūtra.....	Taittirīya or the Black Yajurveda	{ These are supplements to the Sūtra of Baudhāyana. Belongs to some lost Śākhā, probably subordinate to Maitrāyaṇi.
8. Anpamanyava
9. Śāiki
10. Mānava.....
11. Kātyāyana.....	Śukla or the White Yajurveda.
12. Lātyāyana.....	Sāma	Relates to the duties of the Udgātrī.
13. Kauśika	Atharva.

The principal Grihya Sūtras are as follow:—

	Belongs to the
30 1. Āśvalāyana	R̥ig-veda.
2. Śāṅkhāyana
3. Āpastamba	Taittirīya or the Black Yajurveda.
4. Baudhāyana
5. Satyāśhādha.....	Śukla or the White Yajurveda.
6. Kātyāyana.....
7. Gobhila	Sāma Veda.

40 ² The following text from the R̥ich Samhitā explains the position of the three Vedas in these sacrifices:—

ऋचां त्वः पोषमास्ते पुष्व्यान् गांयन्त्वो गायति शक्नीयुः । ब्रह्मन्वो वदति जातवियां यज्ञस्य माघं
विर्णिमीत उत्वः ॥ अ० ८, अ० १, व० १५, अ० 29, Maṇḍala x, 71, 11.

Translation:—One [of the sacrificial priests called Hotrī] occupies himself in strengthening (i.e. reciting hymns from) the R̥ich; another [called Udgātrī] chants the Śakṣvāt r̥ichs from the Sāman; a third called Brahmā gives orders in every matter [connected with the sacrifice]; and a fourth [called Adhvaryu] performs the principal portion of the sacrifice [such as taking the Soma juice and the like, by means of reciting r̥ichs from the Yājush].

50 (See Introduction to R̥ig-veda Samhitā vol. I., p. 2.)

In the Smṛiti Ratnākara, the following eighteen Sūtras are given, and are classed as Pūrva (prior) Sūtras, and Apara (after) Sūtras thus¹ :—

आग्निवेश्यसूत्रे ॥ अथातः सूत्रगणनां व्याख्यास्यामी वैधायनमापस्तम्बं सत्याषाढं द्राक्षायणमागस्त्यं शाकल्यमाश्वलायनं शालनीयं कात्यायनमिति नवानि पूर्वसूत्राणि ॥ वैखानसं जौनकीयं भारद्वाजमाग्निवेश्यं जैमिनीयं वाधूलं माध्यन्दिनं कौण्डिन्यं कौषीतकमिति नवान्यपरसूत्राणि ॥

Translation :—‘In the Agneśya Sūtrā I now enumerate the sūtras : Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, Satyāśhādha, Drāhyāyana, Agastya, Śākalya, Śvalāyana, Śavanīya, and Kātyāyana—these nine are the pūrva Sūtras. Vaikhanasa Saunakīya, Bhāradvāja, Agneśya, Jaiminīya, Vādula, Mādhyandina, Kaundīnya, and Kaushitakā, these are apara Sūtras.’

It will be observed that while this list contains some new Sūtras not before mentioned, it omits several well known now in actual use.²

Having cursorily given the number of Sūtra works and their commentators, I now pass on to the Smṛitis. There are no guides to the Smṛitis like the Anukramanikas nor Sarvānukramas of the Rig-Veda. And as far as the commentators go, Mādhyama alone appears to furnish a concise resumé of each chapter of one Smṛiti, namely, the Laghu Parāśara Smṛiti. In regard to other works, I have yet found no guides to show their extent or antiquity—either positive or relative.

Some writers would derive their authority from the Śruti or the 20 Vedas now lost.³ This view is supported by the very term Smṛiti—things remembered, which would include tradition. The *Taittirīya Aranyaka*⁴ gives four kinds of proofs :—“ स्मृतिः प्रत्यक्षमैतिसं अनुमानचतुष्टयं ॥”

Translation :—“(1) Smṛiti, (2) Pratyakṣa (what is perceived by the senses), (3) Aitihiya (received from tradition), and (4) anumāna (inference): these four are pramāṇa (evidence).” Śāyana in commenting upon this observes : “ अनुमेयं श्रुतिमूलं मन्वादिशास्त्रं.” Translation :—‘Manavādi Śāstra derives its origin from assumed Śruti.’ Śāyana therefore would derive Manu and the rest from the Śruti or the Vedas. Some Smṛitis can thus be traced to the Vedas as now existing; but others have in the 30 words of the Prayoga Pārijāta to be traced only to some lost branches of the four Vedas.⁵

The number of Smṛitis is very great. Unfortunately many have been lost. Some exist as fragments; others are only known from quotations in other Smṛitis or digests of more modern writers.

Rāmāśramī on Amarakośa (I. vi. 6) (स्मृतिस्तु धर्मसंहिता) observes l. 45 p. 1 :—“ वेदार्थ-स्मरणपूर्वकत्वाद् स्मृतिः । स्मृतिर्धर्मशास्त्रस्मरणयोः किर्या । धर्मबोधार्थ एव ता संहिता ” and gives the example of Manu. 40

The compilation of an Index to the Pratīkas in Yājñavalkya, and an examination and comparison thereof with the works of the Bhāṭṭas, Hemādri, and others, has convinced me that it would be a work of great research to reconstruct Smṛitis from digests. But until such a work is systematically carried out, or more complete MSS. of Smṛitis are discovered, our speculations must at least to a great extent be conjectural. As regards numbers alone, the table at the end shows what materials have been available at different times to some modern investigators. Their number is differently noticed by different ancient writers. Yājñavalkya (I., 4, 5) names the following twenty as the introducers of Dharmaśāstra :—

Manu; Atri; Viṣṇu; Hārīta; Yājñavalkya; Uśanas; Angiras; Yama; Āpastamba; Samvarta; Kāśyapa; Bṛhaspati; Parāśara; Vyāsa; Śankha; Likhita; Dakṣa; Gautama; Śātātapa; Vasishṭha.

The Vīramitrodaya in the Achārādhyāya enumerates eighteen Smṛitīkars (or makers of Smṛitis), eighteen Upa-Smṛitīkars (or makers of secondary Smṛitis), and twenty-one other Smṛiti-makers, making altogether fifty-seven, thus—

Eighteen principal Smṛiti-makers :—

20 Manu; Bṛhaspati; Dakṣa; Gautama; Yama; Angiras; Yogśvara; Prachetas; Śātātapa; Parāśara; Samvarta; Uśanas; Śankha; Likhita; Atri; Viṣṇu; Āpastamba; Hārīta.

Eighteen secondary Smṛiti-makers :—

Jābali; Nāchikēta; Skanda; Langākshi; Kāśyapa; Vyāsa; Sanatkumāra; Sumantu; Pitāmaha; Vyāghra; Kārshnājini; Jātūkarṇya; Kapiljāla; Baudhāyana; Kāpāda; Viśvāmītra; Paiṭhīnase; Gobhila.

Twenty-one other Smṛiti-makers :—

Vasishṭha; Nārada; Sumantu; Pitāmaha; Vasu; Kṛishnājini; Śatyavrata; Gārgya; Dévala; Jamadagni; Bharadvāja; Pulastya; Kratu; Pulaha; Ātrēya; Chhāgaleya; 30 Marichi; Vatsa; Pātākara; Rishyaśringa; Baijavāpa.

For the above Mitra Miśra quotes the authority of Śankha and Likhita, but the verses do not occur in any of the copies of those works noticed in Appendix I.¹ Hemādri² notices the same number; but quotes the prose work of Śankha, Likhita and the Smṛiti of Angiras as his authority. The *Bhaviṣya Purāṇa*³ gives thirty-six Smṛitis, and so does the Paiṭhīnase Smṛiti. A digest of the thirty-six is now cited as the Shatīrīnśanmata (the opinion of thirty-six).

(1) Manu, (2) Vishnu, (3) Yājñavalkya, (4) Hārīta, (5) Atri, (6) Yama, (7) Aṅgiras, (8) Vasishṭha, (9) Dakṣa, (10) Samvarta, (11) Śātātapa, (12) Parāśara, (13) Āpastamba, (14) Uśanas, (15) Vyāsa, (16) Kātyāyana, (17) Vṛhaspati, (18) Gautama, (19) Śaṅkha, and 20 Likhita.

Of these Dr. Rājendralāl Mitra observes:—"It is impossible now to determine whether this list was made to show that these were the only authorities known at the time of the Purāṇa, or that they were the most important or leading lawgivers. In either case their pre-eminence is manifest. This is also evident from the fact of their having been named in Yājñavalkya's code of laws."¹ 10

Paithīnasi enumerates as follows:—

Manu, Aṅgiras, Vyāsa, Gautama, Likhita, Yama, Vasishṭha, Dakṣa, Samvarta, Śātātapa, Parāśara, Vishṇu, Āpastamba, Hārīta, Śaṅkha, Kātyāyana, Bṛhaspati (under the name of Guru Prachetas), Nārada Yogin, Baudhāyana, Piśanaha, Sumantu, Kāśyapa, Babhru, Paithīnasi, Vyāghra, Satyaṛata, Bharadvāja, Gārgya, Karahñajini, Jābāli, Jamadagni, Laugākshi. Adding Paithīnasi, the number comes up to 36. See Hemādri's Dānakhaṇḍa. pp. 527, 528.

In the Gṛuḍa Mahā Purāṇa² the following eighteen are enumerated:

Manu, Vishṇu, Yama, Aṅgiras, Vasishṭha, Dakṣa, Samvarta, Śātātapa, Parāśara, Āpastamba, Uśanasya, Vyāsa, Kātyāyana, Bṛhaspati, Gautama, Śaṅkha, Likhita, 20 Hārīta, Atri, and myself (Yājñavalkya).

It will be observed that Yājñavalkya's name occurs at the end. He was the speaker, and as will be seen from the manuscript the first and third chapters of the Smṛiti of Yājñavalkya itself are largely quoted from; and this I have made use of elsewhere.³

In the Mahābhārata the following law-givers are named⁴:—

The Dharmas laid down by Umāmaheśvara, Nandi, Brāhmana, Kuṁāra, Sumantu, Jaimini, Śākala, Pulastya, Pulaha, Pāvaka, Agastya, Sudhānya, Śaṇḍila, Saulabhanjana, Vāla khilyas, Saptarishi (the seven sages), Vyāghra, Vyāsa, Vitanḍaka, Vidura, Śringa, Aṅgiras, Vaiśampāyana, &c.

Thus while 55 Rishis are cited in the Dāna Khaṇḍa, 28 are cited in the Vrata Khaṇḍa; but of these, the works of a large number are not yet available in a separate form.

Mādhava¹ in his commentary on Parāśara, after alluding to Manu, cites the passage from Paithīnasi quoted above, giving names of 86 Smṛitis. He then asks—'Is this an exhaustive enumeration? No, [says he], for [if it were], the authority of Vatsa, Marīchi, Devala, Pāraskara, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Rishya Sṛinga, Likhita, Ohhāgaleya, Ātreya, &c., as expounders of the Dharmaśāstra would not be [acknowledged].' He then gives from the Mahābhārata a list of lawgivers which I have given at page xv.

40 ¹ The passage runs thus—

The 12 Mayūkhas which have been carefully examined contain extracts from 97 different Smṛitis, which I have thrown into the form of a table.

In the Nirṇayasindhu alone, Kamalākara refers to 181 Smritis, and Anantadeva in the Sanskāraustubha quotes 104. Besides these, other Smṛiti passages are given, but their authors are not named.

A comparison of the table referred to at page xiv, with the lists given above from various sources, and an examination of the passages quoted, will confirm what has become abundantly manifest in the course of this enquiry, that many Smritis have not yet been found, and that those that have been found and some that have been published are in an imperfect state. It is thus almost impossible to do much at present to settle their chronological order either absolutely or relatively. A large number have, however, been studied with the view of finding out their sequence by internal evidence. From an examination of several Smritis, the annexed comparative statement has been drawn, showing which Smritis quote which other Smritis.

Nārada do. Vṛiddha-Hārīta, Vṛiddha-Gautama, Kātyāyana.

The following remarks have suggested themselves in the course of preparing the above statements:—

There are several works under the name of the same reputed author, with titles but slightly changed, e. g. (1) Manu, Vṛiddha-Manu and Bṛiḡa-Manu; (2) Yājñavalkya, Vṛiddha-Yājñavalkya, Bṛiḡa-Yājñavalkya, and Yogi-Yājñavalkya; (3) Āṅgiras, Madhyama-Āṅgiras, and 20 Laghu-Āṅgiras; (4) Gautama, Śloka-Gautama, and Vṛiddha-Gautama; (5) Paráśara or Laghu-Paráśara, and Bṛihat-Paráśara; (6) Hārīta, Laghu-Hārīta and Vṛiddha-Hārīta; (7) Śítátapa and Vṛiddha-Śátátapa; (8) Kātyāyana and Vṛiddha-Kātyāyana; (9) Garga, and Vṛiddha-Garga; (10) Yama and Vṛiddha-Yama; (11) Vishṇu, Laghu-Vishṇu, and Bṛiḡa-Vishṇu; (12) Sāṅkha, Laghu-Sāṅkha, and Sāṅkha Likhita; (13) Vasishṭha, Vṛiddha-Vasishṭha and Sloka-Vasishṭha; and (14) Bṛihaspati and Vṛiddha-Bṛihaspati.

Two questions naturally arise from the above—viz., whether the name of an author when preceded by Bṛiḡa on the one hand and by 30 Vṛiddha on the other signifies two different individuals; and secondly, whether works appearing under one name with Vṛiddha or Bṛiḡa sometimes prefixed to it are works of different authors, or have any common basis.

The first question admits of an easy solution; because the use of Bṛiḡa by some treatise-writers and of Vṛiddha by others in citing one and the same text is proof that they were used synonymously. Thus at page 82 ll. 10—13 and note 1, a verse is quoted by Kamalákara in his Viváda Tāṇḍava as one from Vṛiddha-Manu, while the Vyavaháramáñdhava attributes the same to Bṛiḡa-Manu. Again, the texts at p. 40 128 l. 28 and p. 129 l. 2 are quoted from Vṛiddha-Manu by Nílakaṇṭha, but they are attributed to Bṛiḡa-Manu by the Víramitrodaya (l. 129 p. 1 and l. 129 p. 2 respectively). This view is strengthened by one and the same work being styled Bṛihat and Vṛiddha in two different places. Thus the Bṛihat-Parásara in the Calcutta compilation of Smṛitis is called Vṛiddha-Parásara in the University Collection.

There is a diversity of opinion on the second question. Śūlapāṇi while commenting on Yājñavalkya, I. xv. 4, 5, says:—"वृद्धज्ञानात्पल्लुहारितादीनामवस्थाभेदेनैव एवान्तर्भावः"

Translation:—[Names like] Vṛiddha Śātātapa and Laghu Hārīta [signifying the same author] at different periods of life are included [in the given list],

The Vīramitrodaya concurring with Śūlapāṇi on this point observes:—

- 10 "वृद्धमनुवृद्धवसिष्ठवृद्धज्ञानात्पल्लुहारितयोगियाज्ञवल्क्यादयस्त्ववस्थाभेदेन सविशेषेण सञ्ज्ञाप्यपदेशभाजो मन्वादय एवेति न पृथगुक्ताः"

Translation:—"Vṛiddha Manu, Vṛiddha Vasishtha, Vṛiddha Śātātapa, Laghu Hārīta, Yogi Yājñavalkya and the like, being the same Manu, and the rest who got special names indicative of the different periods of life, have not been separately mentioned [in the list]."

- This theory, plausible as it does look, does not commend itself to my judgment—I., because it leaves out of account the names which have Bṛihat prefixed to them; II., because it is inconsistent with the special mention of Vṛiddha Śātātapa in the opening verse of the Smṛiti found under that name in the University Collection, and of Vṛiddha 20 Gārgya in the Mahābhārata Anuśāsana Parvan (I. 165 p. 1 line 15), where the whole name appears clearly as the designation of one individual; III., the indiscriminate use of Bṛihat for Vṛiddha would be unaccountable if Vṛiddha is interpreted as signifying 'old,' as Messrs. West and Bühler have done (see their Introduction p. 16 note a to the Hindu Law, second edition). For these reasons I am inclined to hold that such works are productions of different individuals, and that their being named after the same author is due to the one being an expansion or an epitome of the other. I am confirmed in this opinion by a likelihood 30 of the terms Bṛihat and Vṛiddha being epithets more of the works than of the authors, just as a similar prefix śloka (metrical) in words like śloka-Gautama and śloka-Vasishtha undoubtedly is.

There are no data for deciding whether the epitomes or the larger works are of a later date as compared with each other; but I may state that the larger works appear in several instances to be the subsequent productions; because except on such a supposition it is hard to explain how Gautama could be referred to in Vṛiddha-Gautama (see the Calcutta Smṛitis Part II. p. 498), and how Vasishtha could precede and be referred to in Vṛiddha-Gautama, when Gautama precedes and is mentioned in Vasishtha (see above p. xxii).

As regards the composition of the Smṛitis, Appendix I. will give some of my views. Nothing can be yet definitively pronounced. As I said before, some take Smṛitis as Śrutis preserved by tradition. Others consider them as supplements to Sūtras. Others again hold them to be dissertations or compilations of approved usages and customs promulgated at different times by or under the sanction of eminent sages or their followers. Some are evidently sectarian works. Some are compilations from other writers ; while others, as they now stand, are confined to particular subjects or branches of particular subjects.

I have in my above remarks placed the Smṛitis after the Sūtras, 1st, because the Sūtras are, as a class, older than Smṛitis ; and 2ndly, because the latter have been expressly included in the Vedāṅgas, while the former are not. It seems, however, that where the same authors have composed both Sūtras and Smṛitis, there are grounds for holding that both works were done by the same agency. Thus Āśvalāyana in his Smṛiti in the verses given below states that he composed the Smṛiti which bears his name, after composing his own Śrāuta and Gr̥hya Sūtras on the same subject:—

हिमवन् समीक्ष्य पुराणे परमेस्वरम् । तोषयित्वा सुतपसा शास्त्रमेतच्छि लब्धवान् ॥ जप्यं च निरोधं च भूतानामगानि गनिम् ॥ वेद विद्यामविद्यां च प्रसादाच्छ्रुत्पाणिनः ॥ भगवन्मननीयं च वर्तमानं जगत्सु यत् । तपसा विदितं विद्या मया नावक्षणादेव ॥ श्रौतस्य कर्मणः सिद्धये श्रौतसूत्रं मया कृतम् ॥ तदेतन्मृदु गभीरं गभीरारथं शिवप्रदम् ॥ सुदुर्लभं च विदुषा मनसा प्रीतिवर्धनम् । श्रौतस्यैव च यद्वाच्यं मयैव हि कृतं द्विजाः ॥ गृह्यभाष्यं करिष्यन्ति द्विजा इति न मे कृतम् । यथा वैने करि- 20

In regard to Kātyāyana Sūtra and Smṛiti, the same inference is deducible from a comparison of parallel passages on various identical subjects.

In some cases, however, it appears that the composition of the Smṛiti 40 has preceded that of the Sūtras. Thus the Viramitrodaya in its comments on v. 3 of the Āchārādhyāya of Yājñavalkya says :—गृह्याणि स्मृतिरूपान्येव. Translation :—The Grihyas are of the same nature as Smritis.

Similarly, Devala cited in Kokila's work (which though ordinarily known as Kokilasmṛiti, appears from its mode of citation and many other similar indications to be a treatise by a later writer) says :—

मन्वादयः प्रणेतास्तु धर्मशास्त्रस्य कर्तिताः॥ तत्प्रयुक्तप्रयुक्तकारो यथाकाराः स्वमन्ततः॥

Translation :—Manu and the like are known as the authors of dharmaśāstra : [while] the authors of Grihyas lay down the ritual proper to the precepts inculcated by Smritis, each according to his Veda.

- 10 Again, it is to be observed that the word Smṛiti itself is very indefinite in its signification, and has been so used by eminent writers. The Bhagavadgīta, which is undoubtedly older than Pāṇini and other Sūtra writers, has been treated throughout as a Smṛiti by Śaṅkarāchārya,¹ who quotes its authority along with that of the Upanishads and other portions of the Vedas. Nor is this practice confined to writers of a particular period. The Samskāra Mayūkha includes the Ayurveda (medical science) amongst Smritis.² Bhaṭṭa Yājñeśvara quotes in his Āryavidyā Sudhākara, a verse from the Vishṇu Sahasranāman in the Mahābhārata as a Smṛiti.³ These are not solitary instances. The 20 Purāṇas are daily cited to the people for the same purpose.

The origin of Smritis is thus lost in antiquity. The Rishis are their reputed authors or rememberers, and as such they are often styled as the introducers of Dharmaśāstra. The Vedas themselves contemplate a division of Rishis into ancient and modern.⁴ The mention of ancient rishis or sages in the Rigveda⁵ as pathikṛitah (indicators of the right path) would be an argument in favour of the antiquity of Smritis; because no works on dharmaśāstra are ascribed to rishis, except the Sūtras and the Smritis.

- In all these investigations, one thing must, however, be borne in 30 mind, namely, that these works are explanatory of dharma as received by tradition; and where the tradition has been lost or has become obsolete, the Smṛiti becomes useless. It is said that Smṛiti comes after Śruti, and in a conflict between them the latter prevails. But this is not always so.¹

The same is the case with more recent authors even on Vedic ceremonials. Thus Rāmānujāra in his comment on the Dhūrtasvāmī Bhāṣya on the Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra (विज्ञानं मन्त्रालिङ्गेन) quotes Bhagavadgīta iv., 24, ix., 23—27, &c. as Smṛiti. [MS.]

Smṛitis are often figurative.² History is often brought in to explain them.³ They are often called in to explain one another as will be seen from Appendix I. That certain Smṛitis should refer to certain Śākhās would appear natural in the case of those which are written by these Śākhās. But according to Kamalākara⁴ it would appear that each Smṛiti refers to a separate Śākhā. For when writing on Śrāddha, (a ceremony common to all Āryans to whatever Śākhā they may belong,) 10 he says that the giving of Aryhya is to be done according to the Śākhā, and he quotes Āśvalāyana, Jātukarṇya, Baijavāpa, Viṣṇu, and Manu from the Smṛiti writers, and Hemādri, Mādhava, Harihara, the Gṛihya Sūtras of Baijavāpa and the Brāhma Purāṇa, to fortify himself in regard to the practice on the subject.

Certain Smṛitis would appear to be written in certain countries; and others in other countries. I conclude this from their describing one and the same measure in different quantities. Thus Gacharmun is a land measure; and Bṛihaspati, Vasishṭha, Prajāpati cited in Mātsya Purāṇa,

¹ See, for example, Mādhava's Statement in his comment on ch. iii. of Parāśara, 20 that a samīnodaka, bearing a corpse to the burning ground, has to undergo an impurity of ten days on the strength of a text of Devala, which runs thus :—यः सप्तोदकप्रेतं वेहेद्यथ दहेत वा । तस्यासौ च दशाहं तु अन्येषां च त्र्यहं विदुः ॥

The same precept is repeated in the Nirṇayasindhu parichekheda iii. chapter on impurities l. 10 p. 1, and in the Dharmasindhu parichekheda iii. 2nd half l. 44 p. 1. But this is nowhere observed at present. Any bearer of a Hindu corpse has to observe a fast until the rise of the stars in the evening, but even this is getting obsolete in large cities; while in the case of the Samīnodakas, they have to observe no additional impurity on account of the bearing of the corpse, and observe mourning only for three days, if they learn of the death within ten days. The sapṛāṇas alone observe impurity for ten 30 days under similar circumstances. It is clear therefore that custom has so far abrogated the above Smṛiti law.

(2.) The following observations of Lakṣmanabhaṭṭa, junior brother of Kamalākara, in his work named Achārasāra in regard to discordant injunctions of Smṛitis on the same subject are useful. He says :—केचित् तु तृत्यायेत्येव स्मृतिरपीति न प्रशस्यते इति इन्द्रमुहस्पतिस्मृतेरन्यस्मृतीनां प्रामाण्यं न तु विकल्प इत्याहुस्तत्र प्रत्यक्षस्मृतिविरोधेपि स्मृतीनामप्रामाण्यं नास्तीत्युक्तमाचार्यैर्विरोधाधिकरणे कित्वननुष्ठानलक्षणं तत् । स्मृतिविरोधे स्वप्रामाण्यं दूरापास्तम् । (MS.)

The substance of this passage is that a Smṛiti is not unauthentic merely because it contradicts a passage of the Veda. It is unauthentic merely so far as it is not 40 followed : much more will the same remark apply if one Smṛiti contradicts another Smṛiti.

Vṛiddha Vasishṭha give different quantities for the same measure.¹ One might account for the difference by supposing these works to be written at different times in the same country; but the other is the more probable inference; for the different Gotras represented by the different Rishis above named have evidently been originally inhabitants of different places.²

It is said that where there is a conflict between the Śruti and the Smṛiti, the former is to be obeyed. But this is not always so in practice. In like manner, in a conflict between the Smṛitis and the Purāṇas it is said that the latter should give way.³ This was the theory, but in practice, as we shall see further on, the Smṛitis have hardly much scope left. The present Āchāra (practice) is more influenced by the Purāṇas than by the Smṛitis. Kamalākara in the Nirṇayasindhu and in the Dāna Kamalākara, Pūrta Kamalākara and Śūdra Kamalākara introduces a large Purāṇik element; and the first three also draw considerably on astrological and astronomical authorities. The same is done by Nilakanṭha in his 12 Mayūkhas. Even older writers like Hemādri do the same. I shall therefore make a few observations on the Purāṇa portion of the Dharmaśāstra literature. Purāṇas are of two classes—
20 the mukhya or the great, and the upā or secondary. As regards numbers, all the authorities agree in fixing the number of both at eighteen.⁴ Their extent and the time of composition are however uncertain.

The number of Upa-Purāṇas, also fixed by ordinary writers at 18, is, like that of the Upa-Smṛitis, practically indefinite. The principal eighteen Upa-Purāṇas are the following:—1, Sanatkumāra; 2, Nārasimha; 3, Brihannārādiya; 4, Śivarahasya; 5, Durvāsas; 6, Kāpila; 7, Vāmana (there is one principal Purāṇa thus named); 8, Bhārgava; 9, Vārāha; 10, Kālikā; 11, Śāmba; 12, Nandi; 13, Saura; 14, Parāśara; 15, Vāsishṭha; 16, Devī-Bhāgavata; 17, Gaṇeśa; 18, Hamsa. [See Bhāgavata with Chūrnika commentary xii. 13, 8 (comments), leaf 27 p. 1.]

There are other Purāṇas^a besides:—1, Mudgala; 2, Renukā; 3, Vishṇudharmottara; 4, Śivadharmottara; 5, Kumāra; 6, Vāyu; 7, Ambikā; 8, Marīchi; 9, Ausanasa; 10, Māheśvara; 11, Laghunārada; 12, Pāsūpata; 13, Bhaviṣya. Many of these are not now available. A good portion of these works has been probably lost; but a considerable quantity can yet be recovered. At all events more of the Purāṇas are now available than the Smritis; and they are now followed to a greater extent by the people generally than either the Śrūtis or the Smritis.

The Mahābhārata is considered superior to all, next only to the Vedas. Most of the Smritis appear to have largely drawn upon it. Although, it is now said that the Śmritis are older, they do not appear to be quite so according to the authorities.

The Purāṇas are distinctly alluded to in the Vedas.¹ Their recitation is ordered to be observed as part of the daily ritual.² From the order in which they are directed to be recited, they appear to rank after 10 histories like the Mahābhārata, and before the Kalpa Sūtras. A universal practice of an order thus distinctly laid down is so far decisive of their precedence over the Kalpa Sūtras themselves; much more so must it be over the Dharma Sūtras, as well as over the Smritis. A complete and critical edition of the Purāṇas may enable us better to discuss their comparative antiquity both in reference to Smritis and in reference to each other, and this would be also necessary to a proper understanding of the present state of the Dharmaśāstra. Because current popular usages and most of the popular ceremonies, to the discussion and investigation of which the Dharmaśāstra is largely devoted, 20 derive their origin from the Purāṇas. The different modes of popular worship are traceable to the same source.

To arrive at a complete understanding of the Dharmaśāstra, an examination of the current popular ceremonies is necessary. With that view, I shall divide them under the following heads, under which they are generally treated by the Prayoga writers:—

I. Samskāras.	IV. Dāna.
II. Śāntis.	V. Śrāddhas.
III. Vratas.	VI. Prāyaschittas.

But in their stead, women are invited on certain occasions, especially on the fifth, sixth and twelfth days after birth, and at various times during pregnancy without any warranty either from the Sútras or Smṛitis; and at these times the deities that are worshipped are either derived from the Purāṇas or Tantras, or from local legends; and more often from family tradition. Gaṇeśa, Sakti under various forms, Skanda and other ganas are worshipped at these times. These have no place in the Smṛiti literature, and rest on tradition and usage. Manu ch. ii. v. 140¹ was performed by the preceptor. According to Yājñavalkya ch. i. v. 15 it is still the preceptor who has to perform the ceremony. After the upanayana and up to marriage, the student is ordered to reside with his preceptor and study the Vedas. But all this part of the ceremonial has been changed. The father now performs what can hardly be called an upanayana, but may fitly be described as the thread ceremony as it is now known; and all this has been brought about by custom, which is being changed from time to time, and has changed the whole course of the life of the twice-born classes in India. A few students do still study the Vedas, but not as in the times of old; and the upanayana ceremony, properly so called, ends within a few days, and is an occasion of family rejoicing, and not of study and meditation, as it is intended to be.

The next ceremony is marriage, and here too custom has made great havoc on the Smṛiti law. A mere semblance of the ceremonial is kept up among the higher classes. Amongst the lower ones, the ceremony consists in giving and receiving feasts, and one or more processions according to the means of the parties. All the Gṛhya ceremonies have been based on the institution of marriage; but the rules have been broken to such an extent, that instead of the sacrificial fire lighted at the celebration of marriage being carried along with the married pair to their future home, and religiously kept up till the husband and the wife's bodies are sacrificed therein on the funeral pile, it is now considered positively inauspicious to carry such a fire at the head of the procession, as it ought to be, and in the majority of instances, after the marriage is over, it is never lighted at all. And when the married people die, a certain nominal penance in money is performed at the burning ground for the extinction of such a fire.

The above completes the list of Samskāra ceremonies. As for the fourteen sacrificial samsthās, they are, as a rule, not performed by one out of a thousand individuals; and even their names are hardly known except to a select few. Some of the chief prayoga works, according to which the Samskāras are performed, have been mentioned before. There are besides numerous works styled Paddhatis and Kalpas, both ancient and modern, on this part of the Dharmaśāstra.

Division II.—ŚĀNTIS.

The next head of ceremonies are the Śāntis, or propitiatory ceremonies against evil. So far as Yājñavalkya is concerned, we have only two in the whole of the first chapter, viz., Vināyaka Śānti (vv. 270 to 293), 40 ¹ उपनीय ब्रु यः शिष्यं वेदयध्यापयेद्भिजः । सकल्पं सरहस्यं च तयाचार्यं प्रचक्षते ॥ Translation :—That dvijā (twice-born) who having carried the student [to himself] teaches [him] the Veda along with the Kalpa [Śūtra] and the secret [science of the Upanishadas] is called an Āchārya.

and Graha Śānti (vv. 294 to 307). As regards the first, it has almost gone out of use, and as regards the second, the ceremonial now adopted is conducted in the manner laid down in the Saunaka kārikā, and is essentially different from what Yājñavalkya contemplated it. The Śānti division of ceremonial has been growing every day, and if Manu came to life, he would probably be astonished both at the number and character of the Śāntis or propitiatory ceremonies now actually observed. The accidental blowing out and fall of a lamp, the fall of a lizard, the occurrence of a frightful dream, the entrance of a crow into a house, &c. &c., are all subjects of a Śānti ceremony. 10

Looking at several works now current on the subject, the following results appear:—

Out of 57 Śāntis described in the Śānti-Mayūkha, two appear to derive some foundation from the Sūtras, one from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, one (which has already been mentioned as having nearly gone out of use) from Yājñavalkya, and all the rest are based either on Purāṇas and astrological works, or other similar authorities of a very late origin. 31 out of the above are on account of inauspicious views of the planets, the 27 lunar mansion stars, the days of the week, and certain conjunctions of the sun and the moon. 20

The Śāntisāra of Dinakarabhaṭṭa, son of Rāmakṛishṇa, and grandson of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa of Benares, when analyzed, gives the following result:—

Although the sources are different, the matter is nearly the same, namely, bad omens chiefly connected with astrology. A very modern work like Adbhuta-sāra supplies four, and a treatise on horses furnishes materials for one.

Division III.—VRATAS.

Going now to the third section of ceremonies, viz., Vratas, we find the same neglect of the Smṛitis and Śr̥tis, and a more extensive adoption of the Purāṇic authorities.

The Vratārka of Śankarabhaṭṭa, son of the Nilakanṭhabhaṭṭa of 40 Benares (which is now followed almost throughout India), gives the following Vratas, together with the sources to which they owe their origin :—

Division IV.—DāNA.

I now come to the ceremonies consisting of Dāna (gift). In the present age, Dāna has an importance of a peculiar character. Bṛhaspati, Śatapatha, Brāhmaṇa, Kūrma-Purāṇa, Agni-Purāṇa and the Mahābhārata are cited by Hemādri in support of making Dāna (gifts)¹ :—

On pages 7 to 12 of the same volume, Hemādri cites passages from Vyāsa, Manu, Vishṇudharma, Yājñavalkya, Devala, Agastya, Śāṭātapa, and Yama, and also from the Mātaya, Markāṇḍeya, Brahma, Skānda Purāṇas, and other texts from the authorities above quoted.

Dāna (gift) has been mentioned as meritorious even in the Vedic works (see Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, Prapāthaka X), the last but one Anuvāka pp. 887, 888, Cal.; Chhandogya Upanishad¹ and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa; and also in the Smṛitis.² Manu, Parāśara³ and Brihaspati among the Smṛiti-writers speak of it as particularly efficacious in the present age. But it remained for the Purāṇas to invest it with its present supreme importance in supersession of bodily penance. Kamalākara in his Dāna Kamalākara, and Nilakaṇṭha in his Dāna Mayūkha while trying to support Dāna by Vedic citations, give the details of 10 the various dāna ceremonials as derived from the Purāṇas alone. The Dāna-chandrikā of Divākarabhaṭṭa is the work most consulted in this part of the country, though the authority of Nilakaṇṭha, Kamalākara and Hemādri is not disregarded. That work too is mainly based on Purāṇas.

Division V.—ŚRĀDDHAS.

The fifth section of ceremonial observances are the Śrāddhas. These are divided into two classes—I., Pārvaṇa, and II., Ekoddishṭa.

The first are performed on certain stated occasions, and the number of such Śrāddhas is 96.⁴

The practice of performing Śrāddhas appears to derive its authority 20 from the Vedas (see Taittirīya Āraṇyaka Prapāthaka II. Anuvāka X. p. 238, Calcutta edition; Rīgveda Maṇḍala X. Sūkta 15). Whatever is offered in honor of the pītrīs (manes) is considered a Śrāddha offering provided it is done with Śrāddha (faith). On this, some of the Śūtras have built up portions of the present ceremonial, and the Purāṇas, as the few verses at foot will indicate,⁵ have still more enhanced its importance.

The verses which are invariably now recited at each Śrāddha, whether monthly, annual or special, are from the Harivamśa,¹ and no Śrāddha is considered complete without them. Paṇḍit Tārānātha Tarkavāchaspati of Calcutta has collected in his Gayā-Śrāddha Paddhati (Calcutta, 1872) a good deal of the procedure usually observed at that shrine. But, it may be observed, that the ceremonial which evidently began in Vedic times is now overfull of Purāṇic passages which are considered necessary for its performance.

Besides the above Śrāddhas, there are other Śrāddhas performed on special occasions, such as Vratas, Śāntis, marriages, and all other 10 auspicious occasions. These are known as Nāndī Śrāddhas, for which there seems to be no place in the ancient ceremonials, but they are evidently a modern institution for the propitiation of the manes. These are performed not only by persons who have lost their parents, but by all who have to perform certain auspicious ceremonies, and have lost some one of the three elders, viz., the father, mother, and the mother's father. All the above are Pūrvaṇa Śrāddhas.

The second kind of Śrāddha is Ekoddishṭa, so called because it is performed for the propitiation of the manes of one person instead of three. All the Śrāddhas up to the twelfth day after death are 20 Ekoddishṭa, and after the sapīṇḍana is performed on the twelfth day there are some Śrāddhas which are Ekoddishṭa, and others which are not so. The principal Śrāddhas of this class are 25 in number.

The Śrāddhas that have been ordained to be performed at all the Tirthas (or sacred places), whenever they happen to be visited, are mixed and belong to both kinds.²

The order in which persons are authorized to perform Śrāddhas in honor of the deceased is given in the Nirṇayasīndhu parichchheda iii. Śrāddha Prakaraṇa, l. 5, pp. 1 and 2, from which a few important extracts are given below :—

आत्रिकायां सुमन्त्रः ॥ मातुः पितुः प्रकुर्वीत संस्क्रितस्यौरसः सुतः । पैतृमैत्रिकसंस्कारं मन्त्रपूर्वकमाहृतः ॥ तत्रैव हेमाद्री शङ्खः । पितुः पुत्रेण कर्तव्या पिण्डदानोदकक्रिया । पुत्राभावे तु पत्नी स्यात्तदभावे तु सोदरः ॥ स्मृतिसंग्रहे ॥ पुत्रः पौत्रश्च तत्पुत्रः पुत्रिकापुत्र स्व च । पत्नी भ्राता च तज्जन्त्र पिता माता स्तुषा तथा ॥ भगिनी भगिन्यश्च सपिण्डः सोदकस्तथा । असन्निधाने पूर्वेषामुत्तरे पिण्डदाः स्मृताः ॥ विष्णुपुराणे ॥ पुत्रः पौत्रः प्रपौत्रो वा भ्राता वा भ्रातृसन्ततिः ॥ सपिण्डसन्ततिर्वापि क्रियार्हा नृप जायते ॥ तेषामभावे सर्वेषां समानोदकसंततिः । मातृपक्षसपिण्डेन संबन्धो यो जलन वा ॥ कुलद्वयेपि चोच्छिन्ने क्षत्रिः कार्यो क्रिया नृप । तत्संघातगतैर्वापि तत्रिक्पालकारयेज्य इति ॥

सप्त व्याधा दशाण्येष्टु मृगाः कालक्षरे गिरौ । चक्रवाकाः शरद्विपि हंसाः सरसि मानवे ॥ १ ॥

तेपि जाताः क्रुद्धसेवे ब्राह्मणा वेदपारगाः । प्रस्थिता दीर्घमथानं युर्वर्गमिषसीदथ ॥ २ ॥

Harivamśa : leaf 28, p. 2.

These verses only allude to the story of the seven Vyādha (hunters), which is narrated before in chapters xxi. to xxiv. at full length.

In the above remarks, the number of the Śrāddhas that ought to be performed, and the authorities on which they are based, have been given. Those who examine the daily life of the Hindus will find that, except the anniversary Śrāddha, the annual Mahālaya Śrāddha performed in the dark half of the lunar month of Bhādrapada and the three Śrāddhas performed at Prayāga (Allahabad), Benares and Gayā, by those who perform the great threefold pilgrimage, all the other Śrāddhas are gradually getting out of use. Even the Nāndi Śrāddhas, which are performed on auspicious occasions, have been very much abbreviated, 10 and are now reduced to ten mere pecuniary donations, two of which have been lately added in honor of certain deities by local usage. I must here take occasion to correct a wrong notion which has lately been adopted by some authorities that a pilgrimage to Benares is an unnecessary expenditure according to Hindu law. Looking to the cases that are now available on this subject, it appears to me that there are no authorities cited therein which any educated Hindu, versed in the subject, would hold to be worth considering. A visit to Benares by itself is an essential duty of every orthodox Hindu.¹

A person who is unable to perform Śrāddha in the ordinary mode, 20 may adopt one of the following alternatives. Thus, he may perform one of the following :—

- (1.) A representation of Kuśa grass may be taken instead of a Brāhmaṇa;
- (2.) A Homa (sacrifice) may be made in the name of the Pitris;
- (3.) Pinḍa of cooked food only may be offered;
- (4.) Āma-Śrāddha may be performed by gift of uncooked food;
- (5.) Hiranya-Śrāddha may be performed by a small money present;
- (6.) Pinḍa of wild roots, &c. may be offered;
- (7.) The whole Sankalpa (determination) may be made and the 30 Prayoga (ceremonial) recited;
- (8.) Tarpaṇa (offerings of water) may be made with Tīla and Kuśa grass;
- (9.) Grass may be given to cows;
- (10.) A small quantity of grass may be burnt, and a small quantity of Tīla with a small sum of money may be given ;²

40 ² On this subject, see Nirṇayasindhu, Śrāddha Parichchheda, leaf 47, p. 2; Dharma-sindhu, 3rd Parichchheda, 2nd half, l. 30; see also Śrāddha Mayāḱha MS.; all these derive their authority from the Śrāddha Hēmādri, which exhausts all the authorities on the subject (see MS.)

(11.) In the absence of the above means he should repair to an unfrequented spot in a forest, raise his arms, and cry to the manes, saying—"I have neither money, nor wealth, nor anything fit for a Śrāddha. I am submissive to my Pitris. May the Pitris (manes of ancestors) be satisfied with my faith. I have raised these hands in the road of the winds."

Division VI.—PRĀYASCHITTAS.

As regards the Prāyascittas I would observe that most of the penances as they obtain at the present day have no place in the ancient authorities. The earliest Vedic penances appear to be recitations of 10 Vedic mantras, sacrifices to the sacred fires, and certain japa (silent repeating of prayers).¹

It is on the principle of these penances that the sacrifice performed before the admission of a twice-born into the order of samnyāsins is based; and the mantras repeated on this occasion are drawn from the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (p. 872 Calcutta edition). This idea seems to have been departed from in the Smṛiti period, and all manner of penances have been laid down by Manu or rather Manu as now received. Coming to the times of Yājñavalkya, the penances as laid down by him may be thus summarized :— 20

- I. Sacrificial offerings—
 - (a) The Āsvamedha sacrifice, III, 244.
 - (b) The Vaiśvānarī Ishti, III, 250.
- II. Recitation of the Veda thrice over, III, 249.
- III. Corporal.
 - (a) Emaciation—
 - (1) Feeding on a limited quantity of alms for twelve years, III, 248.
 - (2) Feeding on oilcake or bits of grain at night during three years, III, 254. 30
 - (3) Prājāpatya Kṛichchhra, III, 260.
 - (4) Chāndrāyana, III, 260.
 - (5) Parāka, III, 265.
 - (6) Kṛichchhra, Atikṛichchhra, III, 264.
 - (7) Pādika Kṛichchhra, III, 270.

¹ (a) See the pariśiṣṭa to the Pavamāna mantras of the Rīg-veda ending with Maṇḍala IX, śūkta 67. It ought to appear at the top of p 167 of vol. V. of Prof. Max Muller's edition, but that work does not give the pariśiṣṭas which are received and recited as part of the Rīg-veda by every student of that Veda.

(b) Annihilation—

(1) Death by mutilation, III, 238.

(2) Death on a battle-field, III, 248.

(3) Death by drinking hot liquids, III, 253.

IV. Protection at one's risk—

(a) Of a Bráhmaṇa, III, 244.

(b) Of twelve cows, III, 244.

V. Gifts—

10 (a) Of a cow, eleven cows and a bull, III, 263, 264.

(b) Of wealth (III, 250) and of one's weight in gold, III, 258.

A glance at the above list will suffice to show that all of them have been superseded by custom. Moreover, if one looks to the offences described by Yājñavalkya and other Smritis, and some of which were once considered so impure as to degrade their authors to the servile class, he will see a vast change in practice. Thus, what was once held to be a cause of degradation is often now performed as a matter of course. Thus the selling of milk and ghae, whey and curds, is distinctly one of the noted degrading causes,¹ and yet hundreds of shops throughout the city of Bombay itself are now owned exclusively by Bráhmaṇas, who are still full members of the brotherhood. Indeed it has become a sort of special calling for the poorer Bráhmaṇa class, and people will rather resort to the shop of a Bráhmaṇa milkseller than to one of another class, if the former be available. I regret to add that in some places, even in the Mofussil, contracts for selling spirits have been entered into by Bráhmaṇas, and I have known of instances of such persons sitting in shops to keep accounts; whilst their Súdra servants were vending the firewater. Surely according to Hindu notions, one can conceive nothing more degrading than such an occupation. But such is the force of tyrant custom, that these people have remained members of their community; and with the advance of the railways and the spread of Western civilization among the higher classes, I can hardly conceive the limits to which this practice is likely to be carried on. A cursory perusal of the third chapter of Yājñavalkya will convince the reader who has the slightest knowledge of Hindu society as it exists, that Yājñavalkya's penances are now merely nominal caricatures of an ideal society which probably had no existence at any period beyond the mind of the writer of that digest; but which is certainly entirely inapplicable to the Áryan society as it exists at the present day. The sale of salt is now carried on by the highest class of Bráhmaṇas, whereas according to Yājñavalkya and other Smritis, such a vendor ought to lose his caste and be turned out of the community (Yāj. chap. iii, 40).

Even courts of law have had to divide the profits of such immoral trades conducted by Brāhmaṇas. The earliest instance I can lay my hands on is the case of Jye Narain Mookerjee v. Bal Ram Rai.¹ The Judges before deciding it put the following question to the Pandits :— “ If two Brāhmīns engage in a partnership in trading in wine, is this species of trade correct or not according to the Shasters current in Bengal and Hindustan ? And if it be improper, can one partner sue the other for a share of the profits ? ” The Pandits gave the following 10 answer : “ According to the Shasters, it is not proper for Brāhmīns to trade in wine. If, however, two Brāhmīns have acquired wealth by matters prohibited by the Shaster, the share of each in the said wealth is equal.” A decree was accordingly passed by the court ordering the sharing of gains made by trafficking, which had been prohibited by the Vedas, Smritis, and Purāṇas.

Almost all, if not all, the above offences are now expiated by giving Dāna. On this point, Parāśara's views are most prevalent. That sage, as we know, was one of the last rishis or seers amongst a long line of Hindu law-givers ; and looking to the present aspect of affairs, one is 20 almost inclined to take his exposition of the law as prophetic. For expiation of almost all offences is, according to him, confined to the different kinds of dāna (gift) not only to Brāhmaṇas, but even to cows.

Two more sources of the written Dharmaśāstra have still to be mentioned, as they largely affect the present āchāra (practice) of the people. The first of these are the Tantras. Smritis themselves are sometimes called Tantras.² The Tantras as they are denominated by - modern writers, are a distinct class of ancient works, which play a very important part in the popular worship and ceremonial of the Āryans. Into their antiquity and history I do not now propose to enter. Their 30 authority is recognised by the people, and some of them have been already noted in the previous portions of this Introduction. Kamalāśakra tries to make out that the Tantras are only to be recognised so far as they are not opposed ; but he does not say to what. And he is obliged to incorporate them into his digest because they are observed by the people.³ The number of Tantras is very great. Mr. Colebrooke enumerates⁴ only twenty-six. Many of these are not very widely known. Many are devoted to the worship of Devi ; but there are also opposition to the old usages. All the changes that have been thus worked out, are founded on custom.

This pre-eminence of custom and usage is founded on the highest authorities. Some of these are noted in the Appendices. I shall now add a few more to show that custom, as such, is held to be law. The Mahābhārata has been already cited. Other passages from the same great work support the above proposition :—

Vanaparva, Adhyāya 150 v. 28 (leaf 150, p. 1) :—

- आचारसंभवो धर्मो धर्मे वैदः प्रतिष्ठिताः ॥ वैदेयज्ञाः समुत्पन्ना यज्ञेदेवाः प्रतिष्ठिताः ॥ २८ ॥
10 Translation : Dharma is derived from āchāra (practice or usage), &c.

Again, further on in the same parva, we have the following reply of king Dharmarāja to the god of justice :—

महामारुत वनपर्व अ० ३१३ श्लो० ११७, प० ३०९, पृ० २

तर्को ऽप्रतिष्ठः युनयो विभिन्ना नैको ऋषिर्यस्य मतं प्रमाणम् ॥

धर्मस्य तत्त्वं निहितं गुहायां महाजनी येन गतः स पथाः ॥ १७ ॥

Translation :—Reasoning is uncertain. The Śrutis are conflicting. There is not a single sage whose doctrine is an [unimpeachable] authority. The essence of Dharma is placed in a cave [i. e. is inaccessible]. That path is the [proper] one by which great men have gone.

- 20 Comment by Nīlakaṇṭha :— तर्क इति अप्रतिष्ठः निर्णयकृत्यः युतयोपि विभिन्नाः परस्परविरुद्धा- र्थवादिन्यः युनयोपि तद्व्याख्यातारस्तादृशा एव अतीतज्ञसु धर्मज्ञाणादिविधासु अममकृत्वा बहुजन-
संमतवेव मार्गमनुसरेदित्यर्थः ॥ १७ ॥

Translation :—Tarka, &c. [is] not conclusive. The Śrutis also are Vibhinnaḥ, i. e. promulgate doctrines opposed to each other's. The sages also, who are their commentators, are of the same type. Therefore without making any effort (to be versed) in the innumerable branches of learning, such as the Dharmaśāstra, and others, one should follow that path only which is approved of by the majority of the people.

Manu's code lays down usage as one of the sources of law.¹ The customs of districts, tribes and families are directed to be observed.

- 30 "The way of the good by which a man's parents and grandparents have gone, should be trodden by him ; so that he will not be harmed." The king is to decide according to the customs of countries, castes, and families.²

Yājñavalkya himself advises to the same effect.³

Vijñāneśvara, in discussing the question whether vv. 118 and 119 ch. ii. Yāj. contain a new commandment or the recital of an existing custom, holds that it is a new one, and he assigns the following reason for his decision :— लोकसिद्धस्यानुवादकान्येव प्रायेणास्मिन्प्रकरणे वचनानि ॥

³ See above ch. i. v. 7 (p. 159) ; ch. i. vv. 341, 342 (p. 198) ; ch. i. vv. 360, 361 (p. 200) ; ch. ii. v. 5 (p. 201) ; ch. ii. v. 186 (p. 230).

The Vīramitrodaya in his disquisition on the temporal nature of proprietary right says that even vv. 135, 136, ch. ii. Yāj. do nothing more than embody the existing custom in respect to succession. In support of the above, Mitra Miśra says :— ग्रयेण व्यवहारस्मृतीनां लोकसिद्धार्थानुवादकत्वमिति सकलनिबन्धभिरभिधानात् ॥ Translation.—For all treatise-writers consider Smṛitis on Vyavahāra (civil law) as [simply] reciting customs recognised by the people. [See Vīr. l. 164 p. 1. l. 11.]¹

Nīlakaṇṭha in the Vyavahāra Mayūkha proposes the same view ; and he compares “civil law” to grammar as being based on usage.²

Adherence to the customs observed by one’s forefathers is enjoined 10 in the Rig-veda.³

Bṛihaspati mentions popular customs as one of the sources of substantive law in the following text :—देशस्थित्यानुमानेन नैयमानुमतेन च । क्रियते निर्णयस्तत्र व्यवहारस्तु कथ्यते ॥ Translation :—“Where the decision is given in accordance with the customs of the country, reasoning, and the counsel of the Naigamas (the lay public), it is called Vyavahāra (civil law).

This mode of decision is called charitrā (usage) which the same sage thus defines :—यद्यदाचर्यते येन धर्म्यं नाधर्म्यमेव वा । देशस्याचरणं नित्यं चरित्रं तद्धि कीर्तितम्. Translation :—“Whatever is practised by one, whether proper or improper, is termed charitrā [if it is consonant to] the usual custom 20 of the country.”⁴ It will appear from this text that our indigenous law does not support the English law in respect to custom, that it must be of a certain kind before it can be upheld. I must take occasion here to remark that it is wrong in my opinion to apply English rules of custom to the determination of our native usages.

An achārā (usage) accepted by a community becomes dharma (law). Yājñavalkya says (chap. i. 156) that even dharma itself, if opposed to the usages and wishes of the people, is not to be practised. The ordinary digests teem with examples where even religious ceremonial in many branches has been thus modified. One example will suffice to show how 30 far usage can go in this direction. It is the festival of the Holi, with which all are quite familiar. The passage is from the Vratarāja : leaf 246, p. 1 :—

“पूजामस्तु भवक्यामयसंवत्सैः कृता त्वं होलि बालिषैः । अतस्त्वां पूजयिष्यामि भूते भुतिप्रदाय च ॥ इति होलिकाविर्णयः । Translation :—The worship-hymn is—Thou art made by fools distressed by the fear of Ariti (a demon). Therefore I shall worship thee. Oh spirit, give us prosperity.”

This applies to the whole of India, without any exception. The Holi may not be moral and legal from the Christian point of view ; but it is moral and legal from the Hindu stand-point.

The Smṛiti-Ratnākara of Venkanātha quotes the following passage (from the Mahābhārata ?) in support of family usage superseding express texts :—

यद्य शास्त्रगतिभिर्वा सर्वकर्मसु भारत । उदितेऽनुदिते चैव होमे भेदो यथा भवेत् ॥ तस्मात्कुलक्रमा-
यातमाचारं त्वाचरेद्बुधः । स गरीयान्महाबाहो सर्वशास्त्रोदितादायि ॥

Translation :—Oh Bhārata, since the precepts of Śāstras are conflicting in respect of all rites, as for instance a sacrifice is ordained [by some] after sunrise, and [by 10 others] before sunrise, a wise man should follow the hereditary observances of his family. Oh ! Mahābāho (one with a powerful arm !) such usage is superior to the commandments of all the Śāstras together.

Again, in support of the usage of the country, Devala is thus cited by the same authority :—आदौ तावदेवाधर्मो विचिन्त्यो देशे देशे वा स्थितिः सैव कार्या । लोकहितं पण्डिता वर्जयन्ति दैवतो ऽतो लोकमार्गेण यायात् ॥ येषु देशेषु ये देवा येषु देशेषु ये द्विजाः । येषु देशेषु यच्छौचं याश्च यन्त्ययुक्तिकाः ॥ येषु देशेषु यत्तौयं धर्माचारश्च यादृशः । तत्र तात्त्रावमन्येत धर्मस्तत्रैव तादृशः ॥

Translation :—The usage of the country should first be attended to ; that which is observed in the country should alone be observed. Wise men abstain from what is hated 20 by the people ; a wise man should go by the path of the people [i. e. follow popular usage]. The deities, the Brāhmaṇas, the [notions of] purity, the [kinds of] earth, the water, and the religious observances of a country should not be ridiculed in that country ; for that is the law of that country.

What constitutes sadāchāra (usage) is mentioned both by Manu and Yājñavalkya among the sources of law, and the definition given thereof by the Chaturvimsatimata runs as follows :—

यस्मिन्देशे य आचारः पारम्पर्यक्रमागतः । वर्णानां किल सर्वेषां स सदाचार उच्यते ॥

Translation :—That usage which has prevailed in a country through several generations in all classes is termed Sadāchāra (usage of the learned).

In Appendix II., all the Smṛitis mentioned in Yājñavalkya (I. 4—5), with the exception of Manu and Yājñavalkya, have been noticed. On these last two, I have now to offer a few brief remarks. Manu is the oldest lawgiver of the Indian Āryas.¹ His mention by the Śruti is evidence of his antiquity. From the Vedas down to the Purāṇas, Manu and his Dharmaśāstra are always appealed to as the chief guides. Parāśara (Laghu, Adhyāya I., vv. 23, 24, Cal. ed., p. 8, vol. II.) says distinctly :—

कृते तु मानवा धर्मोक्तेतायां गौतमाः स्मृताः ॥ द्वारे शास्त्रलिखिताः कलौ पाराशराः स्मृताः ॥

Translation : In the Kṛita [age] the Mānava-dharma; in the Treta, those remembered by Gautama; in the Drūpara, those by Śankha and Likhita; and in the Kalī [age], those remembered by Parāśara.

There have been various Manus. Some have been rishis, and others kings. The kings are 14 in number, each presiding over a cycle called Manavantara. The great Rishi Manu appears to be one of the family of Viśvāmitra (Samskārakaustubha, l. 189, p. 2 and l. 195, p. 102). One 10 of the Gotras of the Kshatriyas is that of Mānava. (Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, second half, 6, 15, 5, p. 885,¹ Cal. ed.) Mānava appears as a sub-branch of the Maitrāyaṇī Sākhā of the Black Yajur Veda. But there is little to connect the present Manu Smṛiti by Bṛigu with the old Mānava Dharmaśāstra. The copy of Manu now published with Kullūka's comments is itself imperfect. More manuscripts belonging to different families must be collected; and the work examined with the help of other Nibandhas. Having read over a large portion of the Mahābhārata, particularly the Vana, Śānti, and Ānuśāsana parvas, I am inclined to hold that all the Smṛitis have drawn more or less 26 upon this great storehouse of Aryan learning and history, and Bṛigu amongst the rest in compiling the present Manu Samhitā.

From the following verse from the Skanda Purāṇa, it will appear that four of the standard Smṛiti writers have drawn on the traditions of Svāyambhuva Manu in compiling their codes :—

“भार्गवी नारदीया च शहस्पत्याङ्गिरस्यपि । स्वायम्भुवस्य शास्त्रस्य चतस्रः संहिता मताः ॥

Translation :—There are four acknowledged versions of the law or Svāyambhuva Manu, viz., those of Bṛigu, Nārada, Bṛhaspati, and Angiras.

How far Yājñavalkya has drawn upon Manu may be seen to a certain extent from the footnotes to the translation in Part II. There are 30 various commentaries on Manu, namely, by—(1) Bhāruchi, (2) Viśvārūpa, (3) Dharanīdhara, (4) Govindrāja, (5) Sarvajñanārāyaṇa, (6) Medhātithi, (7) Mādhava, and (8) Kullūka; and it would be a valuable contribution to Indian History to examine all these, and to edit the Manu Smṛiti, and explain its bearings as far as possible historically on the progress of Indian society. There are two other works known by the name of Manu, namely, Bṛihat-Manu, and Vṛiddha-Manu.

YĀJNAVALKYA.

I now pass on to Yājñavalkya. There appear to be four versions under the names of Yājñavalkya, Yoga-Yājñavalkya, Vṛiddha-Yājñavalkya and Bṛihat-Yājñavalkya. Out of these, I propose to make a few notes on the first. This is edited by me in Part I., and translated in Part II. For the purposes of settling the text the following editions have been used¹ :—

1. A lithographed edition by Shrivṛdhār Lālji in the Jñāna Saṅgraha Press, Bombay, Śaka year 1785.
- 10 2. Do. do. by Bāpu Śeṭa Hegiṣṭṣe in his own press, do. do.
3. A quarto edition printed at Calcutta in 1818 A. C.
4. A manuscript belonging to Rājārām Shāstrī Bodas, of the Elphinstone College, written in the hand of his grandfather.
5. Dr. Stenzler's edition printed at Breslau in 1849 A. C.

The following verses have been attributed by Nīlakaṇṭha in his several Mayūkas to Yājñavalkya. But they are not found in any of the above copies.

[In the Sanskāra Mayūka—]

¹ I have carefully compared my edition with the Calcutta one, and the following is the result :—

- 30 Ch. I.—The number of verses here is 368, while in my edition it is 367½. This difference is due to there being one additional verse in the Calcutta edition, viz., the 246th, and verse 282 being made up of three hemistichs. In regard to the additional verse (246th) it may be noted that it was not found in any of the four copies that I consulted; and a reference to Vijñāneśvara's gloss, where this is not commented on, leads me to think that Vij. did not accept this as a verse of Yāj. The last words of Vij. in his comment on v. 245 according to the Calcutta edition, says : जपेदित्यन्वयः If v. 246 had been commented on by Vij., this gloss should have occurred at the end of that verse.
- Ch. II.—The Calcutta edition has three additional verses as compared with my edition, viz., the 30th, 71st and 122nd. The first is attributed to Nārada by Nīlakaṇṭha (see Part I. p. 2 line 29 with note), and the second also to Nārada by the Vīr. (see l. 47 p. 2). So is the third by Aparārka (see ch. ii. l. 41 p. 1 line 1 in my MS. copy).
- 40 Ch. III.—The Calcutta edition has one verse less than my edition, because after verse 284 it omits one beginning with विष्णोर्वा which is commented on by Vij.

[In the Dána-Mayúkha—]

Either Nīlakaṇṭha found more copious and correct MSS. of Yājñā- 10 valkya than have been available to his successors; or the verses may exist in one of the other three versions above alluded to. This is a point to be cleared up by further investigation.

The reasons which induced me to select Yājñavalkya from amongst the other Smṛitis for translation were two:—First, that it contained the origin of the celebrated commentary of Vijñāneśvara, a very small portion of which was first translated by Mr. H. T. Colebrooke, and published under the auspices of the Government of Bengal in 1810.
And second, that it presents in a small compass the summary of Smṛiti learning of the middle or second epoch. By publishing the 20 whole of Yājñavalkya, I wish to point out how small a portion of text-law is accessible to our administrators and on what a narrow basis a large superstructure is being suddenly raised. What is now accepted by the Courts as the Mitāksharā, is a translation of Vijñāneśvara's comments on 36 verses of Yājñavalkya chapter II., (Dāyabhāga section.)
the total number of verses in that chapter being 307, and in the entire work, 1009. Yājñavalkya himself is only one of the numerous Smṛitikāras, and his authority outside his own Śākhā is of no peculiar importance.

The publication of the Sanskrit work in 1813, and a translation of 30 the Dāyabhāga section under the auspices of Government, stamped it at once with importance, being an official publication. The Mitāk- sharā, and the few other treatises which were translated about that time, being the only works accessible as a rule to the European readers, they have formed the law literature of the higher judiciary of the country.¹

Mitāksharā, translated by H. T. Colebrooke, Esq. : Calcutta, 1810.

European scholars too, as for example Dr. Bühler, seem to adopt the view that a few publications¹ approved of by courts are alone to be considered as guides in settling the Hindu law. Thus, according to him, even so late as 1868, the Mitāksharā of Vijñāneśvara, the Mayūkhā, and the Nirṇayasindhu were the only recognised official guides. The original object of publication of the entire Mitāksharā by Government, and of a translation of a small extract of thirty-six verses, with comments, was thus apparently forgotten, and what was nothing more than an introduction is now by some looked upon as the entire repository of Hindu law. In my opinion this is a grave error. Yājñavalkya is one of the exponents of Hindu law; and Vijñāneśvara's Mitāksharā is an excellent commentary thereon. But to say that it is the whole Hindu law, and is accepted by the people as such, is not at all correct. In order to promote a more just appreciation of the study of Hindu law, and to correct many erroneous impressions, I have here given Yājñavalkya as a specimen, and in the above brief sketch I have attempted to shew the vast field which Hindu law really occupies; and further, to illustrate some of the difficulties which have been raised by a necessarily partial application of isolated texts, I have thrown into the form of 10 Appendices some remarks bearing upon certain prominent topics of Hindu law. I am aware that in so doing I have not entered very fully into the subject; but I have been unable to do more, both my time and space having been limited. It may be that in the opinion of some, some of the topics indicated in the Introduction may have no direct bearing on

Hindu law as administered by Courts. But apart from their value as integral elements composing the Hindu Dharmaśāstra, and as such necessary to a proper understanding of the whole subject, they bear very considerably on all questions of partition, succession, alienation and contracts. To a right apprehension and elucidation of these, the whole of the Purāṇic and the customary law becomes useful; and the publication of Yājñavalkya becomes serviceable—first, by way of comparison of what has been done, with what yet remains undone even in the limited work of translation, on the basis on which we have been going on; secondly, he is also serviceable as a guide to what may be 10 called the second stage of Smṛiti literature. That the work of Yājñavalkya as it exists is not his own production may, I think, be now taken as proved. Viṣṇūśeṣvara himself admits¹ that it is a compendium by a follower of Yājñavalkya. Mitra Miśra in the *Vīramitrodaya*² supports the same conclusion. Being a work composed in times subsequent to the time of Yājñavalkya, the compiler of the epitome draws upon other Smṛiti writers, although his own distinctive opinions are chiefly advocated. From its condensed and often enigmatic style and for other reasons I consider this to be either the last or one of the last works of the second epoch in the growth of the Dharmaśāstra literature. 20

I shall now proceed to say something about Yājñavalkya, and the composition, chronology, &c. of the Smṛiti which bears his name.

The Smṛiti itself, though based on the views of some Rishi named Yājñavalkya, draws upon other writers whom it names, and Viṣṇūśeṣvara distinctly says that the mention of those writers is illustrative and not exhaustive of the number of those to whom the Dharmaśāstra of the Āryas owes its origin. From an examination of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti and its comparison with others, I may roughly state that I consider it to be later than Manu, Vasishṭha, Gautama, Śaṅkha, Likhita, and Hārīta, nearly contemporaneous with Viṣṇu, and prior to 30 Parāśara and others. It does not seem to have at any one time formed the distinctive basis of the Āryan law, like Manu, Gautama, Śaṅkha, Likhita and Parāśara; but as bearing the impress of the leading exponent of the doctrines of the White Yajurveda, it formed the principal guide of the fifteen Śākhās of that Veda. These Śākhās, as we find from the Charaṇa Vyūha and other authorities, have chiefly predominated in the countries to the north of the Narmadā. And hence the greater prevalence of Yājñavalkya's doctrines amongst the followers of these Sākhās in the Northern courts, where there have been Vājasaneyi priests. The Vājasaneyins claim Yājñavalkya as their great āchārya. In this connection the following questions suggest themselves:—Who was Yājñavalkya; and when did he live? When was the present Smṛiti composed?

From an examination of the Āryan authorities, it appears there were many Yājñavalkyas living at different times, and that Yājñavalkya, like Janaka, is the title or surname of a class, and not the 10 name of an individual. Except on such a hypothesis, all the facts in reference to Yājñavalkya and other Rishis, and Janaka and similar other kings, cannot be reconciled.

Beginning with the Vedic period, and the Mantra literature of the R̥g-veda, we do not find such a person as Yājñavalkya mentioned therein. Nor is he found in the R̥g-Brāhmaṇas. Coming to the Sūtras of the R̥g-veda, Yājñavalkya is not mentioned by Āśvalāyana, one of the earliest Sūtra authors of the R̥g-veda either in his Gṛhya or Śrauta Sūtra. The followers of R̥g-veda, however, in their daily Brahma-Yājña at the present day repeat the following quarter of the 20 first verse of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti after the initial verses or texts of the four Vedas (including Brāhmaṇas), the six Vedāṅgas, and when the reciter comes to the Smṛitis and before he proceeds to the Purāṇas:¹
योगीश्वरं यज्ञतत्त्वज्ञम् ॥

The original text of Āśvalāyana has no reference to any Smṛiti; and the above passage from Yājñavalkya has been added by the Prayoga-writers. Yājñavalkya therefore did not rank amongst the great Rishis in the time of Āśvalāyana (see the enumeration of Rishis at page 164 of the same work). Going on to the next Veda—the Yajush, we find Yājñavalkya mentioned as a cotemporary of Janaka in the Brāhmaṇa 30 of the Taittirīya or the Black Yajurveda. Pursuing our course further on, Yājñavalkya comes prominently on the stage for the first time in connection with the Sukla or the White Yajurveda.² He is the Rishi of the Vājasaneyi branch of that portion of the Yajurveda.

In Bṛhadāraṇyaka, an Upanishad of the White Yajurveda, Yājñavalkya holds discourse with one Janaka³ and Maitreyi. Now, Janaka was a king of the Videhas,⁴ and a cotemporary of Rāma and Daśaratha.

³ Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upanishad, Adhyāya v., Brāhmaṇa i. (Cal. edition p. 507.)

⁴ He is mentioned in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (Kāṇḍa iii., Adhyāya x., śukāḍa 9, p. 755, Cal.) Śāyana translates Vaidēhah as the king of the country named Videha.

In the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, the history of Janaka, the marriage of his daughter with Rāma, king of Ayodhyā's eldest son, is given. One of that Janaka's coteremporaries is Yājñavalkya Vājasaneyin. In the Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad is given the discourse between Janaka and Yājñavalkya. This was in the Tretā age. In the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, we find an account of the introduction of the Śukla Yajurveda which Yājñavalkya brought from the sun.¹

alone, and one sacrificial fire.¹ The Yājñavalkya, who belongs to the Dvāpara period, even if he were one and the same Yājñavalkya as the expounder of the White Yajurveda, could not have been the cotemporary of Janaka Videha and Rāma Daśarathī. The Yājñavalkya of the Dvāpara must have lived after the Dvāpara Yuga was well advanced, for it is then that the fourfold division of the Veda is said to have been made. Whereas the cotemporary of Janaka Videha lived in the beginning of the Treta period, for it was at that time that that Janaka flourished. Again, another Yājñavalkya is mentioned as learning the Yoga from one of Rāma's descendants. (See the Bhāgavata Purāṇa 10 ix., xii., 4.) This prince's pedigree stands thus :—

This Hirānyanābhah studied, it is said, the Yoga from Jaimini, one of the first disciples of Vyāsa and the author of the Pūrva-Mīmāṃsā, and taught it to Yājñavalkya.² Again, Yājñavalkya officiated as Adhvaryu at the great Rājasūya Yajña kingly sacrifice of Yudhisṭhira.³ And from the different officiating priests engaged in the ceremony there is reason to conclude that the Yājñavalkya who introduced the White Yajurveda was then the Adhvaryū; for all the followers of Vyāsa to whom the different Vedas were first taught by him, are 20 named as officiating priests—Vyāsa himself acting as Bramhā.⁴

Yājñavalkya again is spoken of as discoursing on various religious and philosophic topics with Yudhishtira after the conclusion of the great battle at Kurukshetra.¹

- Thus we have several Yājñavalkyas, one cotemporary with Janaka-videhi, another mentioned as studying the Yoga from the 17th prince after Rāma, a third officiating at the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhishtira, a fourth studying under Śākala, cursed by Śākala and blessed by the sun with the gift of expounding the White Yajurveda. This last is noted in the Purāṇas as having had two wives:—1, Maitreyī, and 2, Kātyāyana.
10 By the latter, he had a son named Kātyāyana, who is said to have composed Sūtras to expound the White Yajurveda. Other Yājñavalkyas too are noticed in the histories and the Purāṇas. Which of these Yājñavalkyas is the author of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti? Is any of the above Yājñāvalkyas the author of that code? I am afraid answers to both the above questions in the present state of our knowledge must be very indefinite and unsatisfactory. There is nothing to show that Yājñā-valkya, the expounder of the Śukla Yajurveda, is the author of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti; nor is there any reason to believe that he and the cotemporary of Janaka Videhi are one and the same person.
20 One Janaka is directly mentioned in the Taittirīya Yajurveda,² whereas Yājñavalkya is not; and as the second division of the Yajurveda was evidently promulgated at a later stage, I take the Yājñavalkya, who was cotemporary with Janaka, to be different from the Yājñavalkya, who was a pupil of Jaimini by one account and of Vaisampāyana by another.
This will also agree with the account which makes a Yājñavalkya receive his yoga-vidyā from a prince seventeenth in descent from Rāma, the son-in-law of the above Janaka.

- The story which connects Yājñavalkya with Kātyāyana is also useful, as Kātyāyana is stated to have composed the Sūtras which expound 30 the ritual of the White Yajurveda. The positive age of the Yājñā-valkya, the expounder of the White Yajurveda, is uncertain; but from the style of that work and that of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti, it is clear that they are not the works of the same author. In the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti, Yājñavalkya himself is mentioned as one of the Smṛiti authors.
But from this circumstance alone no safe inference can be drawn. For³ the practice of writers mentioning their own names in their own works is very old. That he was some follower of the Yājñavalkya school is accepted by Viṣṇāśvara and Mitra Miśra.

The teaching of the doctrines of Yoga in this Smṛiti to a considerable extent also distinguishes it from other Smṛitis.

As regards the time of its composition, much cannot yet be definitively said. A portion of this Smṛiti occurs in the Agni Purāṇa.¹ The whole of Chapter II. of Yājñavalkya is thus reproduced. The only portions from the first chapter which are extracted are those which refer to Śrāddha and Vināyaka Śānti. The first extract is put into the mouth of Pushkara and the rest into that of Agni.² 10

In the Garuḍa Mahā Purāṇa, however, the first and third chapters of this Smṛiti, or considerable portions of them, are found almost entire.³

² The following would be a rough sketch of the comparison of the Garuḍa Purāṇa and the Smṛiti texts :—

Garuḍa Purāṇa.

Yājñavalkya.

- Ch. I. (of that portion where the dialogue begins).Ch. I. vv. 1—13.
 Ch. II.Ch. I. vv. 14, 50.
 Ch. III.Ch. I. vv. 51—89. To this are added an opening hemistich and a closing one.
 Ch. IV.Ch. I. vv. 90—189 ; some of these are omitted, and the last hemistich is new.
 Ch. V.....Ch. I. vv. 190, 197, the first and the last hemistiches are added. 30
 Ch. VI.Ch. I. vv. 198—269½. The first hemistich is new.
 Ch. VII.....Ch. I. vv. 269½—293½. Some verses omitted, and the opening hemistich is added.
 Ch. VIII,Ch. I. vv. 294—307½. No addition ; the last two are omitted.
 Ch. IX.Ch. III. vv. 45—55. The last two verses are omitted. 40
 Ch. X.....Ch. III. vv. 56—59, and v. 205. The intervening 145 verses are omitted.
 Ch. XI.Ch. III. vv. 206—218. There are omissions, and the verses do not literally agree, though they do so in substance.
 Ch. XII.....Ch. III. vv. 219 to 328.
 Ch. XIII.Ch. III. vv. 1—14. Several verses are omitted.

- It is strange that a great part of the present Smṛiti of Yājñavalkya should be thus found in the Garuḍa Purāṇa. It is to be noted, however, that the whole of the second chapter, and the concluding portion of the first chapter referring to the duties of a king and the disquisition of Yājñavalkya on the nature of the soul under the head of an ascetic's duties, are not met with in this Purāṇa. As regards the portion that does appear, it is divided into thirteen chapters, each chapter as a rule corresponding to one or more sub-headings of a chapter of Yājñavalkya as given in Part II. Some chapters comprise more than two sub-sections.
- 10 Each of the chapters in the Garuḍa Purāṇa contains a preface and a conclusion consisting generally of not more than a hemistich, which are not found in Yājñavalkya. This circumstance of common verses suggests two hypotheses—first, that the original edition of the digest of Yājñavalkya is represented by the Garuḍa Purāṇa, while its present edition as we have it, and such as was accepted by Viṣṇuśekhara and his predecessors in the Dharmaśāstra line, represents the same as supplemented by the addition of the portion on Vyavahāra as we find it; and the second is that the author of Garuḍa Purāṇa, instead of incorporating the whole of the Smṛiti, borrowed only such portions of it as he considered
- 20 of importance and interest to the public. The circumstance that Vyavahāra is undoubtedly a later development than Achāra or Prāyaścitta, lends some countenance to the first hypothesis. But for more reasons than one I cannot accept it as the correct one: because I.—The present Smṛiti divided into three chapters has been accepted as a complete work from the times of Aparārka and Śūlapāṇi at the least; and now to accept the hypothesis under consideration would be to invest the Garuḍa Purāṇa with an antiquity to which, on the facts now before me, it seems to have no claim. II.—The express mention¹ of Yājñavalkya's law being incidentally introduced into the Purāṇa renders it almost
- 30 certain that that Purāṇa borrowed such materials as were then considered important from the first and the third chapters of the digest-maker of Yājñavalkya. Any little doubt which might otherwise remain on the point is removed by the evidence of language, namely, the utter dissimilarity between the diction of a Purāṇa and that of a digest. III.—The omission of the Ātmyātma Vidyā (science of the soul) portion of chapter III., and of a few verses in each sub-heading remains unexplained on the first hypothesis.
- It being thus my opinion that Yājñavalkya's digest is prior in point of time to the Garuḍa Purāṇa, the fact of only a part of that
- 40 digest being narrated in reply to an enquiry which demanded the whole of Yājñavalkya's Institutes² is explicable only on the supposition that in the time of that Purāṇa, the Vyavahāra portion was considered either a subordinate branch of the Dharmaśāstra, or had been superseded by other works expounding the traditions which governed the people since the composition of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti. The same remarks will to a great extent apply to the occurrence of the Smṛiti in the Agni Purāṇa. Both these Purāṇas favor the Vaiṣṇava creed, and as such have a large following in those parts of India where the White Yajurveda itself would claim greater prevalence.

The antagonism between the Vājasaneyins and the other followers of the Vedas is a fact recorded by past and current history. Its origin 10 is traced to Yājñavalkya's quarrel with Sākala and Vaiśampāyana. The study of the White Yajurveda has now considerably declined; and although numerically the Sukla-Yajurvedins are a large class, they are generally comparatively illiterate, and in the performance of their priestly duties they are obliged to leave everything to their Drāviḍa agents at such places as Prayāga (Allahabad), Benares, and Gayā.

I shall now make a few remarks on the Nibandhas (treatises or digests), and Tikās (commentaries). It would be great service if some student of the Dharmaśāstra would trace and write a history of the different Nibandhas (Treatises) and Tikās (commentaries). For 20 these are now the repositories of our customary law, after the Smṛitis and the Purāṇas. Mr. Steele in his "Summary of the Law and Customs of Hindu Castes within the Dekkan Provinces subject to the Presidency of Bombay, chiefly affecting Civil Suits,"¹ gives a list of Sanskrit books composing the Dharmaśāstra. He names only 24 Smṛitis which I have not repeated here as they are already included in my previous lists. One mentioned by Mr. Steele as not obtainable in Poona—namely, Kokila, does not occur in Stenzler's list, but it is found in this Presidency. The other works—such as either Nibandhas or Tikās—I have thrown into an alphabetical list,² and have affixed 30 a few cursory remarks against some of them. The spelling has been changed in conformity with my general plan.

² Dharmaśāstra works mentioned by Mr. Steele as being available at Poona:—

Āpastamba Tika, by	Upavyāsa Bhāṣhya on the	Kalpa.
Dhātavāmin.	Charana Vyāsa.	It is a generic term, and

- therefore unmeaning, as the name of an individual work. It is indeed not unusual to cite passages under the name of स्मृत्य only. But in all those cases the meaning of that abbreviation is not ambiguous to the native reader who makes out from the context which kalpa sutra is referred to. Again Anantadeva in his śrauta Prayoga abbreviates Kalpa-sāra Kārika into Kalpas.

It appears to me that Steele had the commentary of Govind rāja on Manu in view. The Govindārjaya is a digest which has been ascribed to Narasiṃha by Shama-churn Sircar (see his Vyavastha Chandrikā Sanskrit preface p. 15).

Mr. Steele says: "This is a work well known in the Carnatic country," but he does not mention its author. The work mentioned by him was not in use in Poona. The one here mentioned may therefore be the work by Viśvāraṇya under this title (see Shama-churn Sircar's preface to Sanskrit Vyavastha Chandrikā, p. 19).
Datta-Kausulha.
Dāva Vibhaga.
Probably that of Jīmūtn Vahana. It is strange that the account of this work should be so meagre.
Dāna Khanḍa.
I know only of one Dāna Khanḍa, namely, that of Hunadri. But it does not treat of Vratas.
Dānacandrikā.
Dinakeroddyota.
This is a repetition. The name of the author is unintelligibly given. It is Gāgā-bhaṭṭa, otherwise called Viśveśvara.
Draita-nirṇaya.
The work treats of knotty points in Dharmasāstra, and not of the individuality of things as distinct from the divine spirit. Evidently Mr. Steele was misled by the title of the work, and wrote his remarks without having a look at its contents.
- Dharmasindhu.
Dharma Pravṛtti.
Its author is Nārāyaṇa Bhāṭṭa.
Narasimha-Pratāpa.
Nak-Pooshp marla.
I can make out nothing of this name.
Nāga-deva-Kṛita-Āhnikā.
This same work appears again as Bhāṭṭoji Kṛita Āhnikā (sup. 12), strangely it is stated here to be 700 years old while on p. 13 it is put down as 300 years old.

It is not correct to say that the Mayūkhas are of chief notoriety in the Carnatic.

Madanapāla is the name of the king under whose auspices Viśveśvara composed the work. The king was a Jat by caste.
Mabesa bhaṭṭi.

According to Babu Shamchurn it is a Mahārāshtra work. Matridatta Bhāshya. Mitāksharā of Vijñāneśvara. Medhātithi. Rāmārchana Chandrikā. Rāma Vājapeyin. Renukākarika. Rudra-Paddhati. Vāsudevī. Vidhāna-Pārijāta. Viramitrodaya. The work is said to be so old as 600 years, on what authority it does not appear. It treats of Vyavahāra Achāra, and as I am informed of Prāyaścitta also, but I have not yet come across the last division of the work.	Vratārku. Vratārāja. Vrata-Chandrikā. Vrata-Kaumudī. Vyavahāra-Mitrodaya. Vyavahāra-Sekhara. Śānti-Kamalākara. —sāra. Śikshā-Bhāshya. Śūdra Kamalākara. Sankara-bhatti. Śāpiṇḍya Nūṇaya. —(Another work) Śāpiṇḍya Pradīpa. Sāra Sangraha. Subodhinī. That its title alone should be known in Poona goes to show that Vijñāneśvara or his commentators did not enjoy the importance with which they are now credited.	Sūryārūpa Samvāda. Sanskāra Ratna. Sanskāra Kaustubha. Samkāra Sāra. Sannyāsa Paddhati. Samkāra Ratnamālā. Smārta Vishṇukāśi nir-naya. Smṛiti Darpaṇa. Smṛityārtha-Sāra. Smṛityārtha Sangraha. Smṛityārtha Sāra. Smṛiti Kaustubha. The contents given are incorrect. The work refers to Vintas alone. Harihara Bhāshya. It is a commentary on the Sūtra of Kātyāyana. Hemādri. (12 divisions).

The Khandesh list gives the 4 Vedas, 18 Smṛitis, 11 Upa Smṛitis, 18 Purāṇas, 4 Upa Purāṇas, the Rāmāyana, the Māhābhārata, and 5 works on Vyavahāra, namely, (1) Vijñāneśvara, (2) Mayūkha, (3) Uddyota, (4) Mādhyama, and (5) Prutapust khund (?) What the last was it is hard to say. The name is badly spelt. It may be one of the divisions of Hemādri or Paraśurāma Prātāpa.

I cannot say that the above list is exhaustive. Many of my references have still remained unanswered. A separate publication would be required to review historically and critically the Dharmaśāstra literature of these parts. I offer the present instalment of my labors, with a view to indicate the wants in this direction, so that more enquiries may be made, and greater care and caution exercised in expounding the Hindu law, and describing a particular work or works as authorities often on second-hand information which there are no means of testing.

Thus the Mitāksharā of Vijñāneśvara is only one of the commentaries on one of the many Smṛitis. This has not been fully translated. As I have said before, out of this commentary, a small portion, namely, that on 36 verses is all that Colebrooke rendered into English. His translation itself requires revision and examination.¹ The work is one limited in its scope and of a speculative character. It is not like the works of Hemādri and Mādhava, and of the Bhaṭṭas which extend over the whole field of Dharmaśāstra, and which are the daily guides

- of the people. Up to the year 1868, when the Śāstris were attached to our courts, they used to consult all current works and usages; and yet they would often naturally quote those which were either printed or lithographed, especially those under the orders of Government. Works like the Mitāksharā, the Mayūkha, the Vīramitrodaya, the Bhāgavata, Manu-Smṛiti, and the Dharmā Sindhu and the Nirṇayasindhu, and such like were more often brought into requisition than others, but the currents of popular usage were as a rule kept up by a staff of men, who were displaced on the establishment of the High Courts on
- 10 grounds which do not appear to me to be sound and sufficient. To say that the Mitāksharā or any other similar treatise is decisive of Hindu law is, in my opinion, completely to ignore the history and growth of the Hindu law itself. Again, its sharp division, first into two schools, and now into a larger number, is a pure European idea. The older treatise-writers notice in some instances a division between the opinions of the Eastern and Southern communities; but further than that, there is no warrant for constructing so many schools of law as it is the fashion to call them. The demarcation which is now being attempted is a work of very late growth, in many
- 20 instances within the last few years. The first Privy Council Judgments divide the Hindu law into the Bénares and Gaur or Bengal schools. The more natural divisions would have been the Eastern and the Southern. The Brāhman community itself which follows the Vedas is divided into two groups, each having five sections. All these again are divided into Sākhās (branches) which follow their several Sutrās. But in the matter of Vyavahāra, there is no binding Vyavahāra work followed by the people who go according to their customs. Hence the observation of Mādhava that Parásara, including Vyavahāra in Āchára, laid down that the king should protect the earth by
- 30 Dharma.¹

Translation :—In support of the same Nārada says :—At the time when king Manu laid away [over this earth], the men conformed themselves to Dharma (duty) alone, and were speakers of truth. At that time there was no Vyavahāra (civil justice), for

This in the case of the Hindus pre-eminently means usage or custom. We accordingly find the 12 Mayúkhas and the Mitákshará of Vijñāneśvara to be two out of the many treatises consulted at Poona as treating of such customs. In Khandesh, amongst the works on Vyavahāra, they are 2 out of the 5 works named at the time of Mr. Steele. The analysis of the Nirṇayasindhu and Samskárakaustubha shows the same thing. So does the list made up from current replies of the Śāstris. If we see the actual working of Hindu society, Kamalākara's Nirṇayasindhu and the works of Mādhava and Nārāyaṇa and other Bhāṭṭas of Benares, they are more frequently consulted by the people than Vijñāneśvara. 10 The reason is clear. The Bhāṭṭas belonged to the people. They headed and still head the community of Benares, where this family enjoyed the privilege of agra pūja (first worship), and first gandha (ground sandalwood) is applied to their foreheads in all Hindu assemblies. They wrote Nibandhas for the guidance of the people. These were often founded on old texts; but they likewise incorporated all the accepted usages then current. This was not altogether the case with Vijñāneśvara. He was a very learned writer; and he wrote an excellent commentary on the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti. But apart from that, there was nothing very special about it. And as a matter of fact, it is 20 less consulted than the works of Hemādri, Mādhava and the Bhāṭṭas. Although I do not lay much stress on the following circumstance by itself, still it throws some additional light on the subject; and must therefore be noticed. Subodhini, which is now thought of so much by some authorities, was known only by its title in Poona in 1820. Even the author's name was not known in Poona, when Steele's Summary there was no hatred nor even jealousy. When Dharma dies away from among men Vyavahāra comes into existence. As for Bṛhaspati, he speaks of hatred, avarice and other vices as being the causes of Vyavahāra. "Formerly men conformed themselves to Dharma alone, and abstained from slaughter. Vyavahāra comes into action in the 30 case of those who are degraded by avarice, hatred and the like." Dharma (righteousness) having thus disappeared, a dispute which has its origin in a desire to obtain, and resulting in the determination of what is just, is termed Vyavahāra in common parlance. Hārāta too, in reference to the popular use [of the word Vyavahāra] says:—That is called Vyavahāra, whereby the fulfilment of one's duty and the avoidance of duties laid down for others, are effected in accordance with justice.

Hence Parasāra wishing to include Vyavahāra in the chapter on Āchāras has assigned no separate section to Vyavahāra, and only alludes to it [in the following text]: "Let [a king] protect the earth in accordance with Dharma." We shall expound the Vyavahāra here alluded to, by referring to other Smṛitis on the subject as far as we can. 40 In Kerala and other countries cohabitation with prostitutes, though proved by witnesses, is not punished by the king because of the customs of the country. There the Vyavahāra is superseded by the custom.

In the Casmatic an intentional marriage with a daughter of a maternal uncle is not treated as an offence. In the country of Kerala, the maturity of a maiden is not treated as an offence. In this and the like manner, in every country, there prevail its own customs, and written commands (of the king).

was published in 1826, (see page 8 of his preface,) whereas the general digest by the same author on Achāru, Vyavahāru and Prāyaschitta, under the title of Madana Pārijāta, is entered as a well-known work.

I shall only give one more example of a similar misapprehension and confusion. This is in regard to the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita and the Dattaka Chandrikā of Kubera, miscalled Devāṇḍa-bhaṭṭa. The first is the work of Nanda Paṇḍita of Benares. Mr. Colebrooke calls it "an excellent treatise on adoption."¹ Of the author he says nothing beyond a general remark that biographical notices of all Hindu authors must be "very imperfect."² If sufficient enquiry had been made, Nanda Paṇḍita's history could have been easily found. For he belonged to a Benares family, the descendants of which are still living at Benares.³ Not one of the thirteen works of Nanda Paṇḍita are authority in any part of this Presidency. Indeed, except the first two, the others are not even known. As regards the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita, it was not known at Poona in 1826. A Dattaka Mīmāṃsā is noted in Steele's list as "a work well-known in the Carnatak," the author's name is not given. But there is a Dattaka Mīmāṃsā by Vidyāraṇya Swāmī, well-known in the South;⁴ a third Dattaka Mīmāṃsā by Śrī-rāma Paṇḍita is also current;⁵ a fourth Dattaka Mīmāṃsā by Somanāth is spoken of; but as neither Nanda Paṇḍita's work, nor Kubera's was in existence in the original⁶ in this Presidency when Borradaile's translation of the Vyavahāra Mayūkha was printed in 1827, I am entitled in holding that neither work was known to any of the Sistris consulted by Steele: and further that the Mīmāṃsā abovenamed as being known in the Carnatic must have been either Śrī-rām's or Vidyāraṇya's. Nanda Paṇḍita is nowhere even mentioned as an authority on this subject in the Kaustubha, or the Nirṇayasindhu, or the Dharmasindhu, and the Mayūkhas. While the authorities on which Steele bases his Summary of law as regards adoption are Kaustubha, Mayūkha, Mitāksharā, Ādityapurāṇa, Nirṇaysindhu, Manu, Mahābhārata and Rāmayaṇa.¹

³ The founder of the family was Śrī Lakshmidhara; he was a resident of Bedar in southern India, whence he went to Benares; from him Nanda Paṇḍita was sixth in descent; and persons belonging to the ninth generation after Nanda Paṇḍita are still flourishing in upper India, from one of whom I have obtained an account of the family through Paṇḍita Rajaram Śāstrī Bodas and Bāl Śāstrī Rāṇḍe of Benares. In an old copy of Mādhanāṇand (a poetical work of Nanda Paṇḍita) which bears notes believed to be in Nanda Paṇḍita's handwriting the year Samvat 1855, (A. C. 1899) is given; and this may be taken to be about the time when he lived. His works are stated to be as follows:—1, Dattaka-Mīmāṃsā; 2, Navarātra Pindipe; 3, Smṛiti Sindhubhāṇirṇaya; 4, three sections of Harivaṇśa Vilāsa, named Dānakantuka, Anhikakantuka, and Sanskāśakantuka; 5, Bāla-bhūṣā; 6, Tatva-mukhavalī; 7, Madhava Nand Nāṭaka; 8, Keshava-vaijanti; 9, Vidvanmanohara (a commentary on Parāśara Smṛiti); 10, Śrīddha-kalpalatā; 11, Tirtha-kalpalatā; 12, Kālanirṇayakantuka; and 13, Kāśīprākāśa. His elder brother Govind wrote a work entitled Jyōtiṣa-Ratanasangraha. No other works are now found. A family tree of the whole family is annexed; and on a future occasion I hope to publish selected biographical extracts concerning this family.

The reader will now be able to see how far the remark of Mr. Sutherland in 1819, that "the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā is the most celebrated work extant on the Hindu law of adoption" is warranted by facts. In this Presidency it was not even known to the people in original for many years after the publication of its translation under the auspices of 10 Government. And now the people are guided by the Nirṇaysindhu, the Vīramitrodaya, the Kaustubha, the Dharmasindhu, the Mayūkhas, and not by the Mīmāṃsā or the Chandrikā. There are other works too on the subject of adoption, such as Dattaka-Mañjari, Dattaka-Nirṇaya, Dattaka-Darpaṇa, and others, which are consulted in these parts, but they are not accessible to English readers. The opinions of Nanda Paṇḍita are speculative, and are more indicative of Gauḍa doctrines than of the usages or opinions of the South.

As regards the Dattaka Chandrikā, it is supposed by Mr. Sutherland to be the work of Devāṇḍa Bhaṭṭa (see Stokes' H. L. B. p. 629, and 20 Mayne p. 24). Mr. Sutherland states that the printed copy as well as manuscripts read the name of the author as Kubera (see Stokes' H. L. B. p. 662). The ground assigned by him for discrediting this express testimony of manuscripts is the author's describing himself to be the writer of the Smṛiti Chandrikā (see Stokes' H. L. B. p. 662 note). But I hold this assumption to be incorrect—I. Because there are more than one Smṛiti Chandrikā and by authors other than Devāṇḍa Bhaṭṭa (see the Journal of Sanskrit works in the Asiatic Society of Bengal: under the direction of Mr. James Prinsep, A. C. 1838 p. 395;—Dr. Burnell's Catalogue of Tanjore MSS. p. 183; Shamchurn 30 Sircar's Vyavasthā Chandrikā, preface p. 19); II. As observed by Babu Shamchurn Sircar, the styles of the Smṛiti Chandrikā and the Dattaka Chandrikā are different (see Vyavasthā Chandrikā vol. I. p. 18 note. 58); III. The tradition noted by Shamchurn as prevailing in Bengal is confirmed by the statement of Mr. W. Macnaghten that the Dattaka Chandrikā has greater authority in Bengal than anywhere else*; IV. Devāṇḍa Bhaṭṭa expressly refers his readers for his observations on adoption to the chapter of his own Smṛiti Chandrikā on resumption of gift (see p. 55, ll. 18, 19); V. The citation of the same verse in the two

* See pp. 48—55, Steele's Summary, 1st ed.

* The statement of Mr. Sutherland that its author was a native of southern India (see Stokes' H. L. B. p. 628) is not of much weight, for according to Mr. Sutherland's information, Nanda Paṇḍita belonged to Southern India, while we know that he was an inhabitant of Benares.

works with different readings, and their reference of identical texts to different authors goes to show that they could not have been the productions of one and the same author (see Dat. Ch. p. 49, l. 17; and Sm. Ch. p. 56, l. 14; Dat. Ch. p. 49, l. 19, and Sm. Ch. p. 56, l. 24). On these grounds I hold that the present Smṛiti Chandrikā is, as it professes to be, the work of Bhaṭṭa Kubera, a Bengal author. Kubera's name is not even known on this side of India; and Mr. Borradaile expressly says that the original work did not exist in Western India in his time. Steele's list does not mention such a work at all.

- 10 Leaving all such speculative and comparatively unknown works, I chose one of the well known modern Nibhandhas—namely, the Vyavahāra Mayūkha of Bhaṭṭa Nīlakaṇṭha of Benares for publication. This work had been translated by Mr. Borradaile. But that version was known to be imperfect. I therefore first settled the Mayūkha text in the mode detailed in Part I, and from the text so settled, I carefully made my translation and have added notes thereto. I have tried to reproduce the original as nearly as possible. A few remarks about Nīlakaṇṭha will now be made. Nīlakaṇṭha belonged to the great Bhaṭṭa family of Benares. An account of this, prepared for me by
- 20 Pāṇḍit Bāl Śāstrī of Benares, is given in Part I. I append a translation of it for the information of my readers:—

- “In early times, there lived in the city of Pāṭhaṇa a very learned and pious man named Govindabhaṭṭa. His son Rāmeśvarabhaṭṭa went to Benares with the view of spending the remainder of his life at that holy place. Here he was initiated into the Mantra sacred to Rāma, and passed his life in the service of God Rāma. At an advanced age Rāmeśvara got a son named Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa. From his very youth Nārāyaṇa was distinguished by his patience and other good qualities; and he practised great austerities. In his time the Mahomedans demolished the temple of God Viśveśvara at Benares. Some time afterwards there was a ~~monsoon~~ over the whole
- 30 continent of India. Under these circumstances, the all-powerful Mahomedan ruler of the country begged of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa to cause the rains to fall. Thereupon he promised a copious fall of rain within the next twenty-four hours, and requested the then ruling Mahomedan authorities to permit him to reconstruct the temple of Viśveśvara. Accordingly there was a general rainfall, and contentment and happiness prevailed throughout the land. The Mahomedan ruler then gave the required permission, and Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa rebuilt the great temple that had been pulled down, and performed the ceremony of founding the image of Śrī Viśveśvara and of sanctifying it. The followers of the Hindu faith were moved with admiration, and having deep respect for his transcendent virtues bestowed on him the title of Jagat-guru (teacher
- 40 of the world), and resolved that Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa and his descendants should thenceforward be entitled to the Agrā pūjā [first honour]. This traditional history is well known at Benares to this day. Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa's name is celebrated throughout Hindustan for his erudition in all the Śāstras, evidenced by his works, such as the Triṣṭali-setu, Prayoga-ratna, and others; it is also well known that the preservation of the Grantha and Smṛiti rites and ceremonies, as they now subsist, is due in a great measure to his works. The account of the family descent given above occurs in a Śloka in Jyotiṣparipadikā, a work written by Rāmākrishṇabhaṭṭa, son of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa:—

तत्पुत्रः श्रीनारायणभट्टो जयति सर्ववद्भूतौ ॥ तत्पुत्ररामकृष्णभट्टो रामैकशरणतां यातः ॥

Translation :—In the great Southern Country, Bhaṭṭa Govind lived like the Agastya star. His son was Bhaṭṭa Rameśvara famed in all directions. His son Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa flourishes like the sun on this earth. His son Ramakṛṣṇabhaṭṭa became devoted to the services of the one God Rāma.

The works of Bhaṭṭa Govinda and of his son Rameśvara are not now obtainable; nor can the time in which they lived be fixed with any amount of certainty. Precise information sufficient to fix date of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa's birth is not available, but the time during which he lived may be approximately determined. With great labor I have collected some works written in Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa's own hand, and one of them is dated in the 1624th year of the Vikrama era. Another contains Ślokas (verses) which are to the following effect :—

भट्टे ज्ञानपुण्या ययामति ॥ लिखितः सप्तमोऽध्यायो भाष्ये सप्तमस्तत्कृतौ ॥

Translation :—In the Śaka year 1457, on Sunday the 14th of the dark-half of the month of Jyeshṭhā the moon being in the constellation of Viśakhā, the work came to its conclusion. The son of Bhaṭṭa Rameśa [living in the city of Kāśī, i. e. Benares] has written the seventh Adhyāya [chapter] on the Bhāṣya of Śaṅkara to the best of his ability.

At the end of the 12th chapter of the same manuscript is written Samvat 1612 of the 20 Vikrama era. Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa had two sons, Rāmakṛṣṇabhaṭṭa and Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa. Both wrote numerous treatises, and were great in all branches of learning. Of the treatises written by Rāmakṛṣṇa, the largest is his commentary on Tantra-Vārtika. On the Dharmasāstra he wrote the Jivit-itrika-nirṇaya and many other works. Of the treatises written by Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa the Dvaita-nirṇaya is a large and well known work. He also wrote some treatises on various portions of the Mīmāṃsā philosophy. The ślokas (verses) which establish the time referred to above, and which are found in the Dvaita-nirṇaya of Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa, are these :—

भक्त्यन्वेषदोहेतवे तच्चतुर्दशः ॥ श्रीमांसाद्वैतसाध्याज्यनीतिज्ञो भट्टशक्तिरः ॥

Free Translation :—Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, endowed with knowledge, and the devotee of Lakṣmī flourishes at Benares. His son Bhaṭṭa Śaṅkara, the great Mīmāṃsāk, followed him.

Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa's son Nīlakaṇṭha was a great Nibandhakāra, and he wrote the Dāna Mayūkha, and the other eleven Mayūkhās. Nīlakaṇṭha's son Śaṅkara was a great essayist, and his twelve essays known by the title of Arka (sun), such as Vratārka and the rest, are well known. Rāmakṛṣṇabhaṭṭa had three sons—Dinakarabhaṭṭa, Kamalākaraṇḍabhaṭṭa, and Lakṣmanabhaṭṭa. Dinakara's productions, the 12 Udyotas, Sāntisāra, &c. are well known, and in some treatises mention is made of him under the name of Dīnākaraṇḍabhaṭṭa, Viśveśvara, otherwise called Gāgābhaṭṭa, wrote the Bhaṭṭa Chintāmaṇi and many other treatises. Of the productions of Kamalākara the Nirṇayasindhu and many other works are celebrated, and are considered as authorities. Anantabhaṭṭa, son of Kamalākara, wrote the Śrīrāma Kalpadruma and other works. The Achāraratna and other treatises by Lakṣmaṇa are celebrated. Similarly other eminent men learned and virtuous were born in this family; and their fame has spread throughout the land.

Annexed is the genealogical tree showing the names of the several Bhaṭṭas; the word Śrī is prefixed to the names of those who were living [on Saturday, Kārtika Vadya 8th, Samvat 1935, when the tree was prepared for me in Benares]:—

At the commencement of each of the 12 Mayúkhas, there are 14 prefatory verses. These describe the family of Nílakaṇṭha's patron king, and the occasion which produced the Mayúkhas. I give these verses together with a free translation thereof below.¹

¹ Note.—The text of these opening verses is settled by a comparison of three MSS., two Miraj ones, and one from my own collection. It may be noted that the Miraj copy A repeats these verses at the beginning of each Mayúkha, only varying the last stanza, which has special reference to the Mayúkha that follows. In my copy these verses occur at the beginning of the Samakára, Niti, Dána, Pratiśṭhā and Práyaścitta Mayúkhas, which are the 1st, 5th, 7th, 9th and 10th out of the twelve. But from the others they have been left out either by carelessness or accident. 10

Translation:—[1.] May that sun do good to me, who sportively creates the universe, who protects it [while subsisting] in his universal form, and who speedily terminates it when his desire [for sport] has been satisfied.

[2.] Of Kāśyapa who was born of the body of Brahmā, was born the sage [known by] the name of Vibhāṇḍaka. Him Rishyaśringa placed at the head of fathers [by his birth as son], and in his line was born he who was named Springivara.

[3.] In that great and long line of kings called Sangara, king Karṇa was born as the moon was from the ocean. His reputation was so widely known that even the stories of 40
Karṇa (a hero of the Mahābhārata) could find no room in [i.e. attract] the ears [of people] which were filled to the brim [by stories of king Karṇa].

[4.] From him was born Viśoka Deva, who [as his name imported] made the world free from misery. From him was born Astāśatru. He had a son named Raya, who [as his name implied] destroyed all his enemies simply by the rapidity of his motions.

[5.] Then was born king Vairāṭa, and after him king Vīṭharāja, [and] Narabrahmadeva, and after him Manyudeva; and after him the king named Chandrapāla.

The Sengara dynasty (under whose auspices Nīlakaṇṭha wrote,) flourished in Bundel-Khaṇḍa. Their capital appears to have been situated in Bharehā at the confluence of चम्पवती (the Chambal) and तरावती (the Yamunā).¹

In the Introduction as well as in the Appendices, a number of subjects have been left unnoticed. Some of these are noted in the concluding observations at the end of Appendix IV. Section II.

I cannot conclude this Introduction without acknowledging my great obligations to my friends Paṇḍita Bāl Śāstrī Rūpaḍe of Benares and Paṇḍit Rājārām Śāstrī Bodas also of Benares, now employed at the Elphinstone College, Mr. Yasavant V. Athalye, one of my brother

[6.] The king named Śivagana was then born, who founded the city named Śivagana; who was equal to Śivagana (the attendants of Śiva) in respect of all qualities, and who was the first in the enumeration of those who were favoured by Śiva.

[7.] He had a son named Rohichandra, who was followed by king Karinasena. From his body was born Rāmachandra, who was the protector of the world, the lion among men, and king of kings.

[8.] After him was born Yaśodeva; after him king Tārāchandra; after him king Chakrasena, and after him king Rājasimha.

20 [9.] From him was born king Śāhudeva, whose reputation surpassed the ocean of milk [in respect of its freedom from stain]. After him was born King Bhagavanta Deva, who had constant and increasing prosperity.

[10.] The heap of wealth given by him was so great that the mountain of gems being, as it were, surpassed thereby in respect of its size, was ashamed, and quietly retired to Ilāvṛta, a place where no men can go; further, how can the fire of his piety, which was inflamed by the tears of the wives of the terror-stricken enemy, not be likened to the fire which arose out of the mouth of Yaśadvā, and which residing in the ocean is supposed to feed on its waters.

30 [11.] That king gave a command to Nīlakaṇṭha, the gem of the assemblage of learned men, the ornament of the residents of the Deccan, who was firmly grounded in Smṛitis, and who had no equal [in the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā] of Jaimini [Nīlakaṇṭha] courteously bowing to that command read and examined all the works, and is now laying before the world this Bhagavadbhāṣaka.

[12.] Herein I have discarded much that was accepted by [literary] cheats, but had really no foundation. There is however no deficiency of discourse on that account; for no worship is lowered for want of an imaginary flower.

40 [13.] In this unblemished work, twelve Mayūkhas (rays), which give delight to learned men, are propounded in the following order:—Saṃskāra (initiation ceremonies), Aśhāra (rules of conduct), Kāla [ordinarily called Samaya] (the times for festivals and religious acts), Śrāddha (funeral oblation), Niṣi (policy), Vivāda [ordinarily called Vyavahāra] (Municipal law), Dāna (gift), Utsarga (dedication), pratiṣṭhā (consecration), pratyakṣita (penance); Śuddhi (purification), and Śānti (propitiation of enraged deities).

About the position of Bharehā, the principal town of the Auraya district, see Asiatic Researches of the N. W. Provinces vol. IV., p. 417. About the Raja who first brought the Pratishāstha, see the same volume p. 413. As regards the sage Rishi-a-Śringa by whom the Raja trace their descent, see vol. I p. 209 and vol. IV. p. 276.

Pleaders, and Mr. John Macpherson, of the High Court bar, for their assistance in my work. Many Śāstris throughout the Presidency are also entitled to my acknowledgments for their readiness in giving me information, and placing their MS. stores at my disposal. Thirteen years ago I wrote a small work on Hindu Law in the Maráthí language. Its reception has encouraged me to extend the sphere of my labours. Of the imperfections of this my first attempt to trace the history of the Áryan law, and to treat of some of its prominent topics historically, no one can be more conscious than myself. But if it contributes in the slightest degree to ampler investigation or more sympathetic study 10 of the Dharmaśāstra, I shall consider myself well rewarded.

VYAVAHÁRA MAYÚKHA.

SALUTATION TO GAṆESA.

1. Having spoken of the rules of royal policy, and duly bowed to the lotus-like feet of the sun, Nīlakaṇṭha composes a small [treatise] laying down juridical rules.
Benediction.
2. I honour [my] preceptor Śankara, the sole head of the leading twice-born, master of laws, source of happiness, [and] the instructor of all in Káśi [Benares].¹
3. That highest being who had appeared in two [forms]² here [in this world] for expounding the two conflicting systems, now appeared [in] one [form] as Śrī Śankara Bhaṭṭa; and he accepted the doctrine of identity of the human soul with the divine essence propounded by the Mīmāṃsakas.³
4. Herein I have discarded whatever was favoured by [literary] forgers, by reason of its resting on no authority; however, there is no deficiency of discourse whatever herein on that account; [for] no worship is lowered for want of the celestial flower.⁴

Definition of Vyavahāra.

Vyavahāra, [or] a judicial proceeding, is a transaction which incurs 20 cases [the rules] whereby the determination of [the party who has committed] the unrecognized wrong [as] between the disputing parties is made known. [Or] it is a transaction made by plaintiff and defendant, in which are involved evidence, possession, and witnesses; [or] which proposes to decide between conflicting pleadings. As regards confession to plaintiff's claim, the use of the term Vyavahāra [in such a case] is, according to Madanaratna, secondary. The latter part [of the

¹ This refers to the father of Nīlakaṇṭha; but the adjectives in the verse have another meaning which applies to Śankara, the tutelary deity of Benares. When thus rendered the verse would stand as follows:—

I honour Śankara, on whose head alone shines the moon [as an ornament], who is the lord of the Bull, who bears Pārvatī [as his half-body], and who, in Káśi, instructs all. [See further Káśi-Mṛita-Moksha-Nirṇaya by Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa, MS.; Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, chap. xv., v. 62.]

³ This refers to Vyāsa and his school.

⁴ Khaṇḍakha is the word used; and it means an imaginary celestial flower, used as a familiar illustration in such figures. As no worship would be spoilt for want of a flower which does not exist, the Mayúkha will not, says the author, likewise suffer from the omission of matter which rests on no authority.

above definition] is for excluding unfounded disputes, false pleadings, &c.

Now [as to] its titles :—Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 5] :—“If one aggrieved by others in a way contrary to the Smritis and the established usage complain to the king, that subject is one of the titles of Vyavahāra, or a judicial proceeding.”¹ Adharshitah [means] disregarded.

Its eighteen divisions are [thus] mentioned by Manu [ch. viii., vv. 4, 5, 6, 7] :—“Of them, first [1] non-payment of debts, [2] deposit, 10 [3] sale without ownership, [4] partnership, [5] resumption of gift, [6] non-payment of wages, [7] transgression of compact, [8] rescission of purchase and sale, [9] disputes between the master and the herdsman, [10] boundary disputes, [11, 12] assault and abuse, [13] theft, [14] heinous offences, [15] adultery, [16] duties of man and wife, [17] partition, and [18] gambling and prize-fighting. These are eighteen titles in legal procedure.”² Anapakarma [means] not returning. Anusuyah [means] repentance. Dyūtam [means] gaming with inanimate objects. Gaming with animals is called Samāhvaya. Here, although according to the text of Brihaspati, “killing a man, 20 theft, harbouring another’s wife, and both kinds of violence [i. e., both with speech and with the body], ought to be the four species of Sāhasa (heinous offences),” adultery³ and the two species of violence with speech and with the body, are varieties of violence, they are mentioned separately, [in the same way] as balivarda (a bull) [sometimes] is after go (cattle of the bovine genus).⁴ The nature of these eighteen titles will be explained further on.

* 2 * ESSENTIALS OF CIVIL JUDICATURE.

Brihaspati :—“ [The king] should build a separate house in a Essentials of Civil Judicature. fortress, having water and trees around 80 The Court-house. it; [and] on the eastern side of it [the house] should be made the court-room, properly constituted and facing the east.”⁵

⁴ This is a mode of illustration wherein the word go, meaning bovine cattle generally, is used, and yet the word balivarda (a bull) is added to denote the importance of the latter.

And the same should be the Dharmādhikaraṇam, or seat of justice. For thus is the text of Kātyāyana :—“That place, where discrimination between truth and falsehood conformably to the precepts of law is made, is the seat of justice.”¹ Manu (ch. viii., vv. 1, 2) :—“The king, desirous of investigating judicial proceedings, should enter the court, (composed and dressed and decorated modestly, [and along] with Brāhmaṇas and councillors who are learned in the law), and attend to the business of litigants.”² Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 1) :—“The king, divested of anger and avarice, should attend to administer justice along with learned Brāhmaṇas, [and] conformably to the precepts of law.”³ Nripaṭi [means] any one having authority to protect subjects, not necessarily a Kshatriya. Kātyāyana :—“The king who makes investigations with judges, councillors, Brāhmaṇas, the family priest, and respectable men [or assessors], attains heaven by reason of his righteousness.”⁴ Here the Brāhmaṇas are those who are amīyuktāḥ, or not appointed.⁵

The respectable men [or assessors] are niyuktāḥ (appointed).⁶ And it is said to the same effect :—“Whether niyuktāḥ or amīyuktāḥ, one who knows the law is competent to speak.”⁷

The definition of a prāḍvivāka (a judge) is thus given by Bṛihaspati :—“He who in a cause examines, and also cross-examines, and who speaks sweetly at first, is therefore called prāḍvivāka.”⁸

Definition of amātya (councillor) :—Viśā :—“The king should appoint as amātya (councillor) a Brāhmaṇa who knows all the Śāstras, who is free from avarice, who speaks justly, who is wise, whose standing is hereditary, and who [is a] twice-born.” Here the term dviḥja (twice-born) is used after [the term Brāhmaṇa] for the purpose of including a Kshatriya or a Vaiśya in the absence of a Brāhmaṇa. And Kātyāyana [says] to the same effect :—“Where there is no learned Brāhmaṇa, there [the king] should appoint a Kshatriya or a Vaiśya who is learned in law. He should scrupulously exclude a Śūdra.”⁹

As regards Sabhyāḥ, (respectable men), [says] Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 2] :—“Those should be made assessors by the king who have studied the Vedās and Śāstras, who know the law, who speak the truth, and who look to friends and foes with the same feelings.”¹⁰ As regards their number [says] Bṛihaspati :—“The court where there sit seven, five, or three Bráhmaṇas, conversant with the ways of the world and learned in the Vedas and in the laws, is like the sacrificial assembly."¹ The same :—"The king should appoint accountants and scribes, who know the principles of grammar and have studied the lexicons, who are skilled in reckoning, who are pure, and who are acquainted with various characters."² Śabdah [means] the science of words [or grammar], and abhidhānam, a lexicon or dictionary. Kātyāyana :—"There, Vaiśyas who understand justice should be made auditors." Tatra [means] in the above court. Brihaspati :—"A truthful and 10 confidential man should be appointed, subject to the authority of assessors, to summon witnesses, the plaintiff and the defendant, and to look after them."³ He must be a Śúdra. Vyása [says] to the same effect :—"A stout Śúdra whose ancestors were employed in that office, acting under the orders of the assessors, should be made a Sādhyapála to obtain materials for trial." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 3] :—"A king who, from press of other work, cannot attend to administer justice, should appoint [in his own place] a Bráhmaṇa learned in all laws to work along with the assessors."

Brihaspati [thus] relates the duties of a king, a president, and 20 others :—"The president is the speaker; the king is the chastiser [or one who gives the order]; the assessors are the investigators of the subject-matter of litigation; the accountant is to count the money, and the scribe is to write the legal proceedings."

The same :—"The king should sit facing the east, the assessors the north, the accountant the west, and the scribe the south."

* Yājñavalkya mentions investigators other than [those consti-
* rating] the court [ch. ii, v. 30] :—"Officers appointed by the king, the Púḡas, the Śrenis, and the Kulas should be respected in the order they are mentioned in matters of legal proceedings between 30 men."⁴ Nripēndhikṛitáh (officers appointed by the king), [that is] the Práḡviváka (judge) and others. The Púḡas—communities of various traders living in the same village [and] of different castes. The Śrenis, the reverse of the Púḡas. The Kulas—aggregates of castemen, relatives, or family-members or brethren. Brihaspati also [says] :—"For those who wander in the forest there should be an office in the forest; for soldiers in the army; so for merchants in the caravans." Karaṇam (an office) [means] a court of justice.

Kātyāyana mentions the time for conducting legal proceedings :—"The king should determine judicial proceedings in the Court before noon, conformably to rules laid down in the Śāstras, putting down the inimically disposed. Those three divisions of the day, omitting an eighth, are declared the best time for legal proceedings as laid down in the Śāstras." [The first] half of the first watch being left, the three divisions [of one-eighth each] subsequent to it up to noonday [is the proper time]. Samvarta mentions the [following] as the excepted days:—"On these days, viz. the fourteenth,¹ the thirtieth, the fifteenth, and the eighth,¹ the wise should not attend to judicial investigations."² Brihaspati:—"Having sat there before mid-day along with the old, the councillors, and the dependants, the king should 10 attend to [judicial proceedings], and also listen to [the expositions of] the Purāṇas, and religious and moral laws." Tām, [that is] in the Court; Arthaśāstram, the science of polity.

In the matter of a conflict between religious and moral laws, says Nārada:—"Where there is a conflict between religious and moral laws, one should follow the precept of the religious law, disregarding that of the moral." As regards difference between two Dharma-Śāstras [or Smṛitis] Yājñavalkya says (chap. ii., v. 21):—"When two Smṛitis disagree, that which follows equity [as guided by] the practice of the old should prevail."³ Brihaspati speaks of the sin which attaches to 20 one who does not take nyāya (equity) into consideration. [Thus:—] "No decision should be made exclusively according to law because in a decision devoid of yukti (reason or equity), failure of justice occurs."⁴

[The king] should also take into consideration the customs of the country, &c.: for so says Brihaspati:—"Those usages of a country, tribe, and family which have been introduced by the ancients should be preserved intact, otherwise the subjects rebel; popular disaffection takes place, and the army and treasure are destroyed. The mother's brother's daughter is taken in marriage by the twice-born of the south. In the central country, [the twice-born] engage in service, 30 trade, and eat cows. [Twice-born] people of the east are fish-eaters, and their women are notoriously immoral. In the north, the women are addicted to drinking, and can be touched in their monthly courses by men." By thus acting they are not liable to prāyaścitta (penance) or legal correction.⁵ Pūrve (of the east), [meaning] living in the eastern parts. In some copies the reading is sarve (all), sarve (meaning) Brāhmanas and others. Damaḥ [means] correction or legal punishment. According to some writers the mention of prāyaścitta, &c., for the above acts, in the Smritis, applies to countries not included in the above texts. Others again who construe prāyaścitta—dama as prāyaścittarūpo yo damah, (correction in the nature of penance), maintain the exemption [of the people of these countries] from [temporal] punishment only,¹ but they hold that in other countries both punishment and penance will have to be undergone.

Vyāsa says :—“ The decision of a dispute among merchants, mechanics, cultivators, dyers, and such others, is impossible to be made by 10 others [i. e. persons of other persuasions] ; but it should be caused to be made by those who know those pursuits.”² [Says] Manu [chap. viii., v. 390] :—“ If a dispute arise among the twice-born on a matter affecting their several orders, a king desirous of his soul’s good should not propound improper law.”

Kātyāyana :—“ At the proper time, the king should thus interrogate the plaintiff standing before [him] in a humble posture, ‘ O man, fear not, say what you come for, and what your* complaint is.’ On his
* 8 coming into court he should be thus asked, ‘ From whom, where, when, and on what ground, [have you suffered] ?’³ Thus interro-

Nārada :—“ Until the investigation is gone through, the defendant

[Nārada] mentions four kinds of legal restraint :—(1) confinement to a place ; (2) limitation as to time ; (3) prohibition against leaving [the particular place] ; and (4) restriction from 30 [other] employment. Thus legal restraint is four-fold. He who is subject to it should not transgress it.”⁶

The same lays down punishment for one who transgresses legal restraint :—“ If one fit to be restrained, and placed under legal restraint, transgresses it, he makes himself liable to punishment.”⁷ The same

speaks of punishment being sometimes inflicted even on the person restraining, [thus]:—"He who enforces restraint by improper means, such as by [gagging the mouth] to stop the speech, or by stopping respiration, &c., is liable to punishment; not he who breaks through such [restraint]."¹

Under some conditions Nārada lays down no punishment for breaking through āsedha (legal restraint):—"He who is placed under restraint, while crossing a river, or when in an inaccessible road [forest], or in a bad place, or in a calamity, or the like, shall not be guilty of an offence if he break through such restraint." Kātyāyana prescribes 10

Those who ought not to be arrested. punishment for him who restrains those who ought not to be restrained:—"He who restrains him who ought not to be restrained is liable to punishment by the king. This is the rule."² The same names those who ought not to be put under restraint:—"Persons standing on a tree, or a hill, or seated on an elephant, a horse, a carriage, or in a boat; [these are all] persons in a dangerous place:—[therefore] all these are not to be put under restraint by those seeking right investigation of claims. Also persons afflicted with disease; persons placed in difficulties; and a yajamāna (a sacrificer)." 20

³ [In summoning, Nārada lays down the following rule]:—"The king should not cause to be summoned the infirm, the minor, the old, persons in dangerous places,⁴ and persons immersed in religious duties; a person who would be ruined (if he were summoned),⁵ a person suffering from deprivation of his wished-for objects; persons engaged in doing the king's service, or in celebrating festivals; the intoxicated; persons possessed of the devil; the idiot; persons involved in grief; the helpless [such as pupils, servants, &c.]; the woman who has no relatives to help her; a woman of a respectable family; a woman recently 30 delivered; a maiden of the highest tribe [a Brāhmaṇi]; [because] these females are declared to be dependent on their tribes. It is allowable to summon women upon whom their families are dependent;

Exception to the above. profligate women, prostitutes; women of low families and degraded women.

Having examined the complaint, the king may also summon in weighty matters hermits and the like who have repaired to the woods, without offending them. Having regard to the time and place and to the gravity or otherwise of matters, the king may even cause an infirm person, &c., to be brought slowly and slowly.¹ In some copies² the reading is yánaih, that is (by vehicles) [in place of the second śanaih, (slowly)].

A person who, being summoned, does not attend, is liable to punishment. Brihaspati to the same effect:—"Where a person having relations or family, being summoned, does not attend, through pride, [the king] should fix upon his punishment according to the nature 10 of the matter in dispute."³ Kātyāyana prescribes different punishments according to the [magnitude of the] subject-matters in dispute. "If the complaint be trivial, the fine should be fifty [pañās]; if it be of a middle kind, it should not be less than one hundred; in complaints of a serious nature it should always be not less than five hundred."⁴

Pitāmaha describes the proceedings to be taken after the arrival of the person summoned:—"The defendant should be made to stand with the complainant before the court." The third case [vādīnā is here used as meaning] 'along with.'

20 Kātyāyana:—"There [in the court] the complainant should [first] address, then the defendant; after them the śaṭṭayāh (assessors), and lastly prāḍvivāka (the judge)"⁵. Brihaspati:—"When plaintiff and defendant come [together], each saying 'I am first', 'I am * & first,' the plaint should be registered* in the order of their classes, or⁶ after examining the injury.

As regards Kātyāyana's text, "If a person other than a brother, father, son, or servant, litigating on behalf of another, speak falsely in litigation, he shall be liable to punishment," it is in reference to persons who are not duly appointed agents.

Repetition of the word steya (theft) is for the entire prohibition of a deputy [in a case of theft and offences of the like nature].¹ Praticāli [means] a deputy.

When the defendant is brought up, the proceedings of the plaintiff are thus described by Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 6]:—"That which the plaintiff relates should be recorded in the presence of the defendant, [and] marked 10 with the year, the month, the fortnight, the day, the name, the caste, and the like."² In another³ Smṛiti:—"That is termed a plaint presented to the king which contains artha (a cause of action), which briefly states the subject-matter fully; [which is] intelligible, expressed unambiguously, stated in a form cognizable [by the Court], non-figuratively, conformable to the original complaint, possible, uncontradictory, certain, capable of proof, concise, exhaustive, not impossible in regard to place and time, containing the year, the season, the month, the fortnight, the day, the country, the district, the village, the house, the subject-matter in dispute, the name of the tribe, description of the 20 person, and age; the measure or quantity of the subject-matter in dispute, the names of the complainant and the defendant, and marked with the names of their respective ancestors⁴ and several kings⁵; the cause of forbearance; the injury done to the complainant; and names of the original grantee and grantor." The use of the mention herein of the year, &c. will be declared in [the Section on] mortgages, &c. The use of the country and the like in some cases is explained in another Smṛiti.⁶ "In suits for immoveable property, these ten should be entered, viz. the country, the village, the site, the tribe, the names [of the plaintiff and defendant], names of neighbours, the name and dimensions of the 30 field, and the names of the father and grandfather and great-grandfather (of plaintiff and defendant), and a description of former kings."

Kātyāyana:—"The prāḍvivāka (Judge) should cause to be taken down plaintiff's statement, as told by him in his own way, on a board with chalk; then on paper after it has been corrected."⁷

² The first steya (theft) probably refers to the theft of gold, which ranks in Hindu law with the primary sins, such as Brahmahatyā, &c. mentioned in the text (see Manu, ch. xi, v. 54). The second steya stands for stealing generally.

Nārada declares the time of correction :—" He (prādvivāka) may make correction of plaintiff's statement before an answer to it is given; being stopped by the answer the correction should cease. So long as the defendant shall not enter an answer to the plaint, so long may plaintiff cause to be entered [in the plaint] whatever matter he wishes."¹

These being the characteristics of a [proper] plaint, those containing

opposite are evidently improper plaints; [still] they are thus described in another

- 10 Smṛiti:²—"The king should reject a false plaint which is impossible, disclosing no injury, [is] unmeaning, unfounded, incapable of proof, or contrary [to law, &c.]." Aprasiddham (impossible), for example :—"My imaginary heavenly flower was stolen;" Nirābādham, (disclosing no injury): such as, "He does his work by the light of my lamp;" Nirartham (unmeaning):—such as, "He deprived me of my [letters] ka, cha, ṭa, ta, pa"; Nish-prayojanam, (unfounded):—as, "My neighbour reads with proper intonation;" Asāddham, (incapable of proof):—as, "I was derided by this person with a scowling brow, &c.;"—Viruddham, (contrary):³—as, "I was abused by a dumb person;" or contrary to the
- 20 [usages of a] city, country, &c., as is declared in the following Smṛiti :—"That cause which is prohibited by the king, which is hostile to the citizens, or to the whole country, as also that which is hostile to
- * §. the *amātyās or councillors [or interests of trades]; others, again, which are hostile to the leading members of a city or town :—all these causes are declared inadmissible."

- Even more than one count in a declaration do not constitute it a false plaint, otherwise contradiction would arise to the following text of Kātyāyana, viz. :—"A king desirous of arriving at the truth may undoubtedly admit even that plaint which contains several counts
- 30 which are in themselves conformable to law." As for the text, "A plaint containing several titles or counts does not stand," it is to be understood to mean that those counts do not all stand at one time, but one after another.

The plaint being thus written, Yājñavalkya thus notes subsequent proceedings (ch. ii., v. 7) :—"The answer of the defendant who has heard the plaint should be taken down in writing in the presence of the complainant."

- Nārada thus defines the answer :—"Men versed in law consider that an answer which meets the points contained in the plaint, which is
- 40 concise and reasonable, unambiguous, consistent, and easy to understand without an explanation.”¹ Kātyāyana mentions its four varieties :—“ Answer is of four kinds, viz. :—either by a denial, or by confession, or by a special plea, or by the plea of a former trial.”

The same author thus describes the answer of denial :—“ If the defendant should make a denial of the claim, that answer is known in law as a denial.”²

Denial.

The same [author] details it as of four kinds :—“(1) This is false; (2) I know it not; (3) I was not present then; and (4) I was not born at that time: thus is the four-fold character of the answer of denial.”³ 10

The answer of confession is described in another Smṛiti⁴ :—“ An assent to the claim is declared to be an answer by way of confession.”

Confession or admission.

Nārada thus describes the answer by a special plea or exception :—“ If the defendant, admitting the claim set in writing by the plaintiff, sets up a plea, it is called a plea of special exception.”⁵

Special plea or exception.

Kātyāyana describes the plea of former judgment :—“ If a person, though defeated at law, sue again, he should be answered, ‘ You were defeated 20 formerly.’ This is called the plea of former judgment.”

Former judgment or trial.

These being the characteristics of a [proper] answer, those answers which are destitute of these characteristics though self-evidently false, still their nature is thus explained in another Smṛiti :—“ An answer which is dubious, not to the point, too confined, too extensive, meeting a part of the plaint, and so on, cannot be an answer. An answer which is irrelevant, incomplete, mysterious, inconsistent, not construable without a commentary, and unreasonable does not prevail.”⁶ Kātyāyana also :—“ That is no answer which confesses to one count of the declaration, sets up a special exception to another, and 30 makes a denial of a third.” The same author explains the reason why [the above] is not an answer :—“ In one suit burden of proof cannot rest on both the litigant parties, nor can both obtain the judgment, nor can two answers be offered in proof at once.”⁷ Here the meaning is this :—

In a mixture of the answers of denial and by special exception, proof is due from both parties. Because Nārada declares that, “ In the case of a denial, the proof rests on the plaintiff; in the case of a special exception, [it rests] on the defendant." Therefore, the burden of proof in one suit resting on both, their proofs [must be opposed to each other]. So also in a mixture of answers, by the pleas of special exception and of former judgment, the burden of double proof lies on the defendant alone; for there is a text of Vyāsa:—"In pleas of former judgment and of special exception, the defendant must exhibit proof." And here, by a text of the same author that, "In a plea of former judgment, by the decree 10 and also by the Judge and the like," proof in a plea of former judgment must be exhibited by the production of the decree, or by those who witnessed the former judgment. Again, in an answer by a special exception [the proof must be exhibited] by witnesses, documents, &c.; so here [in a mixture of special exception and former judgment] also there is opposition to law. In like manner it is to

 20 [speaks]:—"If a denial and a special exception should be contained together, and if the plea of confession [be made] with any other, then which answer is admissible? In such a case, that should be known as an unmixed answer which may be most important, or conducive to proof. An answer other than this [becomes a mixed one.]" 'Becomes a mixed one:' is understood. The meaning of it is that in a suit for gold and clothes (if it is pleaded that gold was not received, but clothes were received and returned,) proceedings should first be taken in regard to gold, afterwards with regard to clothes. The same rule should be observed in regard to the mixture of the pleas of denial and former judgment, 30 ment, and those of special exception and a former judgment. So in the same suit [for gold and clothes], if it is pleaded that gold was received, but that clothes were not received, or being received were returned, or if defendant plead in reference to the clothes, 'I won the cause before,' then in that case proceedings should be taken in reference to clothes only, not in reference to gold, for, although gold is more valuable, there is no necessity of proof in regard to it. When it is complained 'This is my cow; she was missing on a certain day; I find her to-day in this [man's] house;' and where it is pleaded in defence, "The plaint is false; she was in our house even before 40 the time specified [in the plaint]," this is not a void answer, for although here there are the pleas of denial and special exception, they embrace the whole matter in dispute. This is an answer of denial with a special exception. Here the proof rests on the defendant, not on the plaintiff. For, says Háríta, "Even in an answer involving a denial and a special exception, the special exception is only to be considered." In like manner, where there are the pleas of denial and former judgment, and those of special exception and former judgment, there is no void answer if they embrace the whole subject-matter in dispute. Here in both cases the proof lies on the defendant alone. There is no matter whatever in which proof lies on both the parties. This will suffice.

Yájñavalkya specifies the order of proof after the answer has been 10 recorded (ch. ii, vv. 7, 8)—"Next, the plaintiff should immediately have evidence written down in support of the matter in dispute. If it succeed, he wins; if it do not prevail, he fails." This refers to the answer by denial. In other kinds of answer the burden of proof lies on the defendant alone, as Háríta says:—"In answer by [pleas of] former judgment and special exception, the defendant should exhibit proof. In the plea of denial the plaintiff [should exhibit it]. In the plea of confession there is no need of it." ¹

Yájñavalkya thus describes the four-fold character of legal procedure (ch. ii, v. 8):—"This legal procedure is declared to be of a four-fold 20 character in litigation." The four parts of it are explained in another Smṛiti:—"The plaint, the answer, the proof, and the decision are laid down in their proper order as the four divisions of it; hence [it is] called four-fold."²

But this refers to answers other than the answer of confession; for it [the answer of confession] is two-fold, as Brihaspati says:—"In pleas of denial and a special exception, legal procedure should be known as four-fold; but in that of confession it is two-fold."

Yájñavalkya (ch. ii, vv. 9, 10):—"Until the complaint is cleared, no counter-claim should be allowed to 30
 Recrimination. be brought against the complainant; nor should any other be allowed to charge a person already labouring under a charge; nor should the original declaration be allowed to be changed." But in assaults and offences [like theft], a counter-charge is allowable. Narada:—"That man who, abandoning his former ground of action, has recourse to another, shall, from the confession of his grounds, become the losing plaintiff."³ The losing plaintiff becomes liable to punishment, but does not lose the suit in law; and this should be understood in reference to civil suits. As the same [author says]:—"In all civil suits there is no failure for a fraud in 40 speech. [For example,] in suits for seduction, land, and non-payment of debt, the plaintiff, though he is liable to punishment [for fraudulent speech], does not lose his claim."¹ The latter hemistich is added to illustrate the former. Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 17) :—"When there are witnesses on both sides, witnesses of the first party [are to be examined]. If the first side be invalidated, witnesses of the other side should be examined." Purvavādinah (of the first party) [means] of the complainant; Pūrva-Pakṣah (first side) [means] the com-

 * 2. plaint.* Adharābhūtā (if it be invalidated) [that is,] if there be nothing to be proved by reason of the defendants' admission, 10 or by pleading a special cause. The mention of witnesses is for including other kinds of evidence also.

The same [Yājñavalkya, ch. ii., v. 10] :—"A substantial surety from each party should be taken for the satisfaction of the judgment." Kāryanir-20 nayah, (For the satisfaction of the judgment,) [that is] [who will be able] to fulfil [the terms of] the judgment.

Kātyāyana thus enumerates those who are inadmissible as sureties :—
 "A master, an enemy, a person in the Inadmissible sureties employment of the master, a person
 20 in confinement, a person sentenced [to a fine], a wayward person, a person [with an inheritance in prospect], a destitute person, a person sentenced to transportation out of the country, a person in the service of Government, anchorites, a person unable to pay the [claiming] creditor and an equal fine to the king, and an unknown person, are each of them incompetent to be admitted as sureties."²

Niruddhah (a person in confinement), a person chained in irons, &c.; Samāyasthah (a wayward person), vicious; Rikṭhī (a person with an inheritance) in prospect, such as the son, the grandson, &c.; Rikṭah [means] poor; Anyatrāvāsīṭah (a transported person), a person
 30 banished from a country. Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 52) :—"Now no transaction of surety, debt, and giving evidence is recognized between brothers, husband and wife, and father and son; provided they are undivided."³ Kātyāyana thus ordains if no surety is furnished :—"If no substantial surety able to meet the decision be forthcoming on behalf of plaintiff, he should be kept under surveillance. and at the end of the day [be made to] pay the wages of the guard."⁴ The same :—"A twice-born unable to give security should be watched by guards. A Śūdra and the like unable to give security should be put in chains."

Nārada thus describes a suitor with an inadmissible claim :—“ That man who, abandoning his former action, has recourse again to another, should, from the confession of actions, be known a false suitor.” Yājñavalkya thus describes a party that is in the wrong (ch. ii., vv. 13, 14, 15) :—“ He who shifts from place to place, licks his own lips, whose forehead perspires, whose countenance changes colour, who with a dry tongue and stumbling speech talks much, incoherently, who does not heed the speech or sight [of another], who bites his lips, who by mental, vocal, and bodily acts falls into the sickly state, [he] is considered a tainted person, whether [he be] a complainant 10 or a witness [giving evidence].”¹ Sṛikkini [means] the ends of the lips.

EVIDENCE.

Now the nature of Evidence. Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 22) :—“ Evidence is laid down to be writing, possession, and witnesses. In the absence of any one of these, a form of an ordeal is prescribed.”² Also, Kātyāyana :—“ If one adduces human evidence, and another appeals to a divine test, in that case the king should admit the human evidence, not the divine test. Even if human testimony 20 offered by litigating parties do not cover the whole subject-matter of the suit, it should be received in preference to a divine test, though this latter may cover the whole ground. In litigation, where there are witnesses, no divine test is allowed; and when there is writing, there should be no ordeal nor witnesses. As for the rules laid down for the Pugas, the Srenis,³ the Ganas, and other trades, the evidence [to be used by them] is writing,⁴ not an ordeal, nor* witnesses.⁵

Bṛihaspati mentions the superiority of ordeal in some cases:—"A person committing fraud in jewels, pearls, and coins, a person taking away a deposit, a person [wounding another], and a person enjoying another's wife, are always to be examined by the ordeal of an oath. In charges of deadly sins, if witnesses are present, if a party submit to ordeal, [the king] should not examine witnesses." Vyāsa:—"If a person says, 'I did not make this document; he forged it.' In such a dispute, disregarding that writing, the decision is to be made by ordeal. If crime is committed in a desolate wood, on a night, or in the inner parts of a house, and if a deposit is denied, proof by ordeal is proper." Bṛihaspati:—"Where a doubt arises in a document or in oral evidence, and where inference is uncertain, there ordeal is the means of clearing it."

The same lays down the choice either of witnesses or ordeal in some cases:—"When a case of robbery [or other sāhaya], or of an assault or libel, and in deeds proceeding from violence, either witnesses or ordeal [are admissible].¹ In cases of debt, writing or witnesses or even a little reasoning and the like or proof by ordeal are laid down [by sages actuated] with a desire for the welfare of the subject." 20 Yuktilesāh (a little reasoning), even partial proof by inference. Vāclika pārushya (In an assault by words), meaning a slander of the nature of an abuse, such as, 'Thou art a killer of a Bráhmaṇa or the like.' As for the text of Kātyāyana, "In an assault by words [or slander] and in a dispute for land, no ordeal should be resorted to," this refers to petty libels. The mention of land is only for the sake of illustration of all immoveables; as Pitāmaha says:—"In disputes about immoveable property, ordeals should be excluded." This prohibition of ordeals is whenever there are witnesses, &c. And the same writer says to the same effect:—"One should support these [disputes about immove- 30 able property] by witnesses, writing, and possession."—The same:—"When there is no writing, no possession, and no witnesses, and no probability of an ordeal, then the king is the authority. [For] by him all doubtful matters in dispute are determined. The deciding authority (or proof) [in such a case] is the king, since he is the lord of all."² Here end the Īyachāramātrikās or introductory essentials of judicature.

WRITINGS.

Now, of Writings. Bṛihaspati [says] on writings:—"Writings are declared to be of three kinds;—those written by the king, those written at a particular place, and those written by an individual with his own hand." 40

Their subdivisions again are numerous.”¹ As to what Vasishtha [says] :—“ Writings are known to be of two kinds,—royal and popular.” Thus is the two-fold division declared. This is made by recognizing no difference between writings written at a particular place, and those written by an individual in his own hand. Laukikam [is also called] Jānapadam (popular). The author of the Smṛiti Sangraha says :—“ Writings are declared to be two-fold, those [made] by the king, and those by the people.” Brihaspati :—“ Writings by the people are seven-fold, [viz.] a partition deed, a deed of gift, a deed of purchase, a deed of pledge 10
 Their divisions. or mortgage, a deed of agreement, a bondsman’s deed, a money bond, and the like.* The king’s
 * 1. orders are of three kinds. Where brothers being divided of their own will, execute a deed of separation among themselves, it is called a partition-deed. Land being given, the writing [making the gift] that is made enduring till the sun and moon exist, and which should not be cut down or stolen, that writing is known as a deed of gift. When one having bought a house, a field, or the like, gets a deed drawn containing an exact statement of the price, that is called a deed of purchase. When one having pledged moveable or immoveable property 20 executes a document containing conditions whether the thing pledged is to be preserved or used, it is called a deed of pledge or mortgage. When the people of a village or a district execute a mutually approved document² laying down a rule not opposed to the king’s laws, that is called a deed of agreement. That writing which a person destitute of clothes and food passes in a wood, stating, ‘I will do your work,’ is called a bondsman’s deed. A deed of debt which a person having borrowed money at interest himself executes and causes to be executed³ is called by the wise a money bond.”⁴ By the word Ādi (and the like) are to be understood a deed of purification and the like. 30

A deed of purification and others are thus spoken of by Kātyāyana :—
 “When an accusation [brought by the people] is got over by people by doing penance, a writing [made by the people] and attested by witnesses [declaring such purification] is called a deed of purification. When an accusation is brought, the writing passed amongst the leading people, reciting how it ended, is to be known [as] a deed of peace. When a boundary dispute is decided, the writing [reciting the decision] is called a deed of boundary [settlement].”

⁴ Vīr. I. 59, p. 2.

Prajapati states what is a deed of double bailment:—"If a creditor pledge to another a thing pledged to himself for the same money, he should make a deed of pledge for the same, and should deliver to him the original [deed of pledge]."¹

Yājñavalkya also (ch. ii., v. 94):—"Having paid the debt, the writing should be caused to be torn, or another should be made for acquittance."²

Nārada mentions the difference between the aforesaid writings in one's own hand and those made by another:—"Writings are of two 10 kinds, those made in one's own hand and those made by another, and without attestations or with them [respectively]. Their validity depends upon the usage of the country."³ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 89]:—"A writing in one's own hand, though without witnesses, is declared to be evidence, provided it be not caused by force or fraud." Balam, [that is] force, duress; Upadhik [fraud through] covetousness, &c. The same [author] states a distinction in regard to writings made by another (Yājñavalkya, ch. ii., vv. 84, 85):—"Whatever contract is entered into by mutual consent, there should be writing [made about it] attested by witnesses, headed with the name of the creditor, giving the year, the 20 month, the fortnight, the day [of the month], names, tribes, families of the parties, their scholastic titles, the names of their fathers, &c." Sabrahmachārikam (scholastic title), an epithet of respect containing the Bahurich [or any other Veda; and its branch] as Bahurichah (a student of the Bahurich branch); Kathich (a student of the Kathah branch of the Yajurveda), &c. The same [author] says (ch. ii., vv. 86, 87, and 88):—"When the terms of a contract are written down, the debtor should sign his name with his own hand, adding, 'What is written above has the assent of me, son of such a one' [86]. The witnesses should sign with their fathers' names before [their own], thus:—"Here 30 I, so and so, am a witness." These witnesses should be even [87]. Then, at the end, the person who wrote the document should write, 'At the request of both parties, this is written by me, so and so, son of such and such' [88]." Samāh (even), [that is even] in number and qualifications. According to some, the particle a may be prefixed to the word Samāh, thus making asamāh, or uneven.⁴

Nārada:—"If a debtor be ignorant of writing, he [may] cause his assent to be written, and if a witness be so ignorant, he should cause his attestation [to be made] by another witness in the presence of all the witnesses."⁵

Yājñavalkya and Bṛhaspati explain the three kinds of royal writings before mentioned (Yājñavalkya, ch. i., vv. 317, 318, 319, 320):—"Having given land or a corody, let the king execute a writing of the gift [317] for the information of future blessed kings. On a piece of cloth or a copper-plate marked above with his seal, [318] the king, having written * ११ down the names of himself and of his ancestors, and* the dimensions of the gift and a description of its boundaries, [319], should issue a permanent grant bearing date, and his signature made by his own hand" [320]. Nibandhah (corody), what is given by the 10 king, &c. out of the produce of a mine and the like. Pratigrahaḥ [is] that which is received as a gift, such as land, &c. Parimāṇam [means] its dimensions. Dānam, or gift, [is] that which is given, such as a house, &c. Ohheda [means] boundaries or its limits. Upavarṇanam (its description) [means] the mention of its boundaries, &c. [so as to identify it].

Likewise [Bṛhaspati]:—"When a king, pleased with the services, valour, and the like of any one, grants land, &c. by a writing, that writing is called Prasādalikhita (a writing of favour). When, after the decision of a suit by [investigation into the] proofs of both parties, the 20 king gives a writing to the successful party, it is called a jayapatra (a writing of success, or a decree).

Vyāsa speaks of a king's substitute thus:—"The Secretary for Peace and War, by command of the King himself, may write down the royal mandate on a copper-plate or cloth." The same author observes that the king should write his signature of assent to it:—" [The Secretary for Peace and War should write down] the boundaries and measurement, and the king should himself write with his own hand, 'I, so and so, son of such and such a king, assent.' " Sanniveśam (boundaries) and pramāṇam (measurement); cha (and) must be connected with the 30 preceding sentence [or verse].

Vasiṣṭha mentions four kinds of royal writings:—A śāsana or mandate should be known as the first. Next is a jayapatra, or a writing of success [a decree]; āñjāpatra, or an edict; and a prañjāpanāpatra, a letter conveying a request. This is the four-fold division of royal writings. That by which a commission is issued to the dependent kings, servants, the governors of provinces, and the like is called an edict. That letter by which a request is communicated to a sacrificing priest, a family priest, a preceptor, and such worthy and revered personages, is called a letter of request."² Śāsana (a mandate) and jayapatra (a 40 decree) have been explained before.

Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 91):—"If a document is in another country, if it is unintelligible, if it is lost, effaced, or stolen; likewise if it is torn, burnt, or cut asunder, [the king] should cause another to be made."¹ Nārada:—"If a document is left in another country, if it is worn out or unintelligible, or stolen, in the case in which it exists, time should be allowed [for its production,] and in those cases in which it does not exist, attestors should be examined."² Drashṭārah, [means] attesting witnesses.

- 10 In their absence recourse should be had to an ordeal, from a text of Kātyāyana:—"When there is no writing or witnesses in a suit, [the king] should prescribe an ordeal." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 92]:—"The correctness of a disputed or doubtful writing may be established by [comparing it with] something written by the [party writing] with his own hand, and the like; [also] by presumption, by confrontation [of parties], by direct proof, by marks, by previous connexion, by a [probability of] title, and by inference." Yuktiḥ (presumption), inference from circumstances; Prāptiḥ (confrontation) is a meeting of the parties in one place; Chiknam (mark), [such as] impression of a seal, 20 &c., Kriyā (direct proof), witnesses and the like; Sambandhah (connexion), established connexion; Āgamah (probability of title), that is, some probable mode of acquisition; Hetuḥ [means] inference [from given premises]. Prajāpati:—"The decision in respect of a royal grant should be made with particular care by an inspection of his own handwriting and seal, and the handwriting of the writing."

- Bṛihaspati:—A document executed by a dying person, an enemy, a person oppressed with fear, a diseased person, a woman, an insane or intoxicated person, a person in distress, at night, by fraud, or by force, does 30 not stand good. Where even one witness attesting a writing is infamous, and reproached by the people, or where the writer thereof is of a similar character, it is called a false document."³

POSSESSION.

Nārada:—"Possession with pure title becomes proof; with a vicious title, possession does not amount to proof."⁴ Vyāsa distinguishes possession by other adjectives similar to 'having title,' [thus]:—"It is desirable that possession be five-fold, with a title lasting for a long

 * १२ time, continuous, uninterrupted, and* in the neighbourhood of the adverse party.”¹

Mere possession is not sufficient to constitute a valid claim, as Nārada observes:—“He who pleads enjoyment alone, and no title at all, should be considered a thief by pretence of false possession.”² This should be understood to refer to a period of time fit for recollection [of legal title]; but where it is unfit for recollection, the same author observes that free enjoyment is good evidence. Thus [in the case of a transaction] within the memory of man,³ it is desirable that enjoyment 10 of land should be based on title [before it is recognized]; [but in the case of a transaction] beyond the memory of man, enjoyment by three successive generations suffices, owing to the absence of proof [to the contrary], even in the absence of title.” Anugamābhāvāt. (Owing to the absence of proofs) that is, owing to the impossibility of determining the absence of title by reason of the improbability of meeting with direct evidence [to that effect]. In cases occurring at a time beyond [legal] memory when the memory of a want of title [is handed down] by tradition, the same [author observes]:—“On him, the sinful man who enjoys possession without title even for several hundred 20 years, the king should inflict the punishment due to a thief.”⁴ As to what says the same author:—“That which has been even unjustly enjoyed by three ancestors, including the father [of the present occupant], cannot be taken away from him, as it has come through three descents in succession,” it means that what has been enjoyed by three ancestors, including the father, even without title, cannot be taken away; much less [can that be taken away] where there is improbability of direct evidence. Even in the text of Hārīta, viz.:—“When possession may have been enjoyed by three former persons without a good title, dating from its commencement, it cannot be taken away, having passed 30 through three successive generations,” the meaning to be understood [is] ‘without a title which does not reach the beginning’—and not ‘without any title at all.’ Again, when Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 28] says, “He who has acquired a title must, when [the title is] impugned, prove it; neither his son, nor his [son’s] son, [are required to prove it]: for [in their case] possession carries greater weight,” it means that the acquirer of title will be amerced if he does not prove his title; but his son, &c. will not be amerced [if they fail to prove it]—that is, if they do not succeed in establishing title. This is the conclusion. Thus says Hārīta :—“The acquirer of a title not proving it is liable to amercement, not his son, his [son’s] son; but both [the son and his son] are liable to be deprived of the thing possessed as well as himself.”¹

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 29] :—“If a person whose title is impugned should die, his heir should establish it; in such a case enjoyment without title is no proof.” Rikthi (heir), a partaker of the heritage, such as the son, &c.; tam [means] to the title.

Possession for a long time is proof: this is contrary [to the conclusion of Yājñavalkya]: because the plaintiff loses even by short possession [of the opponent. This is the difficulty]. Thus observes the same [ch. ii, v. 24] :—“To him who sees another enjoy his land for twenty or his money for ten years, loss [of that thing] occurs.”² [The difficulty] is thus answered. It only means that the owner shall lose the profits derivable from the land, or the like, for the time that he sees another enjoy it without interruption by himself,—not that he shall also lose the land or the like thing [money, &c.]; unless such an interpretation is made, it would be opposed to the text [quoted above] :—“He who enjoys without a title, &c.”

Kātyāyana :—No argument resting on possession should be adduced, by the forcible possessor or his son, in the case of a beast, a woman, a man, &c. This is the law ordained.”³ Nārada :—“A pledge [or mortgage], boundaries, an infant’s wealth, a sealed deposit, an open deposit,⁴ women, the king’s or the Śrotriya’s property; these are not lost [to the owner] by another’s possession [of them].”⁵ Manu [ch. viii, v. 146,] :—“A milch cow, a camel, a riding-horse, an animal to be trained, and other things used with friendly assent, are never lost to the owner.” Damyah prayujyate, [that is] delivered over for the purpose of being broken. be cleared by means of witnesses who have derived their knowledge by having seen or heard them."¹

Bṛihaspati declares their divisions :—"Witnesses are declared to be of twelve sorts,—written, caused to be written, concealed, recollected, a member of the family, a messenger, a spontaneous witness, one in answer, another man employed in the business, the king, his superintendent, and likewise the [people of the] village."² Likhitah (written)—entered by the plaintiff in a deed; Lekhitah (caused to be entered) [in a deed] by the defendant at plaintiff's request; Gādhaḥ (concealed), one made to hear [the defendant] behind partition or the like; Smāritah (recollected), reminded again and again of the business; Yādṛichhikah (spontaneous), a witness coming to give evidence of his own accord; Uttarah (one in answer), speaking after witnesses upon hearing or being told [their evidence]; Adhyakṣah (superintendent) the judge; and this is meant to include the assessors and other [members of the Court] by reason of the text of Kātyāyana :—"The scribe, the judge, and assessors in succession, [the one in the absence of the other]."³

The same (Bṛihaspati) [says] :—"There should be nine, seven, five or four, or even three (witnesses). If they 20
 Their number. be Śrotṛiyas (i.e. learned in the Vedās), then two should be examined. A single witness should never be examined. Written and concealed witnesses must be two [of each sort]; spontaneous, recollected, men of the family, as also those called in answer, must be three, four, or five; a single witness is sufficient for proof, if he be a messenger, an accountant, one employed in the business, the king, or the judge. Of the written and such-like witnesses one only is enough [if examined] with the consent of both parties, as Yājñavalkya observes. [ch. ii., v. 72] :—"With the consent of both parties, even one person becomes [suf- 30

Kātyāyana says that even one witness is good in cases of deposit and the like even if he be not an Āpta, or always truth-telling witness. "In a very secret deposit, even a single witness is declared [sufficient] evidence; in things borrowed for use even one individual sent by the plaintiff may become a witness."⁶ Yāchitam 40 (things borrowed for use) ornaments, &c. such as earrings and the like brought on the occasion of a marriage, &c.

The same authority considers one witness sufficient in disputes about sales. "He by whom an article for sale is made, should be made to prove it. In a dispute about it he alone is declared to be proof."¹

And Vyāsa declares their qualifications [i.e. of witnesses] :—"Persons endued with a sense of justice, persons having sons, persons born in distinguished families,² persons of pure extraction, truth-tellers, persons performing the rites prescribed in the Vedās and Smṛitis, 10 persons devoid of anger and envy, Śrotṛiyas (persons versed in the Vedas), persons not dependent upon others, learned persons, persons residing in the place, and people in the prime of manhood should be made witnesses in [transactions of] debt, &c. by the wise." Nārada :—"Among Śreṇis,³ the heads of the Śreṇis, among Vargās, heads of vargas; amongst outside people, persons living outside, and women among women, become witnesses."⁴ Kātyāyana thus mentions the vargis (heads of a varga) :—"The Lingis (persons wearing a linga or a symbol), the Śreṇis, the Pūgas⁵, and other communities of traders, so also members of other communities : these Bhṛigu calls 20 vargās (guilds or tribes). The Nāyakās or leaders of the communities of Dāsas [or slaves]⁶ the Chāraṇas (bards), the wrestlers, those who live [by driving] of elephants, horses, and carriages, are called vargis. Yājñavalkya speaks of witnesses even of different castes [ch. ii, v. 69] :—"Witnesses [it should be known] ought to be more than three; [they should be] devoted to the performance of rites prescribed in the Vedas and Smṛitis; of the same caste, of the same class; [failing these] all witnesses of any caste or class."

The same [author] mentions inadmissible [witnesses] [ch. ii, v. 70, 71] :—"A woman, an infant, an old man,⁷ a gambler, an intoxicated 30 person, a person possessed by an evil spirit, an infamous person, a performer on the stage, an infidel, a forger, a deformed person, one degraded from caste, a friend, one interested in the subject-matter of the suit, a partner, an enemy, a thief, a ferocious person, one * 18 known to be a liar, an outcaste, and the like are inadmissible* witnesses."⁸ Niradhūta (an outcaste) a person cast out by his

Brihaspati:—"The mother's father, the father's brother, the wife's brother, and mother's brother, the brother, the friend, and the son-in-law are bad witnesses in all disputes."¹ Nārada:—"Ho who, not being mentioned, comes of his own accord and speaks is technically called a self-spoken man. He is not fit to be a witness."² Kṛtyāyana:—"Should one of the witnesses recorded or summoned by a party utter a falsehood, all those witnesses become incompetent witnesses."³

Nārada speaks of the competency of even those [described above as inadmissible] to give evidence in some 10 cases:—"Slaves, wicked men, and others who are declared to be bad witnesses,—these also may be admissible as witnesses, regard being had to the gravity of the matter [in dispute]."

In the absence of [other] witnesses, [says]—Mann [ch. viii., v. 70]:—

"If there be no witness, even a woman, an infant, an old man, a pupil, or a kinsman, or a slave, or a servant may be admitted to give evidence."

Yājñavalkya [ch ii., v. 72] "In adultery, theft, assaults, and a Sāhasa (a heinous offence), any person may be a witness." Although adultery, &c., are included in the term Sāhasa, they are separately mentioned to include adultery, &c., committed in secret. Uśanas:—

"A slave, a blind person, a deaf person, a leper, a woman, a minor, an old person, and the like,—even these, if uninterested, are deemed competent witnesses in a Sāhasa, [or a heinous offence]." Anabhisambaddhāh (uninterested) impartial.

witnesses is liable to pay a fine equal to an equal amount."⁴ Vādi (litigant) here means the defendant. Tatsamam (of equal amount), equal to the sum claimed in the action.⁵

Vyāsa:—"The faults of witnesses are 30 to be stated in court by the defendant; when they are all committed to writing; they being read, [the witnesses should be required] to reply to them." The meaning is that having regard to the faults set in writing, the witnesses should be required by the assessors to give [satisfactory] explanation on the subject. The same:—"In the answer by admission,⁶ witnesses are never fit [to be called]; [in an answer given] otherwise, the defendant should, by evidence, rebut [the plain-tiff's witnesses]. If the defendant does not clearly rebut, he must pay a fine; the witnesses if rebutted [or contradicted], are to be rejected as improper witnesses. In like manner, if the plaintiff sits quiet [in the presence] of the [opponents proper] witnesses, he must pay a fine as laid down by law."¹ Atonyathá (Otherwise), means in an answer except that of admission. Bhāvaniyah (Rebut) that is he should make them admit their faults; or should bring their faults home to them. Kriyayá, i. e. by evidence. The rebutting is to be as clear as possible; this is the meaning. But the text "objections 10 to or faults of witnesses so established by the people in general are to be admitted by the Assessors [as such], and are not to be considered as requiring proof lest there be the impropriety committed [of requiring an endless series of proofs]"² has reference to witnesses publicly known to be truthful. In case of these disqualifications being unknown to the defendant, the same author says:—"Those faults in proof should be exposed by the litigant; and those concealed should be made clear by the assessors in time by the [aid of the] Sāstra."

The meaning is that concealed faults should be exposed by expounding the Sāstra before the examination of witnesses [begins]. Thereafter says Brihaspati, they should not be mentioned. Thus—"Whatever faults in or objections to a document or witnesses there may be, they should be declared at the trial before examining witnesses; if they be afterwards spoken to, they should not be reckoned as faults"³ uktán, that is the speaker's beginning to speak [should be stopped]; this is the meaning.⁴ The termination ktah [in the word uktah above] denotes an agent according to the aphorism [of Panini] "And the affix ktah applied to an action begun, denotes, an agent." [ch. iii., qr. iv. 1.] In such a case, their punishment is thus stated by Kātyāyana:—"He who, when 30 the matter in dispute has been deposed to, may object, as disqualified, to witnesses not objected to before, and shall not give reasons in support of his objections, shall be fined in the lowest amercement."⁵ If the witnesses are unable to clear themselves of the objections brought against them, the party interested must do it, as Brihaspati says,—

"He whose documents or witnesses are found fault with in an action, cannot gain his cause, until he clears up the faults found in it."¹ tat (It) signifies document &c.

Kātyāyana* prescribes punishment to suborners of false witnesses [thus]:—He who with a desire to gain a cause, sets up false witnesses, shall be deprived of every thing belonging to him, and should also be made to lose his cause."² Nirishayam [that is] lose the subject-matter of the claim. Nārada describes the means for determining [who are] false witnesses, "He who appears as it were uneasy by 10 reason of the wickedness of his own crimes, shifts from place to place or runs after [another person], who suddenly coughs much, and likewise draws his breath now and again, who scratches the ground with his feet, who shakes his hands and clothes, the colour of whose countenance changes, and whose forehead sweats, whose lips become dry, who looks above and about him, and who talks much irrelevantly, in a hurried manner, and without being questioned, should be known as a false witness. Such a wretch should be punished severely."³

Kātyāyana and also Manu [ch. viii., v. 87, 79, 80] state the mode of examining witnesses:—"In the forenoon, 20 the Judge being purified, should ask the twice-born to give true evidence in the presence of [a symbol of] divinity and Brāhmaṇas, their faces being turned to the north or to the east [87]. The witnesses being assembled in the middle of the Court-room, in the presence of the plaintiff and the defendant, the judge should examine them, after addressing them all in the following manner [79]. All that ye know to have reciprocally taken place between the parties in this case, declare with truth, for your evidence in this case is [required]"⁴ [80].

In disputes about kine, horses, and the like, the same [Kātyāyana]⁵ 80 requires also the presence of the subject-matter of the claim:—"In the presence of the plaintiff and the defendant, and near the subject-matter of the dispute, the Judge should require them to produce the evidence of witnesses openly, and never behind. [Evidence may sometimes be taken] in the vicinity of the subject-matter in dispute even in the absence of them both. This rule holds in [the case of] quadrupods, bipods, and immovables. In disputes about articles of weight, of number, and of measure, the judge may ask witnesses to give their evidence even in the absence of the matters in dispute: not in other cases."¹ Tayorapivinā kvachit (Sometimes, even in the absence of them both.) [The meaning is that] even without the presence of the plaintiff and defendant, [but] in the vicinity of the thing in dispute in some cases, [such as in the case of] quadrupeds, &c.; Taulyam (articles of weight), things fit to be weighed, such as gold, &c. Garimam (Of number), fit to be numbered, such as coins, &c. Meyam (of measure) fit to be measured, such as rice, wheat, &c. Abhāvepi (even in the 10 absence of) that is of the matter in dispute [such things of weight, &c.], kriyākāreshu (in disputes) [that is] in legal proceedings. In cases of murder the depositions of witnesses should be taken in presence of Śiva,² as the same³ author observes:—"In cases of killing living creatures, witnesses should be required to give their evidence in presence of Śiva, in the absence of any marks of killing; but if there be marks, they [the marks] should be exhibited and proved."⁴ Tat (that), signifies the depositions of witnesses which should be taken [in the presence of Śivā] in the absence of any marks of killing; Anyathā (otherwise) when there are marks of killing. The same:—"Procras 20 tination must not be made by the king in examining witnesses; great sin arises from procrastination, such as failure in performing religious acts [during the time lost]⁵."

Nārada:—"Having called witnesses and bound them firmly by an oath, he should examine them all separately, all of them being known to be following the rules laid down by law, and being acquainted with the matter in dispute."⁶ Vāsishṭha,—“That act which was seen by all of them together should be told by them in the same manner; but that [which was seen by them] separately should be related separately by each. But where an act has become known to witnesses at different 30 times, there witnesses must be examined separately. Thus is the rule laid down.”⁷ Manu [ch. viii., vv. 118, 102];—"A Brāhmaṇa should be required to swear by [his] truth, a Kshatriya by his riding animal and his weapons, a Vaiśya by his kine, grain, and gold, a Śūdra by [imprecating on his head if he speak falsely] all sins [118]. The Brāhmaṇas who tend herds of cattle, who trade, who practise mechanical arts, who live by dancing and singing, who are hired servants or usurers, should be dealt with as [if they were] Śūdras [102].” “Those who are fallen from their proper vileges of the twice-born, should be treated as Śúdras".¹ 'By thy speaking falsely, thy truth will perish': [this in the case of the Bráhmaṇa] and the like; such is the meaning. The test for determining the Test of evidence. truth or falsehood in the depositions of witnesses is thus declared, [by Bṛihaspati].—"The king should declare the matter in dispute as proved, if the evidence be warranted by or conformable to, the place, time, age, thing in dispute, and the name and caste [of the deponent]".² Yājñavalkya lays down a rule for deciding when witnesses make contradictory statements. [ch. ii., v. 78].* "If the evidence is contradic-

The same author prescribes punishment for not deposing after having agreed to give evidence [ch. ii., v. 76] :—"A person not giving evidence should be made to pay by the king the whole debt together with a tenth added thereto on the forty-sixth day."³ Sarvam (the whole), including interest. Sadaśabandhakam (together with a tenth) that is, together with a tenth share added thereto. The tenth share is 20 to be received by the king, and the creditor should receive the debt with interest as stated in the Mitaksharā.⁴

The same lays down punishment for one who having knowledge [of the matter in dispute] refuses to give evidence as a witness [ch. ii., v. 82] :—"He who having been called upon to bear testimony conceals it under the influence of passion should be fined eight-fold; [if a Bráhmaṇa] he should be expelled."⁵ Such a witness is to be fined eight times the amount of the fine to be inflicted on the party losing the suit. A Bráhmaṇa unable to pay the fine is to be expelled. According to the Mitaksharā,⁶ the Kṣatriyas and other [lower orders] 30 should be made to work at their own proper occupations. Manu [ch. viii., v. 108] :—"That witness who having given evidence suffers from a disease, or from fire, or from the death of a relation, within seven days, should be made to pay the debt and a fine." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v., 80] :—"Even when evidence has been given by witnesses, if other more excellent witnesses, or double the number of witnesses first examined, should depose contrary to what they have done, the first witnesses become false."—Nārada "After a cause has been decided, proof, whether by documents or witnesses shall become useless, unless the same were made known before."¹ Yājñavalkya speaks of a permission to give false evidence in some cases, and of a penance to be performed in consequence [ch. ii, v. 83]:—"Where men of the four classes would be liable to suffer capital punishment [if truth were spoken], there indeed the witness may speak untruth; for the purification from that offence, an oblation of rice should be presented to the goddess Sarasvatī² by the twice-born."³ Vishṇu prescribes the [following] penance for a Śūdra:—"And a Śūdra should give one day's fodder to ten cows." Aikāhikam (one day's fodder) that is as much as will be sufficient to feed them a [whole] day.

[The disquisition on Divya (ordeals) is omitted in the translation as it does not form one of the eighteen titles of law or procedure laid down by Nīlakaṇṭha; and because also it is now practically useless. Sanskrit students will find the original in Part I. pp. 16—30. Oaths form one of the ordeals; but as they are now resorted to in the ordinary administration of justice, especially civil justice under Act X. of 1873, (the Indian Oaths Act,) Nīlakaṇṭha's observations on that subject are translated and are now laid before the English reading public.]

OATHS.

* Manu [ch. viii, v. 118]:—"A Brāhmaṇa should be sworn in * ३० [the name of] his veracity; a Kṣatriya, of his riding animal or his weapons; a Vaiśya, of his kine, grain, or gold; [and] a Śūdra, of all sins." Brihaspati:—"A man's veracity, riding animal, weapons, kine, grain and gold, the gods, the feet of Brāhmaṇas, and the heads of his son and wife, these are the [forms of] oaths always serviceable in small disputes. In the case of Sāhasas (heinous offences) and im- 30 precatations, the inquiry should be by ordeal."

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 118]:—"There is no doubt but that he is pure on whom no frightful calamity by the act of God or of the king falls within fourteen days [from the time of his taking oath]"⁴ Ghorām, (great,) as according to the Mitāksharā [a difficulty] of small consequence is unavoidable by mortals.⁵ Also Kātyāyana says:—"He to

³ Vir. I. 58, p. 2.

whom no frightful calamity, by the act of God or the king, happens within fourteen days [from the time of his taking oath] is to be considered as pure by his oath." Vyasanam, misfortune; Ghoram, causing great suffering, as according to Vāchaspati Miśra and Smārta-Bhaṭṭācārya, a [human] body is necessarily liable to small accidents.

Again, Kātyāyana:—"Now in the case of contradiction of the oath accompanied with misfortunes by the act of God within two weeks, the thing claimed should by all means be caused to be given together with a fine. When to him [i. e. the performer of the ordeal] alone, and not to all, happens disease, fire, or the death of a near relation, he should be made to pay the debt and a fine. Fever, dysentery, boils, great pain in the deep-seated bones, diseases of the eyes, or of the throat, or madness and headaches, and a fracture of the arm, these are the diseases to which mortals are subject [by the wrath of] God."

As [it is stated that] a contradiction of an oath by death of a kinsman, &c. [takes place], when [that calamity happens] to him alone, plagues and such [diseases] are excluded. The words 'to him alone' show that diseases [happening] to the [party] challenged, and not to his sons, and such others, are a sign of contradiction [of oath]. That that [calamity] should be great and not small has been already said. It is by a [similar] reasoning that Vāchaspati Miśra says:—"Diseases and the like happening to the challenged [party], only when great, are a mark of failure." For the same reason the death of a near relation is mentioned, but not his disease or the like.

DETERMINATION OF HERITAGE.

Now, ownership useful in the determination of heritage [is expounded.]

That [ownership] is a special capacity produced by the acts of purchase, acceptance, and the like.¹ Its being created by purchase, and the like is understood from the people's transactions, and [does] not [proceed] from law.² Because even those ignorant of law know it. Also because tracing it to law is liable to [the logical objection of] cumbrousness. In the Nayaviveka, Bhavanātha is of the same opinion.

As to what Gautama [says] :—"Ownership [arises] by heritage, purchase, partition, taking [of unowned things], finding [of treasure-trove]; to the Brāhmaṇa, acceptance is an additional mode [of acquiring ownership]; to the Kshatriya, [obtaining] by conquest,¹ gain [by commerce and service], for the Vāśīyas and Śūdras [respectively]," this text is [merely]* an exposition of the causes accepted by the people. For people use the term rikṭha [heritage] for what becomes one's own by the mere extinction of the [previous] owner's property therein. The word mātra (mere) is used to exclude purchase, acceptance, &c. [Therefore] here, [in the text of Gautama] in the extinction of the owner's property, lies the capacity of the term rikṭha [heritage]; because it [rikṭha] is associated with purchase, and the like [which are] causes producing ownership.² Also because of the logical rule that the apprehension of the object (substantive) cannot be without taking in the property (adjective).³

Dhāreśvarāchārya says that the father being alive, the sons, &c. having no ownership previously produced in his property, their ownership is generated by partition. The author of the Smṛiti-Sangraha [says the same].⁴ [But] that is not so. Because by the text, 20 "by birth itself ownership of wealth is gained,"⁵ it is to be understood that the birth of a son is the cause of his ownership in the father's wealth, which is known as ownership arising from sonship; because also of the text of Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 121] :—"The ownership of both father and son is the same in land, a corody,⁶ or wealth received⁷ from the grandfather." This cannot be [construed

¹ Vir. l. 161, p. 2, would include wealth obtained by fines and the like, and in the case of a ruler this seems to be proper.

² In the case of Rikṭha, extinction of the owner's property is the cause from which arises ownership to the Rikṭhi [to the inheritor], just as purchase gives it to the purchaser, acquisition to the Brāhmaṇa, &c.

40 ⁴ Jīmūtarāhita, who is a follower of Dhāreśvarāchārya on the question of the creation of ownership to some extent, says, सम्प्रतिविषयदेव स्वत्वकारणम्, which means 'the death of the [previous] owner is the cause of the ownership.' See Jīm. p. 21.

⁷ The word is dravya, which signifies property of any kind.

to] mean that the cause of the ownership is found in the grandfather's death, [and] not in the birth of a son. For [in that case] such ownership would be wanting in case of a grandson not born up to the time of his [the grandfather's] death. Strictly speaking, the word grandfather is indicative of a class, [not of the grandfather alone]; otherwise there would arise an absence of equal ownership, [of the great grandson] in the [wealth] received from the great-grandfather, &c.¹; and because the subject [is land], and its adjective is [received from the grandfather].² As for the text of Devala, "The father being dead, the sons should divide the father's wealth; for, so long as the blameless father lives, 10 their ownership does not arise,"³ the former half of this text is indicative of the time of partition, from the use of the potential form [of the verb 'divide']. The latter half is commendatory of [the partition time,] [which describes the time of partition to be after the father's death], and indicates [the sons'] dependence, not their want of ownership. By this mode of interpretation, the text of Sankha, viz., "While the father lives, the sons should not divide the wealth, even if they should acquire it subsequently [to their birth]; inasmuch as the sons are not independent in respect of Artha (worldly transactions) and dharma (religious-rites)"⁴ is also [thus] explained. Here 20 the mention of dependence [in the second half of the text] is with the view of strengthening the foregoing prohibition. The construction [of the passage] is Yadyapi taih paschât adhigatam (even though by them gained subsequently). Taih (by them), by the sons. Paschât (subsequently), that is, after their birth. Adhigatam (gained), that is, acquired by acceptance and the like. The proposition in brief is this :—Notwithstanding the undisputed ownership of the sons in their own acquisitions, they are dependent in regard thereto; how much more so [must their dependence be] in regard to acquisitions by the father. And this dependence has reference to 30 partition, [the performance] of voluntary rites, dealings, and the like. Therefore Hārita says, "While the father lives, the sons have no independence in respect of the receipt and giving of property, partition [of wealth], or of passing a censure."⁵ By the words Adānavisarga (receipt and alienation), all transactions are intended. Ākshepah (passing a censure), according to Madana, [means] reproving female slaves, &c. As for the text "The father alone is master of all gems, pearls, and corals; but neither the father, nor the grandfather is so of all immoveables,"¹ it signifies the father's independence only in wearing and otherwise using earrings, rings [&c.], but not in giving or otherwise [alienating them]; nor does it mean to exclude the birth of a son as the cause of ownership. The same meaning is also made manifest by the mention of gems and the like, which are not destroyed by use. Hence in the text, "Though immoveables and bipeds have been acquired by the man himself, there is no giving away or selling them without convening all the sons,"² the prohibition applies only to their gift, sale or 10 the like; [and] not to their use. Therefore, the prior undefined ownership of many brothers, &c. is defined [and made known] by partition. According to some,³ by the extinction of prior joint ownership in wealth [through partition], a particular ownership is created in portions of it; but, the idea of the extinction of a prior ownership and the creation of a new one, involves [the logical fault of] cumbrousness; [it is better,* therefore, to conclude] that the particular owner-

¹ The term Ādi (and the like) seems to have been inadvertently put.

 * ३२ ship which was created in a portion, was [only] made known by partition as subsisting in a particular thing.⁴

To return to the subject. Brāhmaṇasyādhikam labdham, some [in-20 terpret this to mean], 'what is obtained by acceptance is productive of more fruit to the Brāhmaṇa.' But the proper [interpretation] is that besides inheritance and the other modes [of acquisition mentioned in the earlier part of the text], acceptance is an additional mode for the Brāhmaṇa alone; [and] similarly conquest and the other [modes mentioned] are [additional modes] for a Kshatriya, and the others [i.e. Vaiśyas and Śūdras respectively]. In conquest also, where there is ownership of the conquered in houses, lands, money, or the like, therein only arises the ownership even of the conqueror; but where the conquered has a right to taking taxes [only], the conqueror has 80 even the same, and no ownership. Therefore it is stated in the sixth

⁴ The manner in which and the period when ownership is created has formed a very fruitful subject of discussion with Hindu jurists. It will be noticed in the Appendix.

book ¹ of the Pū'va Mīmā'nsā, "The whole earth cannot be given away by the king of the world; neither the [whole] *Maṇḍala*² (dependency) by the ruler of that dependency." The ownership in each village, field, and the like of the whole earth or the dependency belongs solely to the respective bhūmikas or landlords. The ruler has only to take the taxes. Hence in what is now technically called a gift of land, &c., a gift of the soil is not accomplished, but only a grant of due allowance [is provided]. But in purchases made from the Bhūmikas, or owners of the soil, even ownership in houses and soil accrues. Therefore, [to the giver of such land] there is also the fruit of the gift of the 10 soil. Nirviśṭam is what is acquired by usury, agriculture, commerce, tending of animals; and [secondly] what is acquired by service. Nirveśa has [two significations], service and trade [as given] in a lexicon.³ Bhṛiti means service; Bhōga means usury and the rest. Here the first mentioned [of the additional sources of gain] is for the Vaiśya, and the second [service] is for the Sūdra.

Hence sale and the like are causes of ownership from the manner of the world's dealing; [not from the Sāstra or law.] And in this way the popular practice of [ascribing] ownership over the calf, &c. born of one's [own] cow, &c. becomes consistent. But it would not be so, if the 20 means of ownership had to be traced from the Sāstra, because the Sāstra does not mention the birth from one's own cow &c., as one of the sources of ownership. But, [it may be asked] 'may there be no ownership in daughters, sons, &c. begotten on one's [own] wife, as there is in the offspring of one's [own] cow and the like?' [And if it be said that] this is what is desired, then this would be at variance with the proposition in the sixth [chapter of the Pū'va Mīmā'nsā], which states that although the gift of a daughter, son, and the like would follow from the precept [of the Veda enjoining] the gift of the whole by the text Viśvajīti sarvasvam dadāti i.e. 'in a Viśvajit sacrifice, the whole property should 80 be given, yet the daughter, the son, and the like should not be given.' [The answer is that] it is not so; because there being no ownership over a wife as there is in a cow, &c., there cannot be any property in the children begotten on her.¹ [If it is again objected that] among people, the cause of ownership is ascribed solely to production from the thing [cow, &c.] owned; and that in the wife, ownership is [produced] by acceptance; [the answer is that] that cannot [be]. [For] amongst Kshatriyās and others, acceptance being absent,² ownership in their wives is absent, [and therefore] its absence in their children. Therefore since the text [Yājñavalkya ch. ii., v. 20] "This law is propounded by me in regard to sons equal by class,"³ restricts the taking of an adopted son solely to one equal in class, the acceptance of an adopted son by Kshatriyās and the rest is [in a] secondary [sense]. It is not possible [to take] that acceptance [to be in] the primary [sense] in the case of Brāhmaṇas; for [in that case] in the [same] rule,⁴ there would be two interpretations [of the same word, viz., acceptance] at the same time [which is illogical.⁵] It cannot be said that a Brāhmaṇa alone is entitled to the rite of accepting a son, and that a Kshatriyā and the other [two classes] are not [so] entitled; for their authority to accept [such a son] is determined by the texts of Saunaka and others, such as "A daughter's son, as also a sister's son, are given even to the Śūdra."⁶ In the same way in the marriage of a Brāhmaṇa with the daughter of a Kshatriya or another [of the lower classes] by the Brāhma rite, [both] the gift and acceptance must be admitted to be in a secondary sense. In other [marriages], its primary quality [will have to be admitted]. Thus there will be two interpretations of the same term [in the same text], which is illogical. The custom of marrying amongst the Kshatriyas by the Brāhma rite is admitted by all. Therefore the Mīśra in the Tantraratna describe the gift of a son, &c. [to be in a] secondary [sense]. Nor can ownership be inferred from the popular use of such language as one's own wife, son or daughter; for [it is] possible in such cases] to explain [the use of the term sva (one's own)] by understanding it in the sense of kindred, as [is done, when we say] 'one's own father, one's own mother'. And the word Sva (one's own) does apply also to 'kindred'; as the lexicons say,⁷ 'The word Sva

⁵ That is, acceptance will be understood in its primary sense in the case of the Brāhmaṇas, and in its secondary one in that of the other classes.

(own) when masculine, signifies kindred or one's self; when in the three genders, it means 'own'; when not in the feminine, it stands for wealth'. As regards the gift of a slave by birth mentioned in the sixth [book of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā], it is questionable; since ownership in the mother being wanting from the absence of gift and acceptance in the primary sense, purchase, sale, and the like, it would be much more so in the case of a born slave begotten on her. So much for this digression.¹

* DĀYA (HERITAGE).

Un-reunited partible wealth is dāya (heritage).² The word 10 asansṛiṣṭa (un-reunited) is used in order to exclude wealth put into a common stock for the sake of gain and the like; because the expression dāyabhāga (partition of heritage) is not used to denote the division of wealth put together by merchants. In like manner there is also an exclusion of the re-united property technically so called and mentioned further on. Hence [it is said] in the Smṛiti Sangraha:—
“Wealth which comes through the father, and that which comes through the mother, is described by the term dāya (heritage). The partition of it is now described.”³ Also in the Nighaṇṭu:—
is to be divided.”⁴ The word father is used merely to denote relations in general [as a part for the whole]. This heritage is of two kinds, Sapratibandha (obstructed) and apratibandha (unobstructed). Where the life of the owner of the property or that of his sons, &c., is interposed, that wealth is called sapratibandha (obstructed heritage), for example, the wealth of uncles and the like; but where ownership accrues to sons, &c. from relationship to the owner, without the necessity of having recourse to other means of acquiring wealth, that is apratibandha (unobstructed heritage), for example, the father's wealth. This is the definition of heritage.⁵ 80

PARTITION OF HERITAGE.

Now its Partition. Nārada declares it [thus] :—“ Where a division of the paternal wealth is instituted by sons, that title of judicature is called by the wise dāyabhāga (partition of heritage),¹ [The word] putraih (by sons), is indicative [also] of grandsons, &c.² The expression pitryasya (of paternal wealth) includes that of the grandfather, &c. [The reading adopted by] Madana has the very words pitryadeh (of a father, and the rest) instead of pitryasya. This is the definition of dāyabhāga (partition of heritage.) Even when there is a total absence 10 of common property, a partition is effected by the mere declaration, ‘I am separate from thee’; for partition is but a particular condition of the mind; and this declaration is indicative of the same.³

Time of Partition.

Manu [ch. ix., v. 104.] :—“ The brothers having assembled after the death of the father and mother, may divide equally the paternal [and maternal] wealth, for while [the parents] live, they are not independent.”⁴ Even by inserting the word cha (and), the occurrence of the death [of both] is not required for the partition of either’s wealth.⁵ Hence in the Smṛiti Sangraha [quoted] in the Madana 20 Ratna ;—“ Partition of the father’s wealth may take place even whilst the mother lives, for without her husband the mother has no ownership independently. Likewise, partition of the mother’s wealth may also take place whilst the father lives; for if there be issue, the lord

² Sons, grandsons, and great grandsons.

³ See Jīm. pp. 14 to 16, where he defines Vibhāga (partition) to be एकदेशोपास्य ब्रह्मिण्यादावुत्पन्नस्य स्वत्वस्य विनिगमनामभाषाभावेन वैशेषिकस्य व्यवहारान्नैतया अव्यवस्थितस्य गुटिका-पातादिना व्यञ्जनं (विभागः which means, ‘Partition is the marking by the dropping of a pebble, or the like [i. e., by some definite act] the ownership which exists in some 30 portion of land, gold, or the like; but which cannot be definitely assigned to a specific portion thereof, owing to the absence of anything indicative [of a regular distribution and allotment]. The definition given by Vājñānesvara, and followed by the author of the Vīramitrodaya is, ब्रह्मसमुदायविषयाणामनेकस्वाम्यानां तदेकदेशेषु व्यवस्थापनम्, which means the assignment of the different portions of a [common] property to the different ownerhips which [before] extended to the whole [promiscuously]. Nīlakanṭha leans to the definition given by Jīmūtavāhana.

of the wife is not the lord of her wealth.”¹ Brihaspati lays down an exception to this [period of partition] :—“On the demise of both parents, partition among brothers is declared, and even while they are both living, it is declared right if the mother be past child-bearing.”² Nārada :—“Then after the death of the father, sons may divide the wealth equally, provided the mother’s menstrual courses have ceased,³ and the sisters have been married, or even when the father’s sexual desire is extinguished,⁴ or when his attachment to worldly objects ceases.”⁵ Ramaṇah [means] sensual passion. Uparatasyaprihah [means] he who has retired from the world. The clause prattāsuhṛaginīshueha 10 (and when the sisters are married), like the eye of the crow,⁶ is to be taken along with both the rajanirṛitti (extinction of the menstrual courses) and ramaṇanirṛitti (that of the sexual desire). Gautama :—“After the demise of the father, the sons may divide his wealth, or while the father is alive if the mother is past child-bearing, or if the father so desire.” By the [use of the word] ichṣati (if the father desire), is meant that partition is declared [proper], even before the mother’s courses have ceased, by the father’s wish alone.

* In some cases, even without his [i. e., the father’s] wish, partition is 20 spoken of by Brihaspati :—“The father and sons are equal sharers * ३३ in houses and lands descended regularly [from ancestors] ; but sons are not worthy of a share in the father’s wealth without the father’s consent.” From this it results that sons are worthy of a share in property acquired by the grandfather, &c. even though the father be unwilling.⁸

Manu [ch. ix., v. 209] and Vishṇu declare the partition of the

⁶ The crow is popularly believed to have one common pupil for both eyes, which he can take into the right eye when he has to look to the right, and into the left eye when he has to look to the left. The previous marriage of sisters is here likened to the crow’s pupil, as being a common precedent condition to both the cases of partition during the lifetime of the parents, viz. the mother’s being past child-bearing and the father’s being superannuated.

grandfather's [wealth] to be in some cases [dependent] on the father's wish alone :—" If a father recover property belonging to his father which could not be recovered by him [the grandfather], his sons cannot divide it with him except by his choice, since it is his self-acquisition."¹ Brihaspati :—" Over the grandfather's property which has been seized [by strangers] and is recovered by the father through his own ability, and over anything gained by him through science, valour, or the like, the father's ownership is ordained. He may give away or enjoy that wealth at his own choice."²

- 10 Nārada :—" A father who is afflicted with disease, or [influenced] by wrath, or whose mind is engrossed by sensuality, or who acts otherwise than the law [lays down], is not able to make partition [of the wealth]."³ Hārīta :—" If the father be free from desire, old, has a perverted heart or intellect, or is afflicted with a chronic disease,⁴ partition of the heritage may be made."⁵ According to the Madana Ratna, Akāme (free from desire) means without desire of sharing in the wealth. Viparītichetāh (wrong in the heart or head) signifies following sinful practices. The sense is that [in such cases], partition takes place even if the father does not wish it.

- 20 Hārīta says that the father being incapable, partition takes place by the advice [or consent] of the eldest son :—" If he [the father] be extremely decayed, or remotely absent, or afflicted with disease, the eldest son may think [of undertaking the management, &c., of] the wealth."⁶ Śaṅkha and Likhita :—" If the father be weak, the eldest [son] should conduct the family affairs; or, with his consent, the next brother if conversant with business."⁷ Anantarah (the next), the one born after him. Partition at the wish of one capable of maintaining the family, &c. [is here intended]. If all be so qualified, there is no rule [as the above]. This is the final conclusion.

Mode of Partition.

the best share, or all may be equal sharers.”¹ The second half of the verse is only an amplification of the voluntary partition [described in the first half]; because the father's wish to make the partition, being exerciseable in the two modes mentioned [in the latter half], its independence is not contemplated. Also because such a construction will involve the difficulty of three predicates. Besides, [a third] difficulty would arise from irregularity thus, [if his wish were the rule, he might] give a lakh [of rupees] to one, a single kauri (shell) to a second and nothing at all to a third.

Manu notes a distinction in the share of the eldest, [ch. ix., vv. 112, 10

116, 117]:—“The portion deducted for the eldest is a twentieth part [of the heritage], with the best of all the chattels; for the middle, one-half of that [or a fortieth]; for the youngest a half² of that [or an eightieth] [112].” [But] if there be no deduction, the shares are to be distributed in this manner [second half of v. 116]. The eldest should take a double share, and the next born a share and a half.³ The younger son must have each a share. This is the rule of law [117].”⁴

Amongst twins, Manu declares the seniority of one who is born first:—“The right of even invoking [Indra, &c.] by the Vedic texts⁵ called [Subrahmaṇyaś]⁶ is declared to depend on priority of birth; and in distinguishing⁶ twins also, he is considered the eldest who is actually born first. Among twins, in him whose face the kinsmen and the parents see first, the priority of birth and [the capacity] to continue the line is established.”⁷ Although in medical works like the Pinḍasiddh,

² In the Manu, Smṛiti, and the Mitākshara the reading is turiyam, which means a fourth of the deduction for the eldest.

³ Kullūka says—“If they clearly surpass the rest in virtue and learning.

⁵ These Vedic texts which are used in the Agnishṭoma sacrifice are so called from their reciter being termed Subrahmaṇya.

⁷ This text is referred to Devala in the Nirṇayasindhu, and is not found in Manu.

the seniority of the last born [of twins] is declared, that is set aside by the above texts in the matter now under discussion, because it [i.e. the medical theory] has no foundation in the Vedas, just as the rule 'purification ensues after a month'¹ [is set aside in some cases]. As for the passage in the Rhāgavata, [see skandha iii., ch. xvii., v. 18, and comments thereon] [based on the text] "when there are two foetuses, a contrary order occurs in the conception and delivery;" whereby the seniority of the last born is declared; that too is cancelled by the above texts [of Manu and Devala], because in the Purānas many 10 practices opposed to the Smritis, are * to be found. According
 * ३५ to some, the question ought to be decided by the custom of the country. But what we stated before is the proper [interpretation].²

This partition by deduction is not proper in the Kali age. Because it is enumerated amongst the things prohibited in the Kali age.³ And this has been laid down by us in the Samaya-Mayūkha. Nārada allows the father two shares:—"A father making a partition may reserve two shares for himself."⁴ This text relates to one having an only son; for in the Madana Ratna is quoted the following text of Śaṅkha and Likhita:—"If there be an only son, he (the father) may 20 take two shares for himself."⁵ The word eka (one) is used to denote excellence, as Amarakoṣa gives the synonyms of eka (one) to be chief, other, only [Āmara ch. iii., sec. iii. 16, p. 290]. It means according to the Pārijāta, that if the son be excellent [a father takes two shares].⁶

As regards the property acquired by the grandfather, however, Bṛihaspati declares the right to only an equal share, even by one

² The Nirṇayasindhu accords with this view: see Parichheda 3 the first half, l. 10, p. 1.

30 ³ The MSS. A. and E. supply the text here alluded to, thus:—तयोद्वारविभागस्तु वैद-

⁴ The Mitākshara makes this applicable to self-acquired property: l. 51, p. 1; also Vir. l. 175, p. 1.

 40 of distinction from a ketetroja and a dvyātmushyāyana (see p. 81). Nilakantha and the Viramitrodaya treat it as a Bahuvrīhi compound. The latter appears to be a more simple and reasonable construction.

having an only son. "In wealth acquired by the grandfather [whether it be] moveable or immoveable, the equal participation of father and son is ordained."¹ Yājñavalkya (ch. ii, v. 121):—"The ownership of both father and son is equal in land, a corody, or wealth acquired by the grandfather."² Kātyāyana:—"When the parents and the brothers take all the common wealth [and] in equal shares, then that partition is called a just division."³ As for the text of Yājñavalkya [chap ii, v. 116], "A partition made by the father among sons separated with greater or less shares, if just, is pronounced valid,"⁴ it means according to Madana, Vijñānśvara and others that if the 10 partition made by the father be just, it cannot be set aside.⁵ As to what Nārada observes "Such as have been separated by the father with equal, greater or less [allotments of] wealth, to them that is a just [or lawful] distribution, for the father is lord of all,"⁶ that text relates to the former ages.

In a case of equal partition between a father and his sons, a share to the wife is also spoken of by Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 115] "If he make the allotments equal, his wives to whom no strīdhana has been given by the husband or the father-in-law, must be made partakers of equal portions."⁷ But if any has been given, one-half is to be given;⁸ for 20 [the text is], "Or, if any has been given, one-half should be assigned."⁹ Arđham (One half), meaning so much as would make, with what has been given before as Strīdhana, a share equal to a son's share. But if

her wealth be [already] in excess of such a share, no share should be given her.

The same author [thus] speaks of the occasion when a son able to earn, and not wishing [more] is not willing to participate [ch. ii., v. 116]:—"The separation of one able [to earn wealth] and not desiring [a share] may be effected by giving him a trifle."¹ The giving some trifle is according to the Mitáksharā with a view to exclude his sons from desiring to take a share of the heritage.²

Equal partition after the death of the father is spoken of in another 10 *Smṛiti*³ [Yājñavalkya ch. ii., v. 117]:—"After the death of the parent the sons should divide equally the wealth and debt." Hārīta:—"When the father⁴ is dead, the partition of heritage should be equal."⁵

* Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 128]:—"When sons divide after the * ३६ death of the father, the mother should also receive an equal share."⁶ Vishnu:—"The mothers become receivers of shares according to the shares of the sons."⁷ In another Smṛiti [it is said] "At a partition by the sons, the wealthless mother should receive an equal share." The sense is that, if she be possessed of wealth, she 20 should receive as much as would make her share equal to a son's share. If her wealth is larger than a share, she is to be shareless. Vyāsa speaks of a share to the stepmother and the grandmother:—"The sonless wives of the father are declared equal sharers; and so are all paternal grandmothers declared equal to the mother."⁸ By the word Sardāh (all), even paternal step-grandmothers are included.

Yājñavalkya describes the mode of partition among the sons of several brothers [ch. ii., v. 120]:—"Among sons by different fathers, the allotment of shares is according to the fathers."⁹ The meaning is that supposing one [father] to have one son, another two, a third 30 three, the division takes place by the number of the fathers only, not by the number of the sharers.¹⁰ Kātyāyana:—"If an undivided young brother dies, they should make his son a sharer of the inheritance if he has not obtained a livelihood¹¹ from his grandfather. He should obtain the share of [his] father from his paternal uncle, or his [i. e.

uncles'] son. That very share would indeed be the legal share of all the brothers. Or, even his son would receive [a share]; beyond such a son, succession ceases."¹ The word *anujn*² (younger brother) is intended to denote even the elder brother. Paratah (beyond) [means] beyond the great-grandson. The sons &c. of the great-grandson do not obtain wealth of the great-great-grandfather, if the father, grandfather, and great-grandfather have predeceased such great-great-grandfather, who at his decease has left other sons or [other nearer] heirs alive.³ The meaning is that in the absence of sons, grandsons and great-grandsons and the like [of the deceased], even he [the great-10 great-grandson] takes. And this does not refer to the undivided; but to the reunited; as there is a text of Devala which says "Among family members who having been divided, live together, the second partition of the heritage takes place [even] up to the fourth in descent. This is the rule."⁴ If a debt, a document, a house or arable land be the property of the grandfather of one who for a long time has gone to a distant country, he is entitled to a share if he returns. If a man having left the common family, has gone to live in another country, there is no doubt [that] a share ought to be given to his descendants, if they return. [In the text of Devala] avibhaktāribhaktāndu (among 20 those who being undivided, were divided, and again became united) means the great-great-grandfather and his reunited sons &c.⁵ This

H's father G, grandfather E, and great-grandfather B, died before A, who dies afterwards, and at his death, leaves a great-great-grandson H, a son, C, and 2 grandsons F and J. According to this text C, and F and J will get the property.

⁵ This explanation of the text of Devala, quoted above, ought properly to have come immediately after the text and not after the texts of Bṛihaspati, beginning with 'If a debt.'

refers to those living in the same country. As regards one living in a different country, even the fifth &c. takes the [heritage]. "Be he the third or the fifth, or even the seventh [in descent], he shall receive a share [of the heritage], on his birth and family name being proved [or acknowledged]."¹ This text of Brihaspati occurs in treating of residence in a different country.

In some cases, Brihaspati speaks of a division according to mothers. "If there be many sons sprung from one father alike in number and in class, but born of rival mothers, a legal division [of the wealth] may be 10 made according to the mothers."² Vyása:—"If there be many sons of one man by different mothers, but equal in number and alike by class, a division according to mothers is approved."³ Brihaspati gives an opposite example, [thus]:—"Among brothers who are equal in class, but vary in number [of sons produced on each wife], the shares of the heritage are declared according to a division by the males [not according to the mothers]."⁴

* ३० Yājñavalkya* [ch. ii., v. 125] declares the mode of partition among sons by different classes [of mothers]:—"The sons of a Bráhmaṇa by a Bráhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaiśya, or Śúdra wife, get res-
20 pectively four, three, two or one shares; those born to a Kshatriya, three shares, two or one respectively, that is according to the Kshatriya, Vaiśya or Śúdra wives he may take; and those born to a Vaiśya of a Vaiśya or Śúdra wife, two shares or one respectively."⁵ Brihaspati:—"Land obtained by acceptance of a gift, should on no account be given to the sons of a kshatriya or other [wife of an inferior class]; even though their father give it to them, the son of the Bráhmaṇi wife should resume it after the father is dead."⁶ Devala:—"A son begotten on a Śúdrī by the twice born is not worthy of a share of land; but one begotten on one of an equal class should take all the 30 property [whether immovable or moveable]: thus is the law settled."⁷ Bhumeḥ (of land), acquired by purchase and the other modes also. But of moveable property, he does obtain a share.

However, the son by an unmarried Śúdra woman does not obtain a share even of moveable property.⁸ Thus Manu to the same effect:—[ch. ix., v. 155]:—"The son of a Bráhmaṇa, a Kshatriya or a Vaiśya by a Śúdra woman is not a sharer of the heritage; whatever wealth his father gives him, shall alone become his property.”¹ Bṛihaspati notes a distinction after the death of the father :—“ An obedient and virtuous son born by a Śūdra woman to a man [who has no other son] should obtain maintenance; the rest, the Sapiṇḍas should divide equally among themselves.” Gautama,—“ Even the son borne by a Śūdra woman, to a childless man shall, if obedient, receive a provision for his maintenance.” Vṛitti-mūlam [means] a provision for his living.

The same :—“ The pratiloma sons [shall have provision] similar to that of the son by a Śūdra woman.” Pratiloma means sons begotten on women of classes superior to that of the begetter. Yājñavalkya [ch. 10 ii., vv. 133, 134] states a distinction as regards a son begotten on an unmarried woman. “ A son begotten on a dāsī by a Śūdra becomes even partaker of a share by the [father’s] choice. After the death of the father, the brothers should make him a half-sharer.”² Kīmah, [i. e.] the father’s choice. The expression Sūbhava (by a Śūdra) [in the above text] shows that a son begotten by a twiceborn on a dāsī (slave) does not take a share even by the father’s wish. According to the Madana Ratna and other works, after the death of the father, he is not entitled even to half, nor in the absence of sons &c. to the whole [of the heritage].³

A distinction is made as regards a son born after partition. “ A son born after partition takes only the father’s [share].”⁴ Bṛihaspati :—“ All earned by a father, who has separated from his sons, belongs to the son born after partition. Those born before [the partition] are considered to have no ownership [over it]. As regards wealth, debt, giving, accepting, and purchasing, they are independent of each other, except in [respect to] mourning and offering libations of water.”⁵ If there be only debts, the previously separated son is not at all bound to pay debts without receiving a share of the heritage, as it is observed further on [Yājñavalkya ch. ii., v. 51] that ‘a receiver of the heritage should be made to pay debts.’ But if any one of them have reunited with the father, partition must be made with him, as is said by Manu [ch. ix., v. 216] :—“ A son born after partition should take only the father's wealth, or if any sons be reunited with the father he should divide it with them."¹

Yājñavalkya states a distinction in regard to partition after the father's death with respect to a son born afterwards by a mother, a step-mother, or a brother's wife, whose pregnancy at the time * ३८ was not evident. [ch. ii, v. 122]*:—"When [after] the sons, &c., have been separated, a son is born of a wife of the same class, he becomes a partner of a share."² The partition is thus to be effected, by something being contributed by each of all the brothers &c. out of 10 his own share, so as to make [the posthumous son's] share equal to their own. Vishnu:—"Those who have been separated from the father should give a share to the son born after partition;" and this has reference to shares neither increased nor diminished by profit or loss. But if they are so increased or diminished, the same [author] observes [Yājñavalkya ch. ii, v. 122]:—"Or his allotment should be made out of the visible estate, corrected [by necessary adjustment of] profit or loss."³ Dṛiśyāt [that is] out of the existing wealth.⁴

Vasishṭha states this distinction as to the time of partition among brothers:—"Now for the partition of heritage among brothers. The 20 birth of sons from those pregnant wives [of parceners] who are childless should be awaited."⁵ That is till then [the brothers] should wait [before they divide].

Bṛihaspati states a distinction as regards partition made after the father's death:—"Of the uninitiated younger brothers, the initiation and other ceremonies should be performed by the eldest brother, out of the common wealth of the father."⁶ The form yavyasah (y. unger) is [a license exercised by ancient Rishis] after the manner of the Vedās.⁷

The mention of brothers is indicative of the sisters [also]. Even so the same author,⁸ "And those daughters whose [marriage and ceremonies have not been performed, must have those ceremonies performed by their elder brothers according to law, from out of the same paternal[common] wealth."¹ Yājñavalkya states a distinction as regards daughters' initiation [ch. ii. v. 124]:—"Uninitiated sisters should have their ceremonies performed by those brothers who have been already initiated, giving them a quarter of one's own share."² The sense is [that] a fourth part of such a share as would be allotted to a son of the class to which the sister [belongs] being given to each sister, they are to be initiated.

Twelve . . . of sons.

Yājñavalkya gives this [detailed] description of sons, primary and secondary [ch.

ii. vv. 128¹—132]. "1st. The *aurasa*² son who is procreated on the lawfully wedded wife; 2nd. Equal to him, is the son of an appointed daughter or the appointed daughter herself; 3rd. Kshetrāja (the son of the wife) is one begotten on a wife by a sagotra (kinsman of her husband), or by another; 4th. One secretly produced in the house is declared a son of hidden origin; 5th. A damsel's child is one born of an unmarried daughter: he is considered a son of his maternal grandsire; 6th. A child begotten on a woman whose [first] marriage 20 has or has not been consummated, is called the son of a Punarbhā, (a twice-married woman); 7th. He, whom his father or mother may give [for adoption] is dattaka or a son given; 8th. A son bought is one sold by them [his parents]; 9th. A kyitrima or self-made son is one adopted by the man himself; 10th. One who gives himself is a Swayandatta or self-given son; 11th. A son produced in the womb [before marriage] is a Sahodhaja [son of a woman who was pregnant at marriage]; 12th. He who having been forsaken by his parents, is taken for adoption, is opavidhka or a deserted son."⁴

The aurasa, or the legitimate son born of a lawfully married wife of 30 equal class, is the principal son.

The son of an appointed daughter is of two kinds, of which the first is thus explained by Vasishtha:—"This maiden daughter who has no brother, I will give to thee in marriage decked with ornaments; the son who may be born of her shall be my son."³ The same author speaks of the other kind [of Patrikáputra thus]:—"The appointed daughter is herself the third kind of son."⁴ In this case the father's obsequies and the like are to be performed by the appointed daughter herself.

⁶ Mit. ch. ii., l. 55, p. 1; Vir. I. 185, p. 2, speaks of the appointed daughter herself as the second son, and this seems to be the better reading.

The son of the wife is one begotten on the wife of a brother, or other [relation dying] without male issue, by direction of the preceptor, by the younger brother or other relation of the same gotra or lineage. The Paunnarbhava, or the son of a twice-married woman, is one begotten by the second husband on a woman whose [first] marriage had not been consummated by the first husband.

All the secondary sons mentioned here, except dattaka or the adopted son, are forbidden [recognition] in the Kali age; because we read in the prohibitions [in the Kali age], "There is no acceptance as 10 sons, of others than the dattaka (adopted) and an auras, or legitimate sons."¹ whom his father or mother [with her husband's assent] gives to another as his son, the donee being in distress [in consequence of being sonless], provided the boy be of the same class, affectionately disposed, is considered as a son given; the gift being confirmed by pouring water."² [The italicized portion is based on Kullūkabhāṭṭa's comments on Manu.]

20 From the word vá, (or), it means that if the mother be absent, the father alone may give him away, and if the father be dead, the mother may do the same, but if both be alive, then even both : so [says] Madana.

By the use of the word ápat, (distress,) [it is to be understood], the giving is not to be made except in distress. But this prohibition, says Vijñānēśvara, is as regards the giver only [not the receiver] as it affects visible interests [and] not the religious ceremony [of adoption].³ But it is not so; for since the object of this prohibition is not for visible [or worldly] interests, its religious [or sacrificial] nature becomes known, or taking it for granted that it was for visible objects, there 30 is essentially an invisible object also in the rule; [so that by] the non-observance of this [rule], the accomplishment of the invisible virtue [or good] proposed to be achieved will not be effected. But some say, To the word 'distress' the sense of a prohibition does not apply; lest there should arise the difficulty of *Parisankhyá*⁴ in the case of non-distress; because the word ápat, or distress, is merely known as the motive [for giving]. But although distress be the motive, still there is no sin, if when the distress exists, the gift of the son is not made; because in the above text, [the giving, &c.] and [the distress] are like the definition and the defined; because there is no vidhi (rule) laid down commanding giving [of a son] when the motive of distress exists.

Although he [Vijñāneśvara] in the chapter on Marriage says that “in transgressing the prohibition against [espousing] sickly and the like brides, there is only a transgressing of a visible rule [framed with a popular object], the state of a lawful wife is superinduced notwithstanding [the existence of those defects];” that also is by the above argument over-ruled.

Now Sadriśam means alike by family and qualities, not by class. Therefore according to Medhātithi, a Kshatriya, &c. may be the dattaka or given son of a Brāhmaṇa, &c. But Kullūkabhaṭṭa says, ‘alike by class’¹ [Manu ch. ix., vv. 168 and 169]. And this is correct because Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 128] after enumerating the twelve sorts of sons in this manner observes:—“The legitimate son is one procreated on the awfully wedded wife,” &c., and thus concludes [ch. ii., v. 133]: “This law is propounded by me in regard to sons equal by class,” and this 20 will be made clear by me, by two texts of Śānnaka to be cited hereafter. Vijñāneśvara also says the same thing.² He also says: “From the text—‘By the mere birth of the eldest son, man becomes the father of male issue,’³ the performance of the filial office primarily devolves on the eldest son, therefore he should not be given. But this prohibition [is as] regards the giver only, not the taker.”⁴

This prohibition might indeed apply to the giver alone, provided this text [of Manu] contained a prohibition of the gift of an eldest son; but it does not; for there is a want of affirmative [command]; and because the expression, ‘Man becomes the father of male issue,’⁵ 80 being merely a declaration of parentage, [by the mere birth of a son] there is only a discharge of the [ancestral] debt. According to this interpretation the latter half [Manu ch. ix., v. 106],—“And [the father] being free from obligation to his ancestors,⁶ he [the eldest son] is worthy of the whole,” exactly accords [with the first]. Sarvam [means] wealth. A male only can become adopted, not a female; because from the pronoun Sah [he] occurring in the text, ‘He is to be known as a son given,’⁶ which [sentence] is expressive of a connexion between an object and its attribute, it is understood to imply a male person equal in class who is the subject of a gift made by the father and mother, accompanied with affection [and pouring of] water, and of which distress is the motive; as from the pronoun 'him' in the holy text, "Let a Bráhmaṇa of eight years be initiated, and let him be instructed;"¹ there* arises the knowledge of a male of eight * 80 years, of the Bráhmaṇa class, initiated at the thread ceremony and the like. From the above, results the refutation of what some persons have held, viz., that since in the act of gift, signified by the term datṛima [or given], there is nothing distinctive [of either 10 male or female], and as by the aphorism 'Kṛer mam nityam'² [i.e. formations ending in the affix kṛi, always have map added] [whether the word be masculine or feminine], the daughter given to the husband or another is signified [by the term datṛima].

Śaunaka thus declares the mode of adopting a son:—"I, Śaunaka, will now declare the best adoption. One having no male issue or one whose male issue has died, having duly fasted for a son, having given a pair of clothes, a pair of ear-rings, a turban, a ring to an Āchārya (priest) religiously disposed, a follower of Vishnu³ and thoroughly read in the Vedas, having brought a barhiṣh (a layer of the 20 *Kuśa*⁴ grass), and an idhmá [a bundle of small sticks] of the *palāśa*⁵ tree, having invited kinsmen, and relations, having feasted the kinsmen, and especially the Bráhmaṇas, having performed the rites, commencing with that of anvādāhana [or] of placing the Samiddh (stick) over the consecrated fire, and [ending with] that of utpavana or purifying of the clarified butter; and having advanced before the giver, should [thus] beg, 'Give a son.' The giver being capable of the gift [should give] to him with the recitation of the five prayers, the initial words of the first of which are 'Ye Yajñena.' [The acceptor] having taken him by both hands, with recitation of the prayer commencing 30 with 'Devasyatvá,' having inaudibly repeated the mystical invocation, beginning with 'Angád-angat'⁶ and smelt the forehead of the child; having with clothes and the like adorned the boy bearing the reflection of a son, [and] accompanied with dancing, songs, music, and benedictory words, having brought him into the middle of the house; having according to ordinance offered to the sacred fire an offering of boiled rice [to each incantation] with recitation of the mystical invocation, 'Yastváhṛidd,' of the single prayer from the Bṛigedd, commencing with 'Tubhyamagne,' and the five prayers, the initial words of the first of which are, 'Somoladat'; and having performed a sacrifice with the holy texts, beginning with Svishtakrit, should close the remaining ceremony of the sacrifice. Amongst Bráhmaṇas, the adoption of a son should be made from amongst the supindas,¹ or in their absence, an asapiṇḍa [one not a supinda] may be adopted, otherwise one should not be adopted; amongst Kshatriyas, one from their own class, or one whose gotra is the same as that of the [adopter's] preceptor may be adopted; amongst Vaiśyás, from amongst those of the Vaisya class; amongst Śúdras, from amongst the Śúdra class; amongst all classes, from amongst their respective classes only, not from others. But a daughter's son¹⁰ and a sister's son are affiliated even by Śúdras. By no man having an only son is the gift of a son to be ever made. By a man having several sons, such a gift is to be made by all means. An excellent Bráhmaṇa should bestow a gratuity on the officiating priest according to his ability. A king [should grant] even one half of his dominion. A Vaiśya three hundred pieces of money;² a Śúdra even the whole of his property; if indigent, to the extent of his means."³ Oḥháya-vaham, (Bearing the reflection of a son); [that is he should be] same or equal.

Daughter's son and sister's son, &c. Just as in the passage, '[he] gives 20 the stick to Maitrá-varuṇā,' although owing to the past and future use [in the sacrifice] of the stick it is possible to consider the stick as bhāvya (principal object), yet Maitrá-varuṇa, who is of future use [in the sacrifice] is considered the principal object [in the sentence], as being in the dative case, and as being the invoker of the deities in accordance with the precept '[Maitrá-varuṇa] with the stick in hand should pronounce the invocation'; so similarly in the present passage, the Śúdra, inasmuch as it is he who satisfies the debt [of the manes] must be considered the bhāvya [principal object], as being the subject about which [the adoption of a] daughter's or sister's son is predicated, the genitive termina- 30 tion [after the word Śúdra] being interpreted in the sense of the dative. Therefore it is proper that they [daughter's and sister's sons], being the Vidheya (predicates) should be the objects of limitation, [so as to mean that the] daughter's and sister's sons alone are for a Śúdra. As the [term] Śúdra, not being the predicate, cannot be the object of limitation, if the passage [in question] be interpreted as meaning that [daughter's and sister's sons] are for a Śūdra alone, then that interpretation is open to the objection of *Parisankhya*¹ [a negative inference which is considered objectionable] in respect of adopters in the Brāhmaṇa and other [classes, who will be excluded]. Therefore the daughter's and sister's sons alone are the principal [adoptees] for a Śūdra. Failing them, another of the same class [may be adopted]; for, "Śūdras from amongst the Śūdra class": so he [Śaunaka] has said. This word jāti (class) is not to be narrowed down to the daughter's

10 son and sister's son; because the being a daughter's son or a sister's son is not co-extensive with being of the same class,² and because there would also arise the difficulty of having in one and the same Smṛiti, a general proposition which would then become useless.³

* 2. This is fully explained by my venerable father in his Dvaita-Nirṇaya.⁴ And the same is the usage amongst the learned,* and

² Because this text being applicable to all ages, and marriages of different classes being allowable, one might be a daughter's or a sister's son and yet be of a different class; and vice versa.

20 ³ Because the general proposition, "for Śūdras, among the Śūdra class," occurs first; and in this (Śūdras) class, a marriage with any of the higher classes being illegal, a Śūdra must necessarily have a Śūdra wife, and the daughter's son and the sister's son must be Śūdras likewise. Therefore if the text, "the daughter's and sister's sons are even for Śūdras," &c. were to be construed in the narrower sense as a rule limiting the acceptance of these two alone for Śūdras, the inclusion of the above general proposition would be altogether useless.

30 "In the Prayogapārijāta on the subject of adoption, the law of taking a son [in adoption] as laid down by Śaunaka is written. There the text "the daughter's or the sister's son is given to a Śūdra" [occurs]. Some [have interpreted it by] the rule of limitation [to mean] that these two [viz., the daughter's and the sister's son] are [adoptees] for a Śūdra alone [and] not for any other [such as a] Brāhmaṇa or the like. [But] that is not [so]. In the text 'a cow should be given to a Brāhmaṇa, it is [indeed] proper to make the [word] Brāhmaṇa the object of limitation, as being, of no past or future use [in the act], and [being thus] a predicate [denoting] attributes. [But] such [limitation] is not proper [in the case] of Śūdra [in the] present [instance]; because of his future use, and [because of] his not being a predicate

40 [denoting] attributes; and because of the impossibility of the rule of limitation [applying to any term] other than a predicate. [If it be asked] how the Śūdra is of future use, the answer is:—In the [Vedic] text 'There is no [translation] to the higher world [after death] in the case of a sonless man; [for] by his birth a Brāhmaṇa becomes a debtor in three [ways, viz.], to the Gods in sacrifices; to the manes in issue, [and] to the Rishis in learning,' the [term] Brāhmaṇa is used as illustrative [of all the classes], as has been stated in the adhikaraṇa (aphorism) 'Brāhmaṇasya Soma vidyā prajam riṇavākyena samyogāt' [See Mīmāṃsā Darśana, p. 651, ch. ii., quarter 2nd Sūtra 31:] which means 'To the Brāhmaṇa's Soma (or sacrifice) Vidyā (knowledge of the Vedas) and prajā issue [in the shape of sons] are [necessary], because of the applicability to

him of the text of 'the three debt.' Thus a Śūdra [two] has to discharge his debt to the manes; and is [therefore] Bhīrya (the principal object or subject in the sentence), the genitive [termination after the word Śūdra] being construed in the sense of the dative. Just as in the [text] 'he gives the stick to Maitrā-varuṇa,' Maitrā-varuṇa as the holder of the stick, being in the dative case is the Bhīrya (subject as being of future use, because the office of reciting invocations with the stick in his hand is assigned to him in accordance with [the text] 'Maitrā-varuṇa] holding the stick in his hand recites the invocation' [and just as] the [possible construction of the] stick as Bhīrya (subject) owing to its [past] use in incapacitating the sacrificer [for his office], is rejected, 10 and, the [whole] text is interpreted to mean 'Maitrā-varuṇa should be given the stick,' so as to make the stick a [part of the] predicate: so, in the present instance, although it is possible [to consider] the son [to be adopted] as the Bhīrya (subject) owing to his future use in accordance with [the text] '[he] conquers the [future] world through a son' and '[he] enjoys eternity by a grandson,' [yet] it is proper to make the sentence mean 'a Śūdra should be given the daughter's or the sister's son, [as the adopted son],' so as to make the daughter's or the sister's son a [part of the] predicate, and [consequently] the proper objects of limitation. The Śūdra being the subject [in the sentence], the limitation [of that term] would involve [the logical fallacy of] Parisankhyā (a negative inference), [such] as is observed when the 20 taking of the horse's cord by [the recitation of the text] immayrihvan raśiṃ imṛitasya, &c. [they] took this cord of truth, &c. is enjoined. That [parisankhyā] involves three objections. Besides [the interpretation of] one and the same text by nityama (rule of limitation) and parisankhyā (a negative inference) is not possible. Thus it is established that the daughter's or the sister's son can be adopted even by a Brāhmaṇa or the like [i. e. a Kṣatriya or a Vaiśya]; and that a Śūdra should adopt the daughter's or the sister's son alone wherever possible. [It may be objected that] if [the terms] 'a daughter's or a sister's son' are to be limited, there will be no [adoptee] for a Śūdra other than those [daughter's or sister's sons] as [the words] 'where possible' are [introduced] without authority. This [is answered by] some [30 follows]:—the begetting of issue is peremptorily enjoined by the text 'Bṛīhmayasya soma, &c.' [see above in this very note], the [final] purpose of which is that implied in the word 'putra' (son), viz., the satisfaction of the debt of the manes. That purpose being served by the adoption of a son as well, this [commandment for adoption] is as peremptory [in the case of the sonless] as [that for] begetting issue. [That being so] the yathāśaktinyi, (the rule which enjoins the observance of a precept as far as possible) applies, and the non-restriction of the daughter's or sister's son is proper. But this [answer] will not do. For the [said] yathāśaktinyi properly applies only with regard to the details of an enjoined ritual. Consequently by [the operation of] that rule, the kṛmā (sacrifice) or the like, which is a part of the ritual enjoined for adoption, 40 may be disregarded, but not so the [relationship] of a daughter's or a sister's son, that not being a part of the ritual. [Similarly] the restriction of the same class enjoined by Manu in the text: 'I have thus laid down the law in regard to sons of the same class' cannot be disregarded. Therefore [the introduction of the words] 'wherever possible' [into the interpretation] is improper." The [correct] answer to this is: Because the community of the class in the adoptee is enjoined by Saunaka in the [text] 'to Vaiśyas from the Vaiśya class [and] to Śūdras from the Śūdra class,' and by Manu in [the text] 'I have laid down this law in respect of sons from the same class,' and because the restriction [of the word Śūdra to a daughter's or sister's son] is not possible, inasmuch as the Śūdra and a daughter's or a sister's son are not co- 50 extensive terms, nor in [the relation of] genus and species [to each other], the text [relating to] the Śūdra should be interpreted as enjoining the adoption of sons other than those of a daughter and sister, so as to make no tel. ungauary. Where it is right of the carpenter—Nisháda,¹ [to perform a sacrifice], the assertion in the Śuddhi Vivēka that a Śúdra is not entitled to make the acceptance of a son, which has to be accomplished through Vedic Mantras (sacred texts), and by a Homa (sacrifice to the fire) is also refuted. The homa (sacrifice) with a recitation of the Mantras is to be performed by him through a Bráhmaṇa, because of the text of Párasara, vis., “He, for whom a fast, a vow, a sacrifice, ablution at a holy place, silent meditation and the like, are made by Bráhmaṇas,* obtains * ३२ their benefit.” The same is the opinion of Smárta and possible, the daughter's or the sister's son should alone [be adopted] because the former is allied [to the adopter] by [drawing in his veins] the [adopter's] own blood, and the latter by [drawing in his veins] the blood of the [adopter's] father. When they are not available, a Śúdra other [than those] does become the son, [i. e. is eligible for adoption]. In this way, the popular usage is not inconsistent [with texts] and everything is faultless.

This (view) has been also noticed with approval by Kṛishṇa Bhatta in his commentary on the Nirṇayasindhu in Part iii., under the heading of adoption. The passage runs thus:—“The Bhaṭṭa [the author of the Dvaitanirṇaya had this family appellation by way of eminence] on the other hand says:—“There can be no limitation [in the interpretation of the Śaunaka's text] so as to mean that the daughter's son and the sister's son are two [adoptees] for a Śúdra alone and for no other. Just as in [the sentence] ‘the stick should be given to Maitrávaruṇa’ the Maitrávaruṇa as the holder of a stick is the principal [object], because of his future use [in the sacrifice] as the invoker of the deities, in accordance with [the] text ‘holding the stick, [he] shall recite the invocations,’ which assigns the work of invoking to Maitrávaruṇa holding the stick in hand, so as to make the whole sentence predicate of Maitrávaruṇa a gift [to him] by the sacrificer of his stick; so here [the present passage should be construed to] predicate of 30 a Śúdra the adoption of a daughter's or a sister's son, because of his [the Śúdra's] use as the satisfier of the debt [of the manes], the genitive [in the text] being taken in the sense of the dative. It is thus proper to make the daughter's or the sister's son the subjects of limitation as being the predicate [in the text in dispute]. The term Śúdra being the subject, its limitation will be open to the [logical fallacy of] parisankhya (‘a negative inference’) as when the taking of a horse's string is enjoined by the [recitation of the formula commencing with] imāmagrihñan rāśānāmṛtasya (this string of truth is taken up) [by them] [which does not specify the string to be of any particular animal]. This [mode of construction, vis., parisankhyá is open to] three objections. Therefore [it follows] that the daughter's or the sister's son alone are the principal 40 adoptees for a Śúdra; failing them any other of the same class; because of the same author's text ‘to Śúdras from the Śúdra class.’ It cannot be said that [in the last mentioned text], the generic term [Śúdra] should be limited to the daughter's or sister's son. For if that were so, [this] general statement in the same Smṛiti would become nugatory. Accordingly even the Bráhmaṇas and the like [i. e. the Kāśtriya and the Vaiśya] may receive [in adoption] the daughter's or the sister's son, there being no prohibition [to that effect].” For an exposition of the Mīmāṃsā canons of interpretation called Niyama and Parisankhya, see the disquisition of Vidyānātha on l. 11, p. 1 of the Mit. ch. i.

Śúdra, shall become a Śúdra, and the Śúdra shall become a Bráhmaṇa;” it is, according to Mādhyama, to be taken as meaning that the benefit of the act accrues to the Śúdra, while the sin attaches to the Bráhmaṇa.

Even a woman has, like the Śúdra, authority to adopt, because of the text “women and Śúdras are governed by the same rules.”

Vasiṣṭha :—“Man produced from virile seed and uterine blood, proceeds from his father and his mother as an effect [from its cause]. Therefore his father and mother have power to give, to sell, or to abandon their son. But no one should give or receive an only son, for he saves the man [from put or hell]. A woman should neither give nor 10 receive a son except with her husband’s permission. He who is about to adopt a son, having invited kinsmen and announced his intention to the king,¹ and having performed a sacrifice in the middle of his house with the ‘ryákr̥iti’ prayers, should take an unremote kinsman of the same class. In case of a doubt, he whose kinsmen are distant² should be kept apart like a Śúdra. For, it is well known that by means of one [the adopted], he [the adopter] is able to save many. If, after adopting, a legitimate son should be born, the adopted son should be a sharer of a fourth.”³

The husband’s permission is intended only for a woman whose 20 husband is alive, for evident worldly reasons. But a widow may adopt even without it by the assent of her father, or (in his absence) by that of her jñāti (clansmen). Hence, says Yājñavalkya [ch. i., v. 85]: “The father should protect the maiden daughter, the husband, when [she is] married, the sons in (her) old age; in their absence their clansmen. A woman has no independence at any time.” Thus her dependence on the husband in a particular state alone is indicated. In his absence, or owing to his infirmity on account of old age or otherwise, her dependence rests even on her sons, &c. Kátyáyana also [who says]: “Whatever spiritual acts (or acts relating to the future 30 state) a woman performs without the permission of the father, the husband, or the son, to obtain a benefit after death, it shall become fruitless,” declares the permission of the husband, &c., applicable to particular states. Aurāhvādelikam [means] relating to the next world. Therefore that permission of the husband indicated for a particular state [by Yājñavalkya] is also laid down here [by Kátyáyana following Yājñavalkya], and is not a new rule, laid down (without prior authority).

² Viramitrodaya, l. 189, p. 1, makes ‘distant’ to mean one whose country and language 40 disagree; and Kalpataru speaks of one whose uncle, &c. is not near; Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, p. 27, seems to agree with the Viramitrodaya.

Hence [it follows that] a widow has authority [to adopt] even without the permission of the husband.¹

Adūrebāndhavaḥ (means) a sapiṇḍa as near as possible. And even among the near sapiṇḍas, the brother's son is the chief; because of the text of Manu [ch. ix., v. 182], quoted in the *Mitāksharā*²:—"Of brothers of the whole blood, if one becomes the father of a male issue, then by that male issue, all of them become fathers of a male issue. Thus declares Manu." And this is the proper motive of this precept, since any other is improbable. Dūrebāndhavam [means] one of an 10 unequal class.

According to my venerable father, even one married and the father of a male issue is fit for adoption. And this is proper, since there is nothing opposed to it. But it is said in Kālikā Purāṇa, "Oh lord of the earth, a son whose ceremonies up to tonsure have been performed with the Gotra or family name of his father, does not attain the sonship of another man. The ceremony of tonsure and of investiture being indeed performed [by the adopter] under his own family name, sons given and the rest whose ceremonies are thus performed, are to be considered as sons, else they are termed dāsa (slaves). Oh king, sons 20 given after their fifth year and the rest are not sons. Having taken a boy of five years the adopter should first perform the sacrifice for male issue."³ This relates to those belonging to different gotras or families. Āchātāntum [means] up to the ceremony of tonsure inclusive. The particle ang is inceptive, used for the sake of including all such cases; for if it be meant as a limit conclusive, it will be liable to the objection of being in opposition to the ceremonies of tonsure and investiture [specified in the text]. But much reliance is not to be placed on this passage; for it is not to be found in two or three copies of Kālikā Purāṇa.⁴

30 * This dattaka or given son is of two sorts: (1) kevala (simple), * ३१ and (2) dvyāmushyāyana (son of two fathers). The first is one given without any condition, the second is one given under the condition, that this son belongs to us both. Of these, the first should perform Śrāddha and other obsequial rites of the adopter only. The same may be thus demonstrated [in detail]. By the acceptance of a son there is anxiety [of compassing some future end]; and in the rite [above mentioned as prescribed by Śaunaka thus], "the acceptor of a son" [inviting kinsmen, &c.] the son being in the second case, the making a son is spoken of. But it is impossible for the adopter to make a son in the manner in which a son would be naturally born.¹

Therefore by the term Putra or the 'son', the whole of the duties of a son being had in view, the accomplishment of the invisible virtue whereby those duties will be discharged is to be accepted. Therefore in this manner [alone] sonship in the acceptor's family is capable of being produced. Hence will proceed acts which are dependent on the relationship of son and father, &c. Therefore, says Manu [ch. ix., v. 242]:—"A given son shall never claim the family and estate of his 10 natural father; the Piṇḍa (the obsequial oblation) which follows the family and heritage, and the Śrāddha and other funeral ceremonies of the giver cease."² Gotarikhānugah [means] what goes along with the family and the inheritance; the two expressions being generally co-extensive. Daṭṭrima [means] the given son; because as [will be noted] further on in the case of a dyānushyāyana, the [original] family, &c. do follow the [adoption]. Piṇḍa, or the obsequial oblation, according to Medhātithi, Kullūka Bhaṭṭa [Manu ch. ix., v. 142] and others, means the first funeral ceremony, the Śrāddha, &c. According to others, Piṇḍa means the sapiṇḍa relationship, and 20 svadhā [signifies] Śrāddha and other funeral ceremonies. Properly speaking, as by the passage, "He who has begotten a son and whose hair are black, should establish the sacred fires," the condition of his age [or manhood] is exemplified; or as by the passage "the adhvaryu (officiating priest) measures the ground half outside and half inside the vedi, [for the sacrificial post]," the particular position of the post is exemplified; even so by the terms, Gotru (family), piṇḍa (funeral oblation), riktha (heritage), and svadhā (Śrāddha, &c.) are to be understood, all the acts connected with the Piṇḍa or the funeral oblation due to the natural father, their extinction is pronounced. From 30 this also follows [as a matter of course] the cessation of family connexion with the uterine brother and the father's brother and the rest. Therefore the son begotten by the simple adopted son should likewise perform his father's sapiṇḍikaraṇa,³ pāravana, Śrāddha,⁴ and the like ceremonies in conjunction even with the [original] adopter. So his son [is to perform]. However, Kātyāyana, in opening the discussion about the son of two fathers, says:—"Now since sons, who are either adopted,

¹ For the to-be-adopted son already exists; the capacity or relationship only is to be legally created.

³ Associating the deceased person with the three preceding ancestors on the twelfth day after death purchased, or born of an appointed daughter, have no pravara [for themselves] owing to their having been taken by another, they are [considered to be] Dvyāmushyāyana (sons of two fathers).¹ [Again] if there be no offspring of these [adopters] by their own wives, they [the aforesaid secondary sons] should take the heritage, and give the funeral oblations to three ancestors. If there be no [offspring] to either [the giver or receiver], they should give the oblations to both, in one single Śrāddha, but making Pinḍa (or rice balls) separately in honor of each, and having addressed their manes separately, both 10 the acceptor and the genitor up to the third ancestor. This has reference to the son of two fathers; because of his premising, they become the sons of two fathers. If either the natural parent or the adoptive father have no other male issue, the Dvyāmushyāyana, or the son of two fathers, shall present the pinḍa or funeral oblation to him [or to both], and shall take their property; but not if there be other male issue. If both have auras or legitimate sons, he shall not offer to either. He should take a quarter of the share allotted to a legitimate son of his adoptive father; from the (following) text of Vasishṭha: “When a son has been adopted, if a son of the body be afterwards

 20 born, the adopted son shall be a sharer of a portion equal to a fourth”²; and likewise this text of Kātyāyana, “If a legitimate son be born, the rest are takers of a fourth share, provided they belong to the same class; but if of a different class, they are entitled to food and raiment only.”³ The reading in the Kalpataru is ‘takers of a third part.’ Savarṇāh, or those of the same class, [are] according to Viṣṇuśeṣvara⁴ kahetrāja (the son of the wife), the son adopted, and the rest.⁵ But if [other] sons are wanting to both, then he should perform a single Śrāddha, &c. to both also in the manner previously declared. However, Kārshṇājini says in the Hemādri: “As 30 many ancestors as there may be [in both the families], their Sapinḍīkaraṇa (or conjunction with the dead) should be performed by the adopted sons and the rest with their own fathers, &c.; their sons [should perform it] with two forefathers; and their grandsons with one. As for the fourth descendant, it is [to be done] at his pleasure. Accordingly the *Sapinḍa relationship [of these sons] is mentioned as up to the
 * 33 third degree.⁶ At the regular seasons there is no distinction of degrees, but on the [anniversary] day of death, they should perform the Śrāddha in reference to one according to the proper rites.” This passage also is in the same sense as the text of Kātyāyana. The meaning is this: The Dvyāmushyāyana, or sons of two fathers by adoption and other [sons] should perform the *Sapīṇḍikaraṇa*¹ of those dying in the families of both the natural and the adoptive fathers with their own [respective] ancestors. But the sons of those adopted and the rest should perform their Sapīṇḍikaraṇa [of the adopted and the rest] with both the natural and the adoptive [father]. Their grandsons also should associate their real father with their adoptive grandfather and their real great grandfather. The fourth descendant, i.e. the great grandson [at his pleasure], may invoke the adopter or not. Chhandah [means] wish or pleasure. But the natural father [of the adopted] he must 10 invoke. Sīdhāraṇeshu Kāleshu (at the regular seasons,) that is at the amāvāsya (days of new moon) and other regular seasons, the Śrāddha and other ceremonies of forefathers of the natural and adoptive fathers are to be celebrated. But on the anniversary of death, having invoked the single person only, he should perform the *Ekoddishṭa*² Śrāddha for him. Some however say, since the rite of simple adoption is nowhere mentioned, he [the simple adopted son] does not exist. Also that one taken even without an agreement is a son of two fathers [Dvyāmushyāyana], since there is no rite prescribed for the agreement, 'he belongs to us both.' And by him alone either a double 20 Śrāddha, or a single one, is to be celebrated by invoking his natural and adoptive fathers on the Amāvāsya (day of the new moon) and other days. And the son of the adopted should perform the Sapīṇḍikaraṇa, the pārvaṇa Śrāddha, and the rest of his genitor and his acceptor. And so also their sons, &c.; so it is said. This is open to question. Now, although the phrase simple adopted is nowhere mentioned in so many words, still, however, this [meaning] certainly results as a matter of course from the declaration of the entire cessation of connection with the natural father and the rest by the above mentioned text of Mānu, the absence of which cessation in 30 fact exists in the case of the Dvyāmushyāyana adopted. Further, a marriage in the family of the natural father within seven degrees is altogether illegal according to this text of Gautama: "With the paternal Bandhus or kinsmen on the progenitor's side up to the seventh degree, and with those on the mother's side up to the fifth," &c.³ This would be unmeaning in the case of a Dvyāmushyāyana [adoption], because the sapīṇḍa relationship [to the progenitor] always exists in that case. Therefore [the phrase] 'simple adopted' must necessarily be used to make the said text [of Gautama] intelligible. Because, in the case of the simple adopted, the cessation of sapīṇḍa relationship 40

³ Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, p. 31.

is spoken of. Moreover in the *Pravarādhyāya*¹ [it is said] "They who become Dvyāmushyāyāṇas (sons of two fathers), whether by being adopted, purchased, or the like, cannot take in marriage any one of either Gotra after the example of Śaunga and Śaisira."² In this [text] also the term both Gotras of the Dvyāmushyāyāṇa are spoken of. While Manu declares the cessation of connexion with the Gotra (family) of the progenitor. So here is a contradiction between the two texts which is to be reconciled only by the distinction of dattaka (the adopted) [into two classes], viz., Kevala Dattaka or the simple adopted, and Dvyāmushyāyāṇa or the son of two fathers. Hence the simple adopted son is truly established. Therefore Bhaṭṭa Someśvara satisfactorily reconciles the doctrine of Manu, "that there was a cessation of the Sapinda relationship between Arjuna (as) the son of Kunti [born] after she was given in adoption by [her father] Śura to Kuntibhoja, and Subhadrā, the daughter of Vasudev who was the son of [the same] Śura," with the text of Gautama that "marriage with the daughter of the natural father is prohibited," and which latter text says that Arjuna should not marry the said Subhadrā, by an explanation founded on a Vārtika text that there was no relationship [between Arjuna and Subhadrā] after the adoption. But the same author says that "the Sapinda relationship of Kunti with the family of Śura, even up to the seventh degree, is declared by Someśvara, on the authority of the text of Gautama;" but that is a deduction made without studying the book. For, he (Bhaṭṭa Someśvara), having in the previous part declared the cessation of the Sapinda relationship, speaks of the text of Gautama as referring to the prohibition [of marriage] in the family of the natural father, not for indicating Sapinda relationship. Thus the simple adopted son and 'a son of two fathers' being established, the Samvit or condition [in the case of the Dvyāmushyāyāṇa] to the effect that "he shall belong to us both," is likewise established, because [in the condition there is a visible object, namely, that] the adopter may know him to be the son of both the fathers. Again, the Sapinda relationship of the simple adopted son extends in his adoptive father's family to seven degrees on the father's side and to five degrees on the mother's side. But, says Vṛiddha Gautama, "the sons given, purchased, and the rest whose ceremonies have been performed in the adopter's Gotra, enter the Gotra by the observance of the ceremony; but the Sapinda relationship is not thereby created." Likewise says Bṛihat-Manu: "Sons given, purchased, and the rest retain the Sapiṇḍa relationship with the natural father, to the fifth and the seventh degrees [by the mother's and father's sides respectively]; but enter the Gotra only of the adoptive father";* and even as * 84 to what Nārada [says], "sons reared for religious merit in the several Gotras as begotten sons, become merely participators in a share and [the oblations or] the funeral cake"; all these [texts] are all without a foundation. If they have any, they are given for the purpose of expressing the absence of Sapiṇḍa relationship up to the seventh degree of the Dvāyamyāyana in the adopter's family. Because in the case of the simple adopted son, Sapiṇḍa relationship to the 10 seventh degree in the adopter's family is declared by the aforesaid text of Gautama, and by the text of Mann is declared the cessation of the Sapiṇḍa relationship in the family of the natural father. As for the following position laid down by certain worthy authors in discussing the subject of Sapiṇḍa relationship [namely]: "If (an adopted son's) investiture and other initiatory rites have been celebrated in the family of his progenitor, his Sapiṇḍa relationship to his progenitor's family continues to the fifth degree (on the mother's side) and to the seventh degree (on the father's side), but up to three degrees in the family of the adopter, by reason of the absence of procreation and the 20 non-performance of investiture, &c. [in the adopter's family], producing inferior paternity in the adopter. If, however, [the adopted son] be initiated in the Gotra or family of the adopter, [Sapiṇḍa relationship] with the adopter and the rest up to the seventh and the fifth degree does arise."¹ But we are not aware of the source of this. And also if the paternal relationship does not arise by reason of absence of procreation and investiture and the like, in what manner is the adopted son's Sapiṇḍa relationship to three degrees, or his duty of performing the Śrāddha and other ceremonies for the adopter and the rest, produced? [Answer.] Paternity and Sapiṇḍa-ship are not necessarily 30 co-extensive, so that the absence of the one might lead to the absence of the other. The position really is [this, that] sapiṇḍa relationship [of the adopted] to the adopter and the rest is even declared before by the text—"Up to the seventh from the paternal Bandhus [or kinsmen, &c.] of Gautama and others."

40 ¹ There is a chapter in each Kaṭha Sūtra relating to Pravara. The one here alluded to is probably ch. 21 of the Śatyashāṭha Sūtra of the Black Yajurveda, which is more extensive than others.

Now the rites of gift and acceptance of a son.

In this matter all² have the power of giving any of the several sons except the eldest; but the right of accepting appertains to those to whom no son is born, or whose sons are dead. the time and the rest, having repeated his motives as above detailed, should declare, I give you this son* adorned with ornaments * ३६ according to my ability. These five Mantras beginning with yeyajñena, of which Manu's son Nábhanedishtha [is the Rishi], the deity is Viśvedevah, and the metre is Jagati, are [now recited] to properly effectuate the gift of the son.

Then the acceptor having accepted him with the prayer Devasyatvá,¹ and having repeated the mystical prayer to *Káma*² [the god of desire] as laid down in his own Śákhá (or branch of the Veda), and having repeated in a low voice the text Angátangá,³ &c., having smelt the 10 forehead of the child, he should carry him into the inner apartments of his own house adorned with clothes, &c. accompanied with rejoicings. Next the Ácharya having performed the setting up of the clarified butter and the rest as far as the portioning of it inclusive, and having performed a sacrifice with the clarified butter, with the Vyáhrítí incantations, first each Vyáhrítí separately, and afterwards all the Vyáhrítis together, he should sacrifice to the fire with boiled rice. The principal sacrifice with the boiled rice for effectuating the son's adoption would begin with Mantra commencing with *Yastváhrídá*⁴ [the Rishi of which is] Vasúkruta, [the deity is] Ágni (fire) and [the metre is] trishubh. He 20 should begin thus: Omyastváhrídá, [&c.] and pour the offering by invoking 'this is to Ágni, not to me.' Again, he should sacrifice [with the Mantra] beginning with the words Tulhyamaṇe,⁵ &c. [both the Rishis and deities of which are] Súryásávitri, [the metre is] Anushubh; [the concluding invocation should be] 'this is for Súryásávitri, not for me.' Again, with five texts, the initial words of the first of which are Somodadat,⁶ &c., [the rishi and the deity of which are] Súryásávitri and [the metre is] Anushubh. The beginning [and end] as before. He should conclude the rest of Homa, or sacrifice with [the Mantras], Svishtákrít and the rest. [End of the rite of adoption.] 30

To return to the subject in hand. Kátyáyana states a distinction in dividing debts:—"The debt of the father, one incurred on account of the father, one's own debt, [that is] one incurred by oneself, [these] should be cleared on a partition with brothers." Pitryanāsambandham [that is] incurred in order to discharge the father's debts. Atmīyam [that is] debts contracted by another, for the maintenance,

&c. of one's own family. The same [author says]:—"A debt contracted by a brother, a paternal uncle, or a mother, for the sake of the family, must be fully discharged by the partakers of the heritage at the time of partition."

In a case where the debt is less than heritage, the same [author says]:—"But having paid the debt, and also what was bestowed through affection, they should divide the balance." Pradattam [that is] promised [through affection]. Nārada :—"What remains after discharging the father's donations, and after payment of his debts, may be 10 divided by the brothers; otherwise their father will remain a debtor." Pitridāya [that is] what had been promised by the father. The same :—"What has been given for religious purposes and through affection, and the debt which has been incurred by himself, that [debt and] the visible [wealth] let them divide; [any other] dāna, or giving, is not to be made out of the paternal wealth." The meaning is this: What has been given, [i. e.] promised for religious purposes and through affection; what has been incurred by the father himself; such debts and the visible wealth should be divided. There is to be no giving from the paternal estate of anything other than their debts.¹

20 In case of suspicion [arising] of concealed effects, [says] the same [author]:—"A house, arable land, quadrupeds and the like visible effects, let them divide. If there be a suspicion of concealed effects, an oath is prescribed [as the proper proof]. Thus has Manu declared that household utensils, vehicles [beasts for riding, &c.] milch cattle, ornaments and workmen are visible and are to be partitioned. If effects [are] suspected [to be] concealed, [its distribution] should be made [after detection] by the kośa ordeal. Karmīṇah, slaves and the like. Hence in the chapter on ordeals the kośa ordeal itself has been fixed in such matters by this very [author]:—"In sustaining the 30 truth of doubts in partition among partakers of heritage at all times, [and] in settling a multitude of kriyā (proofs), the Kośa ordeal should be prescribed."

IMPARTIBLE PROPERTY.

Of impartible property Manu [ch. ix., v. 206] says :—"Wealth, however, acquired by learning, belongs 40 exclusively to him who acquired it; so does a gift made out of friendship, or along with a madhuparka [i. e. on the occasion of a wedding, or out of respect for a guest when honey, curds, and clarified butter are offered]. Vyāsa :—"That which is ac- 40 quired by learning, or by valour, or received as Saudāyika (a nuptial gift from affectionate kindred), belongs at the time of partition to him

¹ The conclusion appears to be that the rest must be divided.

[who acquired it], and shall not be claimed* by coheirs."¹ The term Saudhigīra will be hereafter explained. This wealth must be understood to be acquired without detriment to the parental estate.

Thus also Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 115, 116]:—"Whatever else is self-acquired apart from and without detriment to the parental estate, or is a friendly or a nuptial present, does not belong to the coheirs. [Similarly] he who recovers hereditary property once taken away may not give [to or share it with] his coheirs, as also what has been gained by learning."² 10

With regard to land hereditarily descended [and] recovered, however, Sankha speaks of a special rule:—"If one single-handedly recovers hereditarily descended land formerly lost out of the heritage, his coheirs will get it according to their respective shares after giving a fourth part [of the same] to him."³ [In other words] they shall give a fourth portion of the recovered [land] to the recoverer, and [to be a-wards] share the rest along with the recoverer. Manu [ch. ix., v. 202].—"That which one gains by his own exertions without detriment to the paternal wealth, or by his learning, need not be given to the coheirs."⁴ Vyāsa:—"He who obtains wealth by his [own] ability, without acquiring himself of the paternal wealth, or by his learning, need not give it to the coheirs."⁵ 20

Kātyāyana thus defines Vidyādhana [gains of learning]:—"That wealth is said to be Vidyādhana (gained by science) which is obtained by means of learning acquired, from another whilst subsisting on boiled rice furnished by a stranger."⁶ The same [author] further elucidates this subject:—"That is to be known as wealth gained by learning which is gained by science after laying a wager therefor, and it is not liable to division at [the time of] partition. What is obtained from a pupil, or a spiritual preceptor, or for [proposing] a question, or from the 30 determination of a doubtful point, or by the commendation of one's knowledge [by others], or by [success in] controversy, or by superior learning [or recitation], has been declared [to be] Vidyādhana (wealth gained by science), and is not divided at [the time of] partition. The same law applies to artisans in respect of excess [given as reward for skill] over [and above] the value [of the article]. What has been gained by learning, or from one for whom a sacrifice has been performed, or from a pupil, has been termed Vidyādhana; what is otherwise acquired is common [property]. Bṛihaspati has said 'that which is gained by vanquishing an adversary, by learning after laying a wager therefor, should be known to be Vidyādhana, and [it] is not to be divided.' Bhṛigu has said 'what is gained by [successfully] undergoing a test of one's own learning, or from a pupil, or by performing a sacrifice, or such like things, is Vidyādhana.'"¹ Upanyāsa is explained in the Madanaratna [to be] the recitation of the Vedas in the several modes of stringing together the different padas or words, such as 10 Krama, Jaṭā, &c. Others say, it means the exposition of abstruse topics in an assembly. The word Paṇapūrvaka [after laying down a wager] is [to be] connected with Upanyasta (gained by learning). Śaṅsanaṁ [means] a commendation of one's own knowledge [by others]. Prādhyaṇam [means] superior learning or recitation. Śilpishruti, &c. [means] the above-mentioned rule with regard to vidyā (science or learning) applicable to artizans also. Mūlyādhikam [means] a reward [given for skill over and above the price] out of pleasure. Ṛitvik-nyāyah [means] just as a Ṛitvik or an officiator shows his learning, and is given merely as an example. Now in all

 20 these cases impartibility will exist only if the acquisition of the learning and of the wealth therefrom has been independent of the parental wealth.

If otherwise, the wealth is partible. Hence, says Kātyāyana:—
 "Bṛihaspati (ordains) divisibility of wealth acquired [either] through the father by brothers who have acquired their science after being instructed in the family, or through valour."² Even in case of detriment to parental wealth, the acquirer gets a double share according to this text of Vasishṭha:—"Of them [brothers], he who has himself acquired [something], shall take only two shares [of the same]."
 30 Nārada mentions a distinction in [the case of] Vidyādhana of a certain kind:—"He who maintains the family of a brother, while engaged in study, will get a share from the [latter's] Vidyādhana, though not previously promised."³ Āsruta [means] unlearned, according to the Madanaratna; but the proper sense would be—he who has got no promise [from the student brother] that a share would be given.

Gautama states a distinction with regard to wealth acquired without detriment to the parental wealth:—"A learned man may voluntarily give to his learned coheirs wealth acquired by himself."⁴ A Vaidya is he who possesses Vidyā (science). The meaning is, he (the Vaidya) may at his pleasure give [shares] to his learned brothers.¹ Kātyāyana:—* “A learned man need not in any case give [a share * 82 of his] Vidyādhana to unlearned coheirs; but he ought to share it with those [of his coheirs] who are his equals or superiors in learning. [But] a learned man, if unwilling, may not give a share from his wealth to [even] a learned coheir, if such wealth be acquired by him without help from parental estate.”² Madana says that this exception applies, if the unlearned brothers possess other property; [but that] in the absence of such property a share must be given even to them.³

Bṛhaspati declares the impartibility of gifts from the father and [such] other persons:—“That which has been given by the paternal grandfather, the father, or the mother, as well as that gained by means of valour and the wealth of the wife, belongs to him [the acquirer]: it shall not be taken from him [at the partition].”⁴ Nārada:—“Property of three kinds, viz., the gains made by means of valour, the wealth of the wife, and the emoluments of learning, and also a gift made through pleasure by the father, are impartible.”⁵ Kātyāyana:—“That wealth which is Dhrajāhrita is declared [to be] impartible. What is seized in war after routing the enemy’s forces and risking 20 one’s own life for the master is termed Dhrajāhrita. ”⁶ The same:—“Whatever is obtained as a reward from a master pleased at the performance of a gallant action, endangering one’s life, is said to be gained by valour.”⁷ Here Vyāsa states a special rule:—“Brothers are sharers in that wealth which one [of them] obtains through valour or the like by using a vehicle or a similar thing out of the common property. Two shares shall be given to him [who gains it], while the rest shall share it [with him] alike.”⁸

Vyāsa thus defines the nature of saudāyika:—“That wealth is said to be saudāyika which is obtained by a married woman, or a maiden 80 from the husband or from the father’s house, i. e. family [viz.] from brothers or parents.”⁹ Kātyāyana:—“What is gained at the time of marriage with a maiden of the same class, is termed Kanyāgata (received with the maiden). This [wealth] is declared to be pure and calculated to promote prosperity. That wealth is known to be Vaiśāhika (nuptial) which comes with the bride. Wealth of these kinds should be known as the means of performing duty [i. e. religious rites]." That is known as kanyāgata (bridal wealth) which is obtained in a marriage celebrated after the form called Ārsha, i. e. by receiving a pair of cows, or in a similar manner.¹ Here also, as in the case of Vidyādhana, impartibility [will be the rule], only if parental wealth has not been availed of. [On the other hand] wealth acquired by means other than learning, &c. is liable to division. And so says Manu [ch. ix., v. 205]:—"If wealth comes to all the unlearned brothers [before] partition from their labour in agriculture, there will be an equal division [of that wealth] even though its acquisition has been 10 independent of parental wealth. This is the settled rule."² Īhā [in this verse] means agriculture, pursuits, &c. Apitrya [means] without assistance from the parental wealth.

Other impartible [things] are also spoken of by Manu [ch. ix., v. 219]:—"Clothes, vehicles, ornaments, prepared food, water, women, sacrificing priests,³ and ways⁴ or pasture-grounds are declared to be impartible." Pattra [means] a vehicle. Clothes, vehicles and ornaments belong to him alone who possesses them, provided they are of equal value, but if they are of more or less [than those of others], then they⁵ must be divided. As to clothes, &c. used 20 by the father, they should be given to him who partakes of his Śraddha (or obsequial feast) as directed by Brihaspati [thus]:—"The clothes, ornaments, bed and the like, as also vehicles and the like, appertaining to the father should be given to the partaker of funeral repast, who [i. e. the partaker] should be propitiated with unguents and flowers."⁶ Manu gives a special rule in the case of goats, &c. being uneven in number [ch. ix., v. 119]:—"The uneven [remainder of] goats, sheep, or a single beast with uncloven hoofs should not be divided; a single goat, sheep, or beast with uncloven hoof is for the eldest alone."⁷ Prepared food and water are to be enjoyed by all 30 according to need. Striyāḥ are female slaves. [When] uneven in number, they are to be made to work by turns⁸ as may be found workable; when even in number, they are to be divided. The kept mistresses of the father, however, though even in number, should not be divided, as directed by [the following text of] Gautama:—"There is no division of women appointed [by the father] for enjoyment.¹ By the word yogakshema, the Kalpataru says, is meant counsellors, family priests, and the like.² * Laugākshi however says :—"The learned * ३९ ed explain kshema to mean meritorious works,³ and yogam as meaning (wealth obtained by) sacrifice, both [of these] as well as beds and seats are declared to be impartible."⁴ Here pūrtam means a tank, garden, &c. and Ishṭam a sacrifice, a feast to Brāhmaṇas, and the like. The meaning is, whatever wealth has been given up and set apart for such purposes with the consent of all when in an undivided state by a [certain] man, it should be used by that alone 10 for that same charity, and not by another, nor by all together. Prachāra is way to the house, or the like, as also a pasture-ground for cattle, &c.

Sankha and Likhita observe, "there is to be no division of a dwelling, or of waterpots, or of ornaments and used clothes,"⁵ and Vyāsa [says], "the gains of presiding at a sacrifice, a field, a vehicle, prepared food, water, and women, are not divisible among kinsmen even up to the thousandth generation."⁶ Thus is declared the impartibility of a house and a field. But this is applicable to a house used for religious purposes, and to land used as pasturage for cattle and the like; [or else] these texts ordain the prohibition of a 20 division to [sons by] Kshatriya [wives and others] of those two [viz., house and field] acquired by accepting donations as already noticed,⁷ or these indicate or enjoin a partition of their value instead of their actual division in specie if their value be small. Bṛhaspati notices a distinction in regard to clothes, &c. :—"Those that affirm that clothes and such things are impartible, have not thought [properly]. [For] the wealth of the affluent depends on clothes and ornaments. [Such wealth] will remain unemployed, when kept undivided; [on the other hand] it cannot be given to a single person. It should [therefore] be 30 divided with some skill; otherwise it will become useless. Clothes and ornaments are divided [by taking proceeds after] sale; debts [evidenced] by writing after recovery; and prepared food by an exchange for undressed grain.⁸ Water from wells which have flights of steps, and wells from which it is drawn by buckets, &c. is [to be] enjoyed according to need; a single female [slave] should be made to work at the houses [of the several sharers] according to their shares; if many, they should be allotted equally. The same rule applies to [male] slaves. Fields and raised embankments should be divided according to the several shares. Ways and pasture grounds should always be used by sharers in due shares."¹ Udgrāhya means [debts] after recovery from the debtors should be divided.

Kātyāyana :—"Wealth described in a deed and assigned for purposes of charity, and water, slaves, hereditary right or income, worn clothes or ornaments, and whatever may be unfit for division, should be used by brothers according as they have been enjoyed [during 10 past] time."² Dhanam, &c. [means] such wealth as has been set apart for charity and noted in a deed. Udakam [means] water of wells, &c. Nibandha [means] Vritti or [hereditary right or income]. Nānurlāpam [means] unfit for division.

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 126] thus ordains division of property concealed by deceit from brothers, &c. :—"The settled rule is that coheirs should again divide in equal shares the wealth that, being concealed by one [coheir] from another, is discovered after partition."³ Anyonyā-pakṛitām means concealed by the eldest from the youngest and vice 20 versā. But, says Manu [ch. ix., v. 218] :—"He who being the eldest, through avarice defrauds his younger [brothers], shall forfeit his status as an elder brother, and shall remain without his share, and shall be chastised by the king."⁴

The term Jyeshtha signifies every one who is a taker of heritage on the analogy of the stick and cakes⁵ strung over it. The meaning is that when blame attaches even to the eldest, it must [necessarily] do so in the case of juniors. Hence [says] Gautama :—"He who keeps a sharer from off his share, is destroyed by that other; if he is not [so destroyed], his son or grandson will be so."⁶ Bhāginam [means] to one 30 who has a right to a share. Bhāyāt nudate [means] that he keeps away [the other] from off the enjoyment of the share. 'Sak' or the driven [party]; chayate means destroys; enam, i. e. the usurper. The * 40 meaning is that if he, the deprived sharer, does not destroy him* [the usurper], he destroys his son⁷ or grandson.

So here the elder stands for any brother.

⁶ Mit. ch. ii., l. 50, p. 2; Vīr. l. 220, p. 1; Kam. and Vya. M. The Mitāksharā and the rest speak of this text as a Vedic one.

Nārada :—“ The wealth acquired [by a man] after separation belongs to him alone; [but] of what has [since] been recovered after being stolen or lost, and [the kind of property] before mentioned there shall again be [a division]. Prāguktam, (that is property before mentioned,) refers to [property] concealed by one from other coheirs. Punarbhavet [means] there shall again be a division. This is understood. Manu :—“ If any common property is discovered after partition, that partition need not be recognised; it must be made over again.”¹

In case of denial of partition by any one, Yājñavalkya states rules for decision [ch. ii., v. 149] :—“ On denial of partition the fact of the 10 division may be established by [the testimony of] kinsmen, relatives, witnesses, documents, and houses or fields separately held.”² Yatatarkāh [means] separately allotted, and is to be construed as an adjective qualifying both houses and fields.³

Nārada :—“ A dispute among coheirs with regard to the fact of partition is to be determined by [the testimony of] kinsmen, by the deed of division, or by the introduction of separate transaction of affairs.”⁴

The same [says] :—“ The Dharma (or religious duty) of unseparated brethren is single. After partition even that becomes separate for 20 each.”⁵ Here the word Avibhaktānām or unseparated is the substantive, while Bhrātrīṇām or brethren is merely an adjective not to be understood in its specific sense, [but rather as indicative of a class]. Therefore [it comes to this, that], in an unseparated family, whether it consist of father, grandfather, sons, grandsons, father's brother's brothers, brother's sons, or any [such] member, the religious duty is single. Hereby the rule which enjoins that where there is union of time, place, agent, &c. one observance suffices even if the ritual be different; yet that rule is extended by the express words of the texts to cases even where plurality of unseparated agents exists. Hence⁶ the rites connected with the 30 worship of the Vedik and Smṛt fires are of course separate for unseparated persons; as the relations of those fires as Ahavanīya, Āvashyā, and the like, differ in the case of the different agents. In like manner the Śrāddha, by the paternal uncle, brother's son, &c. on the Amāvāsya and such [other seasons] are separate owing to a difference of deities. In the case of brothers without the sacred fire, the [said] rite is single, as the deity is one and the same. Where there is a difference of place, owing to residence abroad, the Śráddhas are even separate. In the case of those who maintain the fire, the rites in connexion therewith are separate, while the worship of household deities, the Vaiśvadeva, and such other rites are single. Therefore, says Śākala :—"Of those whose food is cooked in one place, the worship of household deities, as also the Vaiśvadeva, is single; while in the case of divided members, these are performed in each house separately." As to what Āśvalāyana says in the *Pārijāta*¹ :—"Of those who live and 10 cook their food in one place, even if [previously] separated, the head alone shall perform those four sacrifices which follow the Vágyajña.² Let those men of the twice-born classes, who live on separately dressed food, who being separated have reunited, perform these rites separately every day before meals." It refers to persons reunited, [after separation,] as is [clearly] indicated by the words of those separated who yet live on food cooked in one place, as well as those who, being separated, have reunited. Hence [it comes to this, that] in case of separate dressing of food among the reunited, the great rites (Maháyajña) are separate. Vágyajña [is] Brahmayajña Vágyajñapūrvakan

 20 [means] Atadguṇa Samvigñāna, (a species of Bahuvrīhi compound), the connotation of the members of which does not apply to, or is not included in, the object signified by the whole. If it were to be understood as Tadguṇa Samvigñāna, then the words Vágyajña and the rest would be unmeaning; for it will be included in the four sacrifices, that being the first, and there being no cause for its omission. Hence Brahmayajña must be separately performed. But these two texts are not respected by the learned. Again, as to the texts from the Dharmaprávatti :—"Unseparated sons shall together perform the anniversary Śráddha, the Darśa Śráddha, and the monthly Śráddhas 30 of [deceased] parents."³ When in different countries, they should perform the same separately. If [being unseparated] they should go to different towns, the Darśa and the monthly Śráddhas of the parents shall always be separately performed. Those [brothers] who, though unseparated, live in different towns, and subsist, each on his self-acquired wealth, shall perform the Śráddha and the [Pārvana Śráddha] separately;" and again as to the text from the Smṛiti Samuchchaya, "the Vaiśvadeva, the anniversary Śráddha, the Mahālaya as well as the Darśa Śráddha shall be performed separately when [the performers are] in different districts." They are interpreted by some as applying to the reunited residing in different districts. In reality these texts are unauthentic; or * they may be the work * ५१ of some one who based them on the following reason:—A general dictum [Nyāya] sanctions singleness of performance in the case of the unity of place, time, agent, and the like. An [express] text enjoins the same [under similar circumstances] save the unity of the agent. In the case of the difference of residence [of the performers] neither the text nor the dictum applies; therefore [in that case] Śrāddha and the like should be performed separately. With this outline I here leave off this [subject].

Nārada declares other signs of partition:—"Separated brothers [alone] and not unseparated brothers may be witnesses or sureties, or may lend or borrow in respect of each other. Lending, borrowing beasts, food, houses, fields, presents, execution of documents, &c. income and expenditure, are, it should be known, separate in the case of the separated. Those coheirs among whom these transactions take place should be considered [to be] separate, even without a writing [to that effect].¹ Dānagrahāṇa [literally giving and taking] here refers to debt. The same Dānagrahāṇa is repeated in the second text for clearness. It thus means that acceptance of beasts, &c. will be productive of [separate] ownership in the case of the separated, only when accomplished by each separately; while among the unseparated, the acceptance by one alone produces the [joint] ownership of others also. Dāna-Dharmah [means] written deeds and the like. Āgamah [means] the collection of the principal and the interest, &c. Brihaspati [says]:—"They who have their income, expenditure, and mortgage dealings, distinct, and have mutual transactions in money lending and trade, are undoubtedly separate." Varikpatham [means] the way of the Vaisya or trade. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 52]:—"It is declared that among brothers, husband and wife, and father and son, there can be no relations of suretyship, lending, or being witnesses for each other, before partition."²

In the absence of all these signs, ordeal [must be resorted to]. For, the same author has said [ch. ii., v. 22]:—"In the absence of any of these [signs], resort to one of the ordeals is prescribed." As for the text of Vṛiddha Yājñavalkya, that "in the case of doubt regarding partition, the division must be proved by kinsmen, witnesses, and written deeds, and not by ordeal," this has reference to cases where other signs exist.

When doubts as to partition or otherwise cannot by any means be solved, Manu ordains a fresh partition:—"When there is a doubt of partition among coheirs, a partition must be again made, even though they may have taken up separate residences."

Nārada states the duties of separated coparceners:—"When many persons spring from one man, have their religious observances, their transactions and their implements of work separate, and do not consult each other in their dealings, they may, if they choose, give away or sell [their property], or do what they like, or, in other words, they are masters of their own wealth."¹

Dharmah [means] ceremonies ordained, such as the five great sacrifices. Kriyāh [means] trading and similar worldly transactions. Karmagunāh [means] the implements of work, such as household utensils, &c., a separate possession of these indicates partition. The meaning is, that when so separated, each of them may, without the consent of the rest, give, sell, or in any other manner deal with [his own share]. As for the text of Brihaspati:—"Whether the coheirs are separated or unseparated, they are all alike in respect of immoveables; for no one of them has power to give, mortgage, or sell it,"² it disallows, according to Madana, the right of a man to alienate without the consent [of his coheirs], the produce of fields or such other immoveable property, which has remained undivided, although the coparceners were divided [in respect of moveable property]. According to Vijñāneśvara [Mit. ch. ii., l. 48, p. 1] and others [it is so enjoined] in order that no question as to partition or union might arise, and that by the consent of the separated, the transaction might be made more easy.³

With respect to one who being separated by his own wish, afterwards disputes [that partition], the same [author] says:—"He who having separated by his own wish, afterwards disputes that division, shall be compelled by the king to abide by his share, and be amerced for persistence [in his contention]."⁴ Anubandhak [means] pertinacity.

* ५२ * ORDER OF SUCCESSION TO OBSTRUCTED HERITAGE.

Yājñavalkya thus relates the order of succession to the wealth of one (dying) separated and not re-united Claimants to the wealth of the soulless separated person.

a fellow student. Of these, on failure of the preceding, the next following in order is heir to the estate of one who has departed for heaven, leaving no male issue. This rule extends to all classes."¹

The wife, if faithful to her husband, takes [his] wealth; not if she be unfaithful. For it is declared by Kátyáyana:—"The widow should take her husband's wealth, if she be chaste."² So says Háríta:—"If a woman becoming a widow in her youth be suspected of incontinence,³ a maintenance should be given to her for the support of life."⁴ Prajápati:—"Dying before her husband, a virtuous wife takes away his consecrated 10 fire; if her husband die (before her) she takes his wealth: this is the ancient law."⁵ Agnihotram means the [three sacred] fires. The same:—"Having taken all his immoveables and moveables [such as] the base metals,⁶ gold, liquids,⁷ and clothes, [she] should cause his monthly, half-yearly, and yearly Śráddha to be performed. She should propitiate, by funeral oblations or pious liberality, her husband's paternal uncles, his guru (or spiritual guide), the daughter's sons, the children of his sisters, and his maternal uncles; also old persons, guests and females [of the family]."⁸ Kurpyam, tin, lead, and the like.

As for this text of Brihaspati:—"Whatever property, whether 20 pledged or of any other kind, [the husband] possessed after division, that the wife shall enjoy after the death of her husband with the exception of immoveable property. The wife, even if virtuous, and if partition have been made, is not worthy of immoveable property."⁹ This refers to a wife having no daughter; for [a wife] having a daughter takes even immoveable property as declared in the Smṛiti Chandriká.¹⁰ The prohibition of sale or other disposition of immoveable property by a widow, without the consent of takers of the heritage, is given on [the authority of] Mádhava. As for the text of Kátyáyana:—"after the death of the husband, the widow preserving [the honor of] the family should obtain 30 the share of her husband so long as she lives; but she has no ownership therein in respect of [its] gift, mortgage, or sale";¹¹ that is a prohibition of gift of money to the Bandi [bards], Chárana, and the like [triflers]. Gifts for religious or spiritual objects and mortgage, and the like for that purpose, are of course permitted; [as is plain] from the aforementioned text [of Prajāpati] commencing with Sihāvaram jaṅgamam, &c.; and from the text of Kātyāyana:—"A widow always engaged in meritorious observances and fasts, constant in the duties of celibacy, intent upon restraining [her passions], and making holy gifts, shall reach the heavenly abodes even if she have no son."¹ As for the text of the same author:—"Heirless property goes to the king after [providing] maintenance for the females and the servants and for funeral charges; but the [heirless] wealth of the Srotriya should be bestowed on [other] 10 *Srotriya*s,"² and [of] Nārada:—"Except in the case of a Brāhmaṇa, a king, who is attentive to [his] duty, should give something as maintenance to the strī (woman) of [the deceased]. Thus is the law of inheritance declared;³ [both these] have reference to concubines, because the term used is not Patnī (married wife).

But, says Nārada:—"Among brothers, if any one dies without issue, or enters a religious order, the rest should divide his wealth, except the wife's separate property. They should allow maintenance to his wives to the end of their lives, provided [they] preserve [unsullied] the bed of their lord. If they behave otherwise, the brothers may 20 resume that allowance."⁴ It relates according to Madana to the wives of one dying unseparated or re-united; because [the text] occurs under that head. Kātyāyana [says]:—"If her husband have departed for heaven, strī (the wife) obtains food and raiment: on the other hand, if unseparated, she will receive a share of the wealth so long as she lives."⁵ The term Avibhakta (unseparated)* is illustrative of a * ५३ class [such as the] re-united. The word tu (but) has here the sense of vā (or). There would thus result two [co-ordinate] propositions according to Madana, the latter referring to a wife lawfully married; [and] the former to a concubine. The foundation of 30 this exposition is questionable. The same author [Kātyāyana] thus makes a correct statement [of the law]:—"She who is intent upon her service to the elders⁶ of the family, is fit to enjoy her legitimate share: should she not perform her proper duty, raiment and food [only] should be assigned to her."⁷ 'Guruk,' the father-in-law, &c. The meaning is that at his [i. e. the elder's] pleasure, she may receive a share, otherwise merely food and raiment.

40 ⁶ The word used is Guru, or religious preceptor, but from the context it evidently refers to the elder family members.

⁷ Vir. l. 203, p. 2; Kam.

The same:—"A wife who does malicious acts, who is immodest, destroyer of wealth, unchaste, is not fit [to inherit] wealth."¹ As for the text:—"This same course should be followed in the case of degraded females; food and raiment are to be given to them, and they should reside near the house;" it is, in the opinion of some authors, in reference to the husband while living. Evamvidhim [means] the treatment accorded to the degraded.

Even to a woman who is [only] suspected of incontinence, a mere maintenance [is to be allowed] according to Háríta, [who says]:—"If a woman becoming a widow in her youth come to be suspected of 10 unchastity, [then] a maintenance merely [enough] to sustain life should be given to her." Karkaśá, according to the Mitákshará, means 'suspected of incontinence.' [Mit. ch. ii., l. 59, p. 1.]

Therefore [i. e. from the foregoing discussion] it follows that a lawfully married wife [patnī] having her senses under control, takes the wealth. But if there be more than one, they will divide [it] and take [shares].

In default of her [the wife], the daughter [succeeds]. Therefore [says] Manu [ch. ix., v. 130]:—"The 20 daughter is equal to the son. How then can another inherit [his] wealth, but she who stands as if it were himself?"² If there be more daughters than one, they should divide the wealth and take shares. Among them also, if some are married and others unmarried, the unmarried alone take by reason of this text of Kátyáyana:—"The widow, if chaste, should take the heritage left by her husband, and in default of her the daughter, [inherits] if unmarried." Among the unmarried, if some are wealthy and others destitute of wealth, the last only shall take; from the [following] text of Gautama:—"Strīdhana (or a woman's property) goes to her daughters, unmarried and unpro- 30 vided for."³ Apratishṭhitā (unprovided for) destitute of wealth. Those acquainted with traditional law hold that the term strī (wife) denotes the pitā (father) also.

In default of daughters, the daughter's son (succeeds), by this text of Viṣṇu:—"If a man leave neither a 40 daughter's sons. son, nor a son's son, the daughter's son shall take [his] wealth. For in regard to the obsequies of ancestors, daughter's sons are considered as son's sons."⁴

In default of the daughter's son, [comes] the father; in default of Father. Mother. him, the mother. And Kátyáyana says to the same effect:—"To the sonless, his widow, being a woman of good family, or daughters; or in default of them the father, or mother, or the brother, or [his] sons are declared [to be heirs],"¹ and likewise Vishṇu:—"The wealth of the sonless goes to [his] wife; failing her, it goes to the daughters; failing them (daughters), it goes to the daughter's sons; failing them, it goes to the father; failing him, it goes to the mother; failing her, it goes 10 to the brothers; failing them, it goes to brother's sons; failing them, it goes to Sakulyas (or gentiles)."² But says Vijñāneśvara [Mit. ch.
 ii., l. 59, p. 2]:—"Because the word mātá (mother) stands first in the sentence, expounding the sense of pitarān (parents) [viz. mātācha pitācha]; although [from the word by itself] no [definite] order is apparent owing to [it] being an Ekāśeṣha (a grammatical compound formation, where one member is retained and the rest omitted,) which is an exception of the [ordinary] Dvandva (copulative compound); because of the [said] order in the [dissolution of the] Dvandva, [which order must exist in the dissolution of its exception Ekāśeṣha]; and 20 because the father is common to other sons [such as those by another wife], and not so the mother; therefore the mother first takes wealth [of the deceased son], and failing her the father. This [exposition of Vijñāneśvara] is unsound; because it is opposed to the said texts, [viz., those of Vishṇu and Kátyáyana], and because there is no authority [for saying that the facts] of the mother standing first in the dissolving sentence, and of Ekāśeṣha being an exception of the optional Dvandva, and of the commonness and the severalty [of the father and mother respectively] determine the order [of succession].

* In default of the mother the uterine brother; in default of 30 * 48 him, his son. As for the declaration of Vijñāneśvara [Mit. ch.
 ii., l. 60, p. 1,] and others that in default of uterine brothers, those by different mothers succeed; [and]
 Brother: his son. on failure of them, the sons of uterine brothers; it is not [correct];³ for, to take the word 'brother' as meaning a uterine brother, in its primary sense and [also] as meaning a brother by a different mother in a secondary sense, is objectionable [as necessitating a] double interpretation [of one word at one and the same time]. In regard to the term bhrātaraḥ (brothers) that failing brothers, sisters [succeed]; because the word 'brātaraḥ' [as being] virūpaikṣeṣha (a species of compound where out of two dissimilar members, one only remains) [means] brothers and sisters in accordance with the grammatical rule of Pāṇini Bhrātri-putrau Svāsri duhitribhyām [the words bhrātri (brothers) and putra (son) [when compounded] with Svāsri (sister) and duhitri (daughter) [&c.] [But] it is not [so]; there being no authority for [the word bhrātaraḥ being construed as] a virūpaikṣeṣha compound. If the sons of brothers have their fathers alive at the time of the death of a paternal uncle, and on this account have no interest in the wealth [of the paternal uncle] 10 they shall take the share of their father by a division with the other paternal uncles, by the analogy of the [rule] in the case of [sharers] with different fathers, the allotment of shares is according to the fathers [i. e. per stirpes].

In default of brother's sons [come] the *gotraja Sapindās*¹ (gentile relations). Among them the first is the paternal grandmother according to the text of Manu [which says, ch. ix., v. 217]:—

Gotraja Sapindā.

. Father's mother.

"And the mother also being dead, the father's mother shall take the heritage."² Although she is (here) 20 mentioned immediately next to the mother, she is to be entered at the end after the brother's sons, after the manner of the entry of intruders who are placed at the end, because she is not mentioned among those whose order [of succession] is fixed ending with brother's sons.

In default of her [comes] the sister; for, says Manu [ch. ix., v. 187]:—

Sister.

"The wealth [of the deceased] goes to whoever is next among Sapindās and the rest."³ [Similarly] Bṛihaspati:—"Where a childless man [leaves] several clansmen, Sakulyas (kinsmen) and Bāndhavās [relations], whoever of them is the nearest takes the wealth [of the deceased]."⁴ 30 Being begotten in her brother's family (gotra), she possesses the qualifications of a gotraja.⁵ The community of gotra [does] indeed not [exist in the case of a sister].⁶ But the quality of being a Sago-tra is not mentioned here as being a condition of [the right of] taking the wealth [as heritage].

In default of her, the paternal grandfather and the half-brother take in [equal] shares, because their propinquity is equal, [the former being] the father of the father, [and the latter] a son of the father [of the deceased]. In other cases too, where propinquity is equal, and there is nothing specific [to indicate preference] such as the given order [in any text] and the like, the same [rule holds]. Therefore, in default of them [i. e. the paternal grandfather and a half-brother], the paternal great-grandfather, the father's brother, and the sons of the half-brother should divide and take [in equal shares].

All the Sapindas and the samānodakas [follow] in the order of propinquity. Manu thus mentions them [ch. Sapindas and Samānodakas. v., v. 60]:—"The Sapindā relationship ceases with the seventh person [in the line], and that of Samānodakas (i. e. those connected by an oblation of water) ends when births and names are no longer known."¹ Saptamé means the seventh [in the line] being included.

In default of Samānodakas [come] the Bandhus [cognate kindred]. They [are thus specified] in another Smṛiti:—"The sons of one's own father's sister, the sons of one's own mother's sister, and the sons of one's own mother's brother, are to be reckoned as Ātmabandhus (one's cognate relations). The sons of the paternal grandfather's sister, the sons of the father's mother's sisters, and the sons of the father's mother's brothers, are known as the Pitribandhus (one's father's cognate kindred). The sons of one's mother's father's father's sisters, the sons of one's mother's mother's sisters, and the sons of the mother's mother's brothers, are known as mātṛibandhus (one's mother's cognate kindred)."² Here [i. e. among these] the order [of succession] is that stated [in the text].³

[If it be said]: "As the right of the wife and all the rest to inheritance is derived from their relation to the deceased,* so let [the right] of the Bāndhavas be; what title then can the Bhāndhavas of the father or of the mother [of the deceased] have to the wealth? All these works quote this verse with the fourth quarter as निवर्तेताचतुर्दशार् (ends with the fourteenth [ancestor or descendant]) so as to make the extent of samānodakaship definite. It must be noted, however, that the Vyavahāra Mādhava and Kamalākara refer it to Brabāt-Manu and Vṛadhā Manu respectively. The reading which has been adopted by the three editions of Manu consulted by me, as well as by Kullūka, and accepted 40 by Nīlakaṇṭha, is जन्मनाचोदेदे (when births and names are no longer known).

showing the connexion between a term and the objects denoted [by it], [and have] no reference to wealth." The answer [to that] is that the showing the connection between terms and objects denoted [by them] is redundant; because, even without the said text, the word [viz., Bāndhava] in its primary sense would apply to [those enumerated as] the father's and mother's cognate relations, in the same way [as it does] to the maternal uncle of the father, the paternal uncle of the father, and the like. Hence the text is intelligible only by the acceptance of [the enumerated] paternal and maternal Bāndhus (cognates) as being Bāndhus in reference to succession to property. In short, the 10 same [reasoning] applies in regard to the rules for mourning and the like in reference to Bāndhus.

The funeral rites of the deceased as far as the tenth day inclusive, should be performed by whoever takes his wealth, including the king himself. And Vishnu says the same:—"He who takes the wealth, is declared [to be] the giver of the Piṇḍa or funeral oblations."³ This [subject] has been fully explained by me in the "Śrāddha Mayūkha" 20 in determining [the order of those] qualified to perform [Śrāddhas].

THE UNION AFTER PARTITION.

Now begins the investigation of who are Sanspṛīhī (re-united co-partners). In this connexion Brihaspati Re-union.

[thus] defines re-union: "He who being once separated, dwells again through affection with his father, brother, or paternal uncle, is said to be re-united with him." This re-union according to the Mitāksharā [ch. ii., l. 61, p. 1] and others [can only take place] with a father, brother, or paternal uncle, [and] not with others, because no others are mentioned in the text.* Properly speaking

80 [the state of] re-union [should be] co-extensive with the makers of partition. As for the word, father, &c., they are simply illustrative of the makers of partition, just as the term. [Vedi (altar) is made to mean the future site of Vedi in the sentence] "[The sacrificial part] lies half within and half without the altar." Otherwise there would be a splitting up [of the text] into [several] sentences. Hence re-union may take place even with a wife, a paternal grandfather, a brother's grandson, a paternal uncle's son, and the rest. In accordance with the [rule of] Sāmāntadhikaranyā (the rule that the subject and the predicate should inhere in the same object) [observable] in the text :—“ He who having been separated, again dwells together, is Samsrīṣhṭa (re-united), [there can be] no re-union between the sons and the like of two separated brothers, [&c.] Re-union [implies] an understanding or wish that [their] present, or future wealth [shall be] common until a fresh partition.”

In connexion with this subject, Manu states a distinction with regard to a fresh partition among the re-united [ch. ix., v. 210]:—“ If re-united [co-parceners] make a fresh partition, the shares must be equal. The right of the [law of] primogeniture does not there apply.”¹ Here some² say that the unequal distribution being [already] prohibited by [the expression], ‘the shares must be equal,’ [the fact] of a prohibition [of the same] again by a disallowance of [the right of] primogeniture, shews that inequality will not be [allowed] only on account of primogeniture; but that inequality in partition, owing to the inequality of wealth [amalgamated] at the time of re-union, is [permitted]. But, as [the clause] beginning with ‘Jyāishṭhyam’ is simply an arthavāda (explanatory), the shares will be equal in spite of the inequality of wealth. And usage [tells] the same. Therefore, while [it is] possible to [explain] this text in conformity to usage, it is improper to suppose a text opposed to that [usage]. Again, some say that 20 the Vyavahāra Śāstra (rules of civil judicature) is, like grammar, generally based on usage. Brihaspati :—“ If any one of the re-united [parceners] acquires wealth by science, valour, or the like, two shares of it must be given him, and the rest shall have equal shares.”³ Madana [says that] inasmuch as two shares [to the acquirer] are established by [the text] Arjakasya dvau Bhagau (two shares to the acquirer), the [present] text should [be made to] mean that in a partition among co-parceners not re-united, two shares [are allowed] in the case of an acquisition without detriment to the paternal wealth; but in a partition among re-united co-parceners, two shares [are allowed] even if the 30 acquisition was at the expense of the re-united property.

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 138] enumerates those entitled to take the wealth of [one] re-united. “A re-united Order of succession. coheir [takes the wealth] of a re-united coheir, [and] a uterine brother, [that] of a uterine brother.”⁴ This [text] is an exception to the [text] beginning with Patnī Duhitarāḥ (the wife, the daughters, &c.) Hence the meaning is,—it is not the being a wife, &c. but the being a re-united [parcener] that determines the right of taking the wealth of a [re-united parcener].

As for [the opinion of] Vijñāneśvara [Mit. ch. ii., l. 61, p. 1], Madana and others, [that] “this [text] too applies to one devoid of son, grandson, or great-grandson because [of] the dictum that the scope of an exception should be the same as [that of] the rule, and because the terms Aputrasya (of one sonless), and Svayātasya (of one gone to heaven) from the aforementioned [text] run into the [present text]; so that a re-united [parcener] alone will take the wealth of one such [i. e. 10 sonless] dying, in spite of [coheirs] beginning with wife, who [though] nearer [are] not re-united.” This is questionable. For, there is no authority for [supplying] a complement [from a preceding passage], where it can be dispensed with. As for the sameness of scope, [that] need not exist in every respect; but [may exist] so far as practicable, and [the same or partial coincidence exists in the present case by both the rule and the exception] referring to a Sapinda of the deceased.

If [it be said] that the term Aputrasya (of a sonless) not being [allowed to be] understood, the term Svayātasya (of one gone to 20 heaven) will [similarly] not be understood, and there will be no [term meaning] deceased, [so as to show that the text refers to a deceased,] then [it is] not [so]; because that [term, viz., one meaning deceased] can be got [i. e. understood or supplied] from the text of Manu, to be hereafter quoted, [containing the words] hiyetānsa pradānatah-mriyetānyatarocāpi (will be excluded from a share; or if any of them dies, &c.) By [that term, viz., Aputrasya] being understood, [on the other hand] between two sons, or a son and a grandson, one being re-united and the other not re-united, equal shares will have to be given, inasmuch as that text will [then] not apply to one with issue. This is 30 opposed to usage which is the source of authority in law. If [again] it be said that owing to [that term] not being understood, the text will apply even to one with male issue, and therefore between a putra (male issue) not re-united and a re-united brother or the like, the brother or the like alone will get [the wealth] and not the son or the like, then [it is] not [so]; because [this objection] is refuted in the comment on the latter hemistich [of the text].

An exception to the rule [laid down] in this *quarter is mentioned [by] Sodarasya, &c. (of a whole brother, &c.) [Here the terms] * 40 Sansṛishṭinah [and] Sansṛishṭi (of one re-united, and one re-united,) are supplied [from the preceding quarter]. The meaning is that between a whole and a half brother [both] re-united, the re-united whole brother alone will take the wealth of the re-united [brother] deceased. The latter hemistich [Yājñavalkya ch. ii., v. 188, is as follows]:—" [The re-united brother] shall give up the wealth of the deceased to one born [of his body], or [failing one such] shall retain it."¹ The sense of it is: If the pregnancy of the wife of a deceased re-united co-parcener be unascertained at the time of dividing his wealth, and a son be afterwards born, the re-united father's brother, or the like parcener, should give the wealth to that [son]; and failing him, should take it himself. Here the filial relation alone determines the right of taking the father's wealth, [and] not the fact ⁹ of birth after partition; because [such a supposition] serves no purpose, [necessitates] superfluity, and would disqualify from share 10 one born before partition in a different country but unknown [on that account]. Therefore, to the son previously born, even though not re-united, a father's brother or the like, though re-united, must give his inheritance.

The same (Yājñavalkya ch. ii., v. 139) propounds the right of a uterine brother not re-united and of a half-brother re-united to take wealth in [equal] shares:—" One born of a different mother, if re-united, may take the wealth; but one born of a different mother, and not re-united, [cannot take]; but a uterine brother, if even not re-united, should obtain the wealth, and one born of a different mother, even if re-united, shall not 20 take alone."² Here by the expression, born of a different mother and the like, the half-brother alone is not designated, but the paternal uncle and the rest likewise; because there is nothing in those terms to distinguish between them. Otherwise, we should have the absurdity of expounding re-union with father's brothers and the rest. Because there is no other object in re-union.

The words "if not re-united," apply to both, to the preceding and the following clauses, like the lamp upon the threshold.³ So the word sansṛishṭa (re-united) is to be repeated, and one is to be understood as meaning one re-united as to the wealth, and the other 30 as one connected by birth from the same womb. [In the third clause] the word api (though) is to be repeated, [in the fourth] after the word [re-united in wealth]. The word eva (alone) is to be supplied at the end of the verse. Hence these are the meanings of the different clauses of the [above] text:—[1] Anyodariyah [that is] one born of a different mother, viz., the wife, the father, the father's father, the half-brother, the paternal uncle, &c. If they be re-united, should take the wealth. [2] Those from a different womb, if not re-united, [should] not [take the wealth]. Here the re-union and birth from a different mother, standing together, are a cause, of which the 40 capacity to inherit [is the effect], and vicā-vedā. [3] The uterine brother, though not re-united [by wealth], should take the property. By this reasoning, the being a uterine brother alone is even declared a sufficient reason [for taking heritage]. [4] Therefore, the sansṛishṭa or one re-united only by wealth, if born of a different mother, will not alone take the whole.

- Therefore it follows from the above, that if one is sansṛishṭa by re-union of wealth, and another is connected as one proceeding from the same womb, they should both divide and take the wealth [between them]. Manu [ch. ix., vv. 211, 212] clears this point [in his work] when
- 10 treating of the capacity of the re-united [to inherit]:—"Should the eldest or youngest of several brothers be deprived of his share [at the distribution], or should any one of them die, his share shall not be lost [211]; but the uterine brothers and sisters, and such as were re-united after a separation, shall assemble together and divide his share equally."¹ Hiyeta (be deprived of), by entering another order, by degradation from sin, or the like. The term Sodariyah (uterine) goes along with the word Bhratarāḥ (brothers). Yecha sansṛishṭāḥ (and such as were re-united), that is the wife, the father, the paternal grandfather, the half-brother, the paternal uncle, and the rest [as were re-united].
- 20 On this point, Prajāpati states a distinction:—"Whatever concealable wealth [exists], becomes the property of the reunited [parceners]; but land and houses those not re-united should take according to their shares."² Antardhanam (concealable wealth), what is capable of being hidden by depositing under ground, or otherwise [such] as gold, silver, &c. Sansṛishṭaḥ [that is] of a different womb should take; but land the uterine brother [should take]. Kine, horses, and the like should be taken by the uterine and those of different wombs. According to Madana, a brother of a different womb if re-united should even take kine, horses, and the like. But this cannot be founded on the
- 30 above text. It is said in the Smṛiti Chandrikā:—"But if there exist only one species of property [out of two that is] (1) concealable wealth, [and] (2) land, kine, &c. the uterine brother alone should take even if not re-united. The authority for this is questionable. Among uterine brothers, if some are re-united, and others not re-united, the re-united alone should take [the wealth] because two causes co-exist, the being born of the same womb, and reunion. Hence, Gautama:—"When a re-united [parcener] dies, his re-united [parcener] shares the
- * ५८ heritage."³ Bṛihaspati:—"Two brothers who become reunited through affection, become the partakers of each other."
- 40 This, then, is substantially the sense of the above:—As one whether re-united with his father or not re-united, should take the entire share of his father; because it is the filial relation which determines the son's right to take the [father's] share. Among (several) sons also, when one is re-united and the other is not, the re-united one alone [should take] by the text, "Of a re-united [co-parcener], the re-united co-parcener [shall take]." In a case of re-union between a father, a son, and any other [co-parcener] not a son, the son alone [should take], because it has been already declared by the terms, "he shall either give up to [the posthumous son], or shall receive the share." If there be [many re-united] other than sons, [such as] parents, brothers, paternal uncles, and others, the parents alone [should take]. Among 10 them again, the mother first, and then the father, according to Madana. As for the brothers, paternal uncle, and the rest, they should even divide and take; for among them all, the state of re-union equally exists, as the efficient cause whence their right of taking the wealth is derived. So likewise in an assemblage of unre-united brothers, and re-united paternal uncles, half-brothers, and others, they should divide [and take it], because of the texts:—"A uterine brother, even if not re-united, should obtain the wealth, and not [exclusively] one born of a different mother;" and "Of a re-united [co-parcener], a re-united [co-parcener]; and of a uterine brother, the uterine brother." If there 20 be the re-united wife alone, she alone should take, from the [same] text, "Of a re-united [co-parcener], a re-united [co-parcener]."

If there be an assemblage of other re-united persons together with her [the wife], they alone [should take], and not she. In like manner, Śaṅkha and Nārada, in treating of the subject of re-union, observe:—"Among brothers, if any one die without issue, or enter a religious order, the rest of the brothers should divide his wealth, except the Strīdhana (the wife's separate wealth). They should provide his wives with maintenance for life; provided these preserve [unsullied] the bed of their lord; but if [they behave] otherwise, they should cut off 30 [that allowance]."

She, who is his daughter, is enjoined to be provided with maintenance out of her father's share, which [she] takes till [performance of] her [marriage] ceremony, after which the husband is to support [her]. Here, as in the sacrifice, he who offers the [rice] for sacrifice, must, if the moon rise, [before the close of the sacrifice,] divide the rice into three parts, the sacrificial substance and the rise of the moon [being mentioned], the [use of the word] sacrificial substance is enough for its determination in the sacrifice, the word nirvāpa or division, need not have been mentioned; so from the order of succession [above 40 given], in the division of property of the re-united, either after death or entry into an ascetic order, the makers of the re-union being determined, the word brother is used [simply as] illustrative of a class.

Although Sankha in the section [entitled] re-union [observes]:—
 “The wealth of him who goes to heaven leaving no male issue, goes to the brothers; failing them the parents should take it, or the eldest wife;”¹ still according to Madana, that is intended to fix the order of the unre-united brothers and the rest, upon the death of one dying re-united, subsequent to the death of his paternal uncle, brother's son, or half-brother with whom he had previously made a re-union. And in this case, according to the same authority, the first is the mother and afterwards the father.² The eldest [wife] who has kept her senses
 10 under restraint. In default of the wife the sister. And Brihaspati says [to the same effect]:—“[Of the wealth] of him who has gone [to heaven], childless, and [leaving] neither wife nor parents, the sister is then entitled to take a share.”³ Some declare of him who has gone [to heaven], the daughter [takes]. In default both of daughter and sister, the nearest sapinda [succeeds].

N. B.—Śrīkrishṇa-Tārkālakāra, the commentator on the Dāyabhāga of Jīmūta-vāhaṇa, thus summarizes the law of succession to a deceased male, as prevailing in Bengal:—

- “Here the order of succession to the wealth of a deceased male [is as follows]:—
 20 The first [among the heirs] is the son; failing him, the son's son; failing him the son's son's son. The grandson whose father is dead, and the great-grandson whose father and the grandfather are dead [succeed] simultaneously. In default of [any one] up to the great-grandson, the wife [succeeds] who, having obtained the heritage from her husband, shall associate herself with her husband's, or in default her father's family, and leading a virtuous life enjoy the husband's heritage for the support of life; and who likewise might make some gifts for the benefit of her [deceased] husband, but shall not enjoy it at her pleasure as [though it were] stridhana (woman's wealth). Failing her, the daughter; among [daughters], first the maiden; failing her, the betrothed; and failing her, the married, of whom [the daughter] with a male issue, and one who
 30 is capable of having male issue succeed together; while the barren, or the widowed [daughter] without a male issue are excluded. In the absence of a married [daughter] the daughter's son; failing him the father; failing him the mother; failing her the brother. [Of brothers] the uterine [brother] first [succeeds]; failing him the [brother] born of a different mother. Where the deceased has [some] brothers reunited, when all [the brothers] are uterine, the uterine re-united [brother] first [succeeds]; and failing him, the unre-united uterine [brother], and similarly when all [the brothers] are step-brothers, the re-united step brother first succeeds, and in his absence the unre-united step-brother. Where the step-brother is re-united and the uterine brother not re-united, both of them are equal sharers. In default of brothers,
 40 the brother's son [succeeds]. There too, the son of the uterine brother first [succeeds]; failing him, the son of the step-brother. In the case of reunion, when all are sons of uterine brothers, the son of the re-united uterine brother first [succeeds]; and in his default, the son of the unre-united uterine brother; [and] when all are sons of step-brothers, the son of the re-united step-brother first [succeeds]; and failing him, the son of the unre-united step-brother. When, however, the son of the uterine brother is re-united, and the son of the step-brother not re-united, both [of them] are equal sharers as [in the case of] brothers. In the absence of a brother's son, the brother's son's son [succeeds]. There too, [the facts of] the brother being uterine or not uterine, and [being] re-united or not re-united, should be considered for [determining] the order [of succession]. Failing him [i. e. the brother's son's son], the father's daughter's son [succeeds] [if he be] son of the uterine sister. Failing him, the son of the son of the step-sister. Failing him, the uterine brother of the father; failing him the father's step-brother [succeed]. Failing him, the son of the uterine [brother] of the father, the son of the father's step-brother, the father's uterine brother's son's son, [and] the father's step brother's son's son, succeed in order. Failing them the father's father's daughter's son [succeeds], [first if] a son of the father's uterine sister, [and next, if] a son of the father's step-sister. This [rule] 10 applies] in the case of [the succession of] the great-grandfather's daughter's son, to be hereafter spoken of. Failing him, the father's father; failing him, the father's mother; failing her, the uterine brothers and step-brothers of the father's father; their sons; their son's sons; [and] the father's father's father's daughter's sons succeed in order. In the absence of persons hitherto mentioned, who may be the givers of the Piṇḍa (rice oblation) to be given to the [deceased] owner of wealth, the mother's brother, and the rest, who may be givers of the Piṇḍa, which the [deceased] owner of wealth could [himself] have given, succeed. Failing them the mother's sister's son of the [deceased] owner of wealth. Failing him, the sons and the son's sons of the mother's brother succeed in order. Failing them, the three descendants 20 beginning with the son's son's son's son succeed in order, [as being] the lower sakulyas, [and] the givers of the lepa (wiping of the hands touching the rice oblation) to be enjoyed by the [deceased] owner of wealth. Failing them, the father's father's father's father, and the like, and their issue succeed according to their propinquity [as being] the higher sakulyas, and the givers of the lepa which the [deceased] owner of wealth could [himself] give. Failing them, the śamānodakas succeed. Failing them, the preceptor; failing him, the pupil; [and] failing him, the Brahmachāri, who is a fellow-student of the Vedas [succeed]. Failing them, the co-villagers, those having the same gotra, and those having the same pravaṇa (illustrious ancestors) succeed in order. In the absence of all the heirs hitherto mentioned, the king shall take [the] 30 wealth] save that of a Brāhmaṇa. The wealth of a [deceased] Brāhmaṇa is taken by Brāhmaṇas possessing a knowledge of the Vedas, and such [other qualities]. Similarly, the wealth of a Vānaprastha shall be taken by another Vānaprastha, who was treated as a brother, and who was a fellow-student. Similarly, a worthy pupil shall take the wealth of a Yati (one who has entered the fourth order), the preceptor [that] of a Naiṣṭhika-Brahmachāri (a perpetual student); and the father, or the like, that of an Upakurvaṇa Brahmachāri (a temporary student). This is the concise statement [of the order of succession].

STRĪDHANA (A WOMAN'S PROPERTY).

Manu [ch. ix., v. 194]:—“What is given before the nuptial fire 40

Strīdhana.
(Adhyagni), what is presented in the bridal procession (Adhyāvahanikam), what is given in token of love (Prītidattam), and what is received [by a woman], from her brother, mother, or father are declared six-fold peculiar property of a woman.¹ [The word] ṣaṭ (six) is here used as exceptive of a less number. This [interpretation] harmonizes with the [use of the] word ‘Ādya’ in a text of Yājñavalkya [which says] [ch. ii., v. 148]:—“What was given [to a woman] by the father, the mother, the husband, or a brother; or received [by her] at the nuptial fire, or Adhivedanikam

(presented on her supersession) and the like is denominated a woman's property."¹ And Vishṇu specifies more [than six kinds]:—"What was given [to a woman] by [her] father, mother, son or brother; adhyagni (what was received before the [nuptial] fire); adhivedanikam (what was presented [to her] on [her] husband's espousal of another wife); Sulka (her own perquisite); *bandhudattam*² what was given to her by her cognate kindred; and Anvādheyaka (a gift subsequent) [are a woman's property]."³ Kātyāyana thus defines the adhyagni and other (species of a woman's 10 separate property):—"What is given to women at the time of marriage near the nuptial fire is celebrated by the wise as Adhyagni, or a woman's property bestowed before the nuptial fire. That again which a woman receives whilst she is being conducted from her father's⁴ home is termed the Adhyāvahanikam [kind of] strīdhana (woman's property); whatever is given to [a woman] through affection, by her mother-in-law or her father-in-law, and [wealth termed] Pādavandanikam, or what is received on a woman's saluting the feet of elders, is termed Pṛthidatta; what is obtained by a woman subsequently to her marriage from the family of her husband, or what is similarly obtained from her own

20 family, is called anvādheyam; whatever is obtained [by a woman] as the equivalent of household utensils, of beasts of burden, of milch cattle, or ornaments, is declared [to be] śulka."⁵ The meaning is when the household utensils and the rest are not available, what is given to the bride at the time of her being given [in marriage] as the price of them is śulka. Yājñavalkya [thus] explains the adhivedanika [ch. ii., v. 148]:—"To a superseded wife [the husband] should give a sum equal [to the expenses of the marriage] by which she has been superseded, provided no strīdhana (woman's property) has been bestowed on her";⁶ but if [any has been] assigned, Arđham or a half [only] should be 30 allotted. Arđham means as much as will make [her strīdhana] equal to the expenses of the [husband's] second marriage.

Devala:—"That which a husband has promised as strīdhana (woman's 40 ⁵ Mit. ch. ii., l. 62, p. 2; Vīr. I. 214, p. 2; Kam.; Vya. M.; Vijñāneśvara makes Śulka to be that which being paid the daughter is given in marriage; Madana in Vīramitrodaya says that what is received from the husband in the shape of household utensils, &c. is śulka.

property) should be made good by his sons even as a debt.”¹ Pratishrutam (promised) (i. e.) to his wife.

On the subject of giving property to women, Kātyāyana states a distinction :—“[Separate] property excepting immoveables may be given to women by the father, mother, husband, brother, and kindred according to their means as far as two thousand.”² According to Madana, wealth to the extent of two thousand paṇas excluding immoveable property are to be given.

So also Vyāsa :—“A present amounting to two thousand at the most* may be given to a woman out of the wealth.”³ Here this 10 * § 6 gift up to two thousand is meant [to be for] every year. [For] the same [author states that] in [a period of] many years more than this, and in case of ability even immoveable property may be given.

In property given to a woman in fraud of heirs as well as in ornaments and the like given to her merely Stridhana, technically so called. for wearing, a woman has no ownership according to Kātyāyana [who says] :—“But what was given to women with a fraudulent intent or for a particular object by their father, brothers, or husband is not denominated stridhana.”⁴ In [property] earned by mechanical arts, or even obtained from friends or the like, 20 other than the father and the rest, women have no ownership, according to the same author. “In whatever is earned by mechanical arts or received through affection from any other [than the relations already mentioned,] the husband has property, but the rest is pronounced [to be] stridhana (woman’s property). As for the text—“A wife, a son, and a slave are all incapable of property. Whatever they earn, belongs to him to whom they belong,”⁵ that too has reference to wealth acquired by mechanical arts and the like. It is also proper [to interpret the text as shewing] the absence of absolute dominion even in the ādhipedānika or other [species of stridhana]. Hence, says 80 Manu [ch. ix., v. 199] :—“a woman should never make [any] expenditure out of the family [property] belonging to several or even [out of] her own wealth without the assent of her husband.”⁶ Nirḥarāḥ [means] expenditure.

In a certain [kind of] property, Kātyāyana declares [their] absolute dominion. “That which is obtained by a married woman, or by a virgin in the house of her husband, or of her father, from her brother, or her parents, is termed Saudāyika. The independence of women who have received the Saudāyika wealth, is desirable [in regard to it], for it was given [by their kindred] for their maintenance out of affection. The power of women over Saudāyika at all times is celebrated both in respect of gift and sale, according to their pleasure, even in [the case of] immoveables."¹ But over immoveable property given by the husband they [have] no absolute dominion according to the text of Nārada [which says]:—"What was given by an affectionate husband to his wife she may enjoy as she pleases even when he is dead, or may 10 give it away excepting immoveable property."²

The non-existence of dominion in the husband and others over strīdhana (woman's property) is declared by the same [author]:—"Neither the husband, nor the son, nor the father, nor the brothers, have authority over strīdhana (a woman's property) to take it or to give it away. If any of these persons by force consume the woman's property, he shall be compelled to make it good with interest, and shall also incur a fine." "If [such person], having obtained her consent, use the same amicably, he shall [be required to] pay the principal only when he becomes able."³ Manu [ch. viii., v. 29, and chap. ix., v. 200]:—
20 "Such kinsmen as seize upon the wealth of women whilst they are alive, a just king should chastise with the punishment [due to] thieves."
"The heirs of the husband shall not divide among themselves any ornament worn by a woman during the lifetime of her husband; they who do so, are degraded from their tribe."⁴ Dhṛita (worn) [means] that which was given by her husband or the like, and which she wore. Devala:—" [A woman's] maintenance, ornaments, Sulka (perquisite), and gain, are her strīdhana. She herself has the enjoyment of it: her husband is not entitled to it when not in distress. In the case of (its) idle expenditure or consumption, [the husband] should repay 30 it with interest; [but] he may use the property of his wife to relieve the distress of a son."⁵ Vṛitti [means] wealth given by the father or the like for subsistence. Labhah, interest [or profit]. Mokṣah expenditure, in other words, gift or other [alienation].* The

by any other but himself, even when distressed by famine or by any other calamity. Dharmakāryam (religious duties), that is, such [alone] as are indispensable. Sampratirodhuké [means] in confinement.

In some cases a husband must restore it even if unwilling, as said by Devala :—" Now if the husband have two wives, and do not show honour to one [of them], he shall be compelled by force to restore to her [i. e. the latter], even [what she may have] voluntarily given to him. Where food, raiment and dwelling are withheld from a woman, she may exact her own (property) and a share from coheirs."¹ Rikthinah [means] from a coheir. This, however, refers to a virtuous wife; for, a wicked 10 one deserves no share. And the same [author observes] :—" A wife who does injurious acts, who is immodest, who wastes his property, or who is given to adultery, is not fit [to have] her strīdhana." The same [author] :—" Wealth was produced for [the performance of] sacrifices; therefore it should be spent on religious objects, and not on women, fools, or irreligious persons."²

Manu thus declares the right of succession, after a woman's decease, to the anvādheya [species of strīdhana] [ch. ix. v. 195] :—" The anvādheya, and that wealth which was given through affection by the husband, shall be inherited by her children [even] if her husband 20 be alive."³ The same author further explains the term prajā (children) [ch. ix. v. 192] :—" On the death of the mother, all the uterine brothers as well as all the uterine sisters, equally divide the maternal wealth."⁴ The comment of the Mitāksharā [here] is [that] the companionship [in the act of division] is to be among sons, where the right [to succession] has accrued to them by the non-existence of daughters and the like; and among daughters where the [said] right accrues to them alone, the association of daughters and sons which follows from no rule is [not meant to be] laid down.⁵ Others [however] say that in the case of Anvādheya and a gift through affection, the 30 association of daughters and sons is independently laid down [by this text].

Among sisters, Manu states a distinction [ch. ix., v. 192] :—" Strīdhana (woman's property) goes to her children, [for] the daughter is a sharer thereof, provided she be not given away [in marriage]; but if married, she receives a mere recognition of right."⁶ Tadanśinī [means] the receiver of a share equal to [that of the] son. Aprattā, unmarried. The meaning is that if an unmarried daughter exists, the married one receives something [small] only [in token of] recognition. In default of an unmarried daughter, the share of the married daughters is equal 40 to [that of the] brothers, according to the text of Kátyáyana [which says]:—"Sisters having husbands should share with brothers."¹

Something should be given to the daughters of daughters also according to Manu (ch. ix., v. 193) [who says]:—"Even to the daughters of daughters something should be given according to their worth, from the assets of their mother's mother, on the score of natural affection."²

But the yautaka (marriage gift of a woman) goes to the unmarried [daughters] alone, not to the sons. To this effect the same [author says] [ch. ix., v. 139]:—"Whatever is the yautaka [property] of the 10 mother is the portion of the unmarried daughter."³ According to Madana, yautaka is that which is obtained by a woman at the time of marriage or other (ceremony) whilst seated with her husband on one seat as [shewn] by the explanation of Nighañtu, [viz.,] yutayo yautakam (what belongs to two joined, is yautaka).

* In respect to the aforesaid technical strīdhana except the * ३२ anvādheya and the prītidatta of the husband, Gautama states a distinction:—"Strīdhana (woman's property) goes to her daughters unmarried and indigent."⁴ Apratishthitāh [such as are] destitute of wealth. The daughter of a Brāhmaṇī wife [however] may take the 20 wealth even of her stepmother, as Manu says [ch. ix., v. 193]:—"The wealth of a woman which has been in any manner given to her by her father shall be taken by the Brāhmaṇī [daughter] as well as by her offspring."⁵ The particle vā means and; so that [the use of vā shows that] 'by division' is to be understood. Some say that the word Brāhmaṇī is representative of any girl of equal or superior caste; but the authority for this [supposition] is questionable.

In default of daughters, the issue of those daughters [succeeds] according to Nārada, who says:—"The daughters [take the wealth] of the mother, failing the daughters, their issue."⁶ A distribution 30 among daughters by different mothers, as also among the sons of different daughters' sons, is made by analogy of the rule—"in the case of sons of different fathers, the allotment of shares is according to fathers" [i. e. per stirpes]. As for the text of Yājñiyavalkya (ch. ii., v. 117) [which says]:—"The daughters share the residue of their mother's property after [the payment of her] debts, and [their] issue succeeds in their default,"⁷ some say that the term anvaya [issue] is even there indicative of the offspring of daughters; others [however] say that in default of daughters the sons alone should take, since the word 'tat' in the text of Nārada above [cited] points to the mother alone.¹ And this view agrees with the custom : Śeṣham riṇāt (residue after debt) [means] according to the Sāṃpradāyikas (men conversant with usage) that the sons alone should take the [mother's] property [when it is] equal to, or less than the [amount of the] debt.

In default of the daughters and the rest, the sons, grandsons, and the rest should succeed, because, says Kātyāyana :—"But on failure of daughters the inheritance belongs to the sons."² This right [of inheritance] of daughters and the rest in the mother's property exists only in [respect of] the adhyagni, adhyāvahanika, and other aforesaid ¹⁰ [kinds of the] technical strīdhana; for if it related to all wealth in which their mother had property, the technical term [viz., strīdhana] would be negatory. Hence the texts before quoted containing [the term] strīlhana (woman's property), from Bṛihaspati, Gautama and others, such as strīdhanam syādapatyānām (a woman's property shall belong to her children), strīdhanam duhitṛiṇām (a woman's property is of [her] daughters and the rest), have reference [to woman's property] technically [so called]. Those texts again which, although destitute of the term strīdhana (woman's property) have the same meaning, such as Bhājeran Mātṛikam rikṭhan (they ²⁰ should divide the maternal heritage), and the rest, have also reference to the same [kind of strīdhana] inasmuch as there is brevity in supposing one origin [for all the different texts on the same subject]. As for the text of Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 117] : "Let sons divide equally, both the effects and the debts after [the demise of] their parents," it relates to what is acquired by inheritance, [or] spinning, and the like, excepting the technical strīdhana. Therefore [even] if there be daughters, the sons or other [heirs] alone succeed to their mother's property, save the technical strīlhana.³

[As regards succession to] the technical strīdhana in default of both ³⁰ kinds of issue, Yājñavalkya states a distinction [ch. ii., v. 144] :—"Her kinsmen (bāndhavās) take it, if she die without issue."⁴

The same [author] expounds the succession of kinsmen according to the different kinds of marriage.⁵ "The property of a childless woman married in the Brāhma or any other [of the four approved forms of] marriage goes to her husband; in the remaining [four forms of marriage] it goes to her parents.⁶ But if she leave female issue, [it will go to her daughter's daughters]."⁷ Failing the husband, the nearest to her in his family takes it; [similarly] failing the father, the nearest to her in her father's family succeeds; as Manu in the text [ch. ix., v. 187]:—"Of the nearest sapinda, the wealth [of the deceased] shall be" declares propinquity to the deceased as the criterion of the right to [take] wealth. As regards [the statement] in the *Mitākshara*¹ that* "on failure of the husband, it goes to tatpratyāsannā * ३३ (the nearest to that) sapindas, and c failure of the father, to tatpratyāsannā (the nearest to that) sapindas, even there the [word] tatpratyāsannā is [to be dissolved as] tena asyāḥ pratyā sannāḥ 10 [the nearest to her] through him, so as to mean ('the nearest in his family through him'). In the four [forms of marriage] beginning with Brāhma relates to the Brāhmaṇa on account of these (forms) alone being lawful in respect to him. In the case of Kshatriyas and the rest, to whom the Gāndharva [form of marriage] is lawful, the wealth of even her who has been married according to that [form] belongs to the husband alone. To the same effect [says] Manu [ch. ix., vv. 196, 197]:—"It is ordained that the property [of a woman] married in the Brāhma, Dāiva, Aśva, Gāndharva, or Prājāpatya form of marriage, and dying without issue, shall go to her husband alone; but it is or- 20 dained that if she obtained wealth when married in the Ātura and the like form, on her death without issue, it goes to her mother and father."²

On failure of the husband of a deceased woman, in the case of marriage according to the Brāhma or the like form, or on failure of her parents in the case of marriage according to the Ātura or the like form, Bṛhaspati names the persons entitled to the technical strīdhana (woman's property):—"The mother's sister, the wife of the mother's brother, the wife of the father's brother, the father's sister, the mother-in-law, and the wife of an elder brother, are pronounced equal to mothers. If they leave no son born in lawful wedlock, nor 30 daughter's son, nor his son, then the sister's son and the rest shall take their property."³ Here the absence of the daughter and also of the daughter's daughter must be understood [as the condition precedent]; because only on failure of them does the right [of inheritance] belong to the son born in wedlock, or to the daughter's son.

In respect of property given by the bandhus (cognate kindred) at an Ātura or the like other [form of marriage], Kātyāyana says:—"That which was given to her by her bandhus, goes on failure of them, to her son."⁴

But as regards the Śulka (perquisites) Gautama observes:—"The 40 sister's Śulka (perquisites) belongs to uterine brothers, and then to her mother.¹ As to what Śāṅkha says [viz.] :—"The Sulka [perquisite] belongs to the bridegroom himself;² that must be understood [to relate to] one dying previous to [the celebration of] her marriage. Here Yājñavalkya states specially [ch. ii., v. 146] :—"If she die [after betrothal] the gifts may be taken [by the bridegroom] after the expenses on both sides have been deducted." The meaning is that the husband may take [back] if his bride be dead, what remains of the Sulka (perquisite) previously given, after [deducting] the expenses incurred by himself and her father. On a certain point Baudhāyana states a distinction :—"The wealth of a deceased maiden may be taken 10 equally by the uterine brothers; on failure of them, [by] the mother; or in default of her, [by] the father."³

The Sāmpradāyikās (those conversant with usage) declare that this [text] relates to ornaments and the like presented by the mother's father and the like, at the time of gift by speech⁴ to a girl [who afterwards] dies before [completion of] the marriage.

ANANŚAH (PERSONS EXCLUDED FROM INHERITANCE.)

Yājñavalkya says [ch. ii., v. 140] :—"An impotent person, an outcast, and his issue, one lame, a mad-Persons excluded from heritage. man, an idiot, a blind man, and [a person] 20 afflicted with an incurable disease, are [persons] not entitled to share, and are to be maintained."⁵ Tajjāh, born of him, the outcast.

Those that regain, after division, virility or the other [absent qualifications] by medicine or other [means] do receive their share, like a son born after partition.

Manu [ch. ix., v. 201] [says] :—"The impotent and the outcast are without a share; so are persons born blind and deaf; also a madman, an idiot, one dumb, and such as are destitute of a sense.⁶ Nirindriyāh, [persons] deprived of the sense of smell or the like. Nārada :—"An enemy to his father, an outcast, an impotent person, and apayātrita, 30 or one expelled, should not get a share [of the heritage] even if they be Aurasa (legitimately born sons); how then can a kshetrāja (son by an appointed kinsman) [get under similar circumstances]?"

Persons afflicted with an obstinate and agonizing disease, idiots, the insane, blind and lame, are to be maintained by the * §8 family, but their sons are entitled to take the share.¹ Apayātrita* [means] according to Madana, one outcast by kinsmen after ghaṭasphoṭa (the ceremony of breaking a waterpot), or the like, for high treason or a similar crime. But properly it means one who goes across the sea in a vessel, or the like, to another quarter [of the globe] for trading. Because, communion [with such a person] is forbidden in this Kali age by [the text]. "A dvija [one twice-born] 10 who has passed the sea in a ship, should not be admitted [into the caste] even though he has performed penance [for it],"² and because *ghaṭasphoṭa*³ and excommunication are not proscribed for enmity to the sovereign and the like. Śāṅkha and Likhita [say]:—"Inheritance and oblations of Piṇḍas (boiled rice) and water are withheld from an Apayātrita (a traveller to a distant country)."⁴ Vasiṣṭha:—"Those who have changed [the domestic order] and entered into another are debarred from shares."⁵ The meaning is the naisthika brahmachāri (perpetual student), the Vānaprastha (hermit), and the yati (ascetic). Kātyāyana:—"The son of a woman married out of her order [among 20 the sisters], as also he who is born of a Sagotra (one belonging to the same gotra or family), and an apostate from pravrajyā (or the last order) never obtain the inheritance."⁶ Sagotrāt means one begotten by a man on a wife married from the same gotra. Akramoḍhāsutah [means] according to some, the Kṣhetraja, Kānina and such other [sons].⁷ But properly [speaking], when a younger daughter has been married, whilst her elder sister is still unmarried, they are then both said to be akramoḍhā (or 'married out of order'). If [the son] be of the same class as his father, his qualification for inheriting is declared by the same [author]. "But the son of an akramoḍhā (woman married out of 30 order) may inherit when he belongs to the same class with his father, and so may the son of a woman belonging to a different (superior) class [but] married in [proper] order."⁸ A son begotten even by a husband on a wife sprung from a higher class, cannot inherit, as said by the same [author]:—"The son of a woman married to a man of an inferior class cannot inherit. Food and raiment are considered to be due to him, to the end [of his life] from his kinsmen."⁹

If there be [other] sons endowed with good qualities, the vicious one is not entitled to inheritance according to Manu [who] says [ch. ix., v. 214]:—"All those brothers who are addicted to any vice are not entitled to inheritance."¹ Bṛihaspati:—"Though born of a woman equal in class, a son destitute of virtue is unworthy of the paternal estate; it is declared to belong to those who offer funeral oblations to the deceased, and who are well behaved. A son relieves his father from creditors and debtors; consequently there is no use of a son who acts otherwise."²

tained during life by those who take the inheritance; as Manu says [ch. ix., v. 202]:—"But it is fit that the wise, according to their means, should give food and raiment even to all [disqualified from inheritance] to the last, lest he who does not give become degraded."³ Atyantam [means] during life. To the same effect is the text of Yājñavalkya cited before, [viz.,] Bhartavyāste-nirant-akāh, ("Those excluded from inheritance are to be maintained.") Those who have entered into another order as well as outcasts, and the sons [of both] are not to be maintained. And so Vasishṭha [says]:—"Persons who have entered into another order are incompetent to take shares; 20 so is an impotent person, a madman, or an outcast. Maintenance is to be given to the impotent and madmen."⁴ Here the mention of two in respect of maintenance is [meant] as the exclusion of the other two. Devala:—"When the father is dead, an impotent man, a leper, a madman, an idiot, a blind man, an outcast, the offspring of an outcast, and a person wearing [a prohibited] sign are not competent to take a share of the heritage. Boiled rice and raiment are to be given to them, excepting the outcast."⁵ Līngī, one wearing a prohibited sign. Baudhāyana [says]:—"Let the co-heirs support with food and raiment those who have abandoned popular customs, one blind, 30 an idiot, an impotent person, one in distress, one afflicted with a disease, and persons doing prohibited actions, excepting the outcast and his issue."⁶ According to Madana and others, one degraded from Sannyāsa (the fourth order), and his sons also are not to be maintained.

But the blameless sons of those excluded from inheritance do inherit, according to the text of Viśṇu [which says]:—"The legitimate sons of those alone [out of the persons excluded from inheritance] inherit, but not the sons born to a degraded man. The sons born after the commission of the degrading act, or from a woman of a higher class, cannot inherit. *Nor do their sons participate in the property * ६६ of their paternal grandfather"; and [further] according to the text of Yājñavalkya [which says] [ch. ii, v. 141] :—"But their blameless sons, whether legitimate or Kshetrajā (the offspring by a kinsman), are entitled to inherit."¹ Yājñavalkya prescribes a special rule concerning the daughters and wives of these [ch. ii, vv. 141 and 142] :—"Their daughters should be maintained until they are provided with husbands. Their child-10 less wives conducting themselves aright, should also be supported; but if they are unchaste, they should be expelled, and similarly those who are perverse."² According to Madana and others, in the case of unchastity, they should be expelled and not fed, [while] in the case of perverseness they should indeed be expelled, but maintenance is certainly to be provided for them.

RECOVERY OF DEBTS.

[Ṛṇādānam.]

Herein Bṛhaspati lays down [rules] for [regulating] a creditor's Recovery of Debts. conduct.

20 "A creditor should always lend either after securing a pledge of adequate value, a binding agreement, a surety, or a document, or before witnesses."³ Bandha (a binding agreement) [means] an agreement by the debtor, such as—"As long as your debt is not discharged, so long will I not alienate, either by gift, sale, or mortgage, or in [any other] like [mode] this house, land or other [pledge]."

Lagnaka [means] a surety. The same [author] says :—" [That loan] which is increased to four times, or eight times, is termed kusīda (usury) because it is exacted without compunction, from a kutsita (wretched) and śīdat (distressed)."⁴

no pledge. [Says] Vyāsa:—"Monthly interest is declared to be an eightieth part [of the principal]; if a pledge be given, a sixtieth part; if there be [only] a surety; and two in the hundred when there is no security." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 38]:—" [Borrowers] who travel through forests [should pay] ten, and such as traverse the ocean twenty in the hundred." Dadyuh (should pay) is to be supplied from the following sentence:—"or all of whatever class should pay the interest stipulated by them."¹

Vishnu [says]:—"In all the classes, if a person borrow money under a promise to repay it the next day, and not pay it with the desire 10 of profiting himself, he shall pay interest from that date."² The interest on a yāchita (loan for use) is [thus] declared by Kātyāyana:—"He who having received a loan which he had solicited, goes to a foreign country without restoring it, must pay interest after one year. If a man having contracted an Uddhāra (loan without interest) does not pay, and when applied to, absconds to a [distant] country, that loan shall carry interest after three months. [A debtor] who, residing in his own country, does not pay on demand, shall be made to pay, however unwilling [he may be] interest³ thereon though not stipulated [after the lapse of one year]."⁴ Nārada:—"There shall be no interest, in the absence of a stipulation [to that effect] on things lent through friendship; but interest will run after half a year even without an agreement."⁵ Kātyāyana [says]:—"What has been lent through friendship shall bear no interest until it be demanded back; but if on demand it be not restored, it shall bear interest at the rate of five in the hundred. Should a man, having bought a marketable commodity, go to another country without paying the price, that price shall bear interest after three ritus (i. e. six months).*

Nārada:—"The price of a commodity sold, wages, a deposit, a fine inflicted, an improper gift, and a stake won in gambling, carry no interest without a special agreement."⁷ A'kshika, won in gambling; Avivakshita, without special agreement. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 44]:—"When a creditor does not receive back a loan tendered, it will from that time carry no interest if deposited with a third person."⁸

Bṛihaspati :—“ On precious metals, the interest may make [the debt] double; on clothes and the baser metals, treble; on grain, quadruple; so also on edible vegetable products, beasts of burden, and wool or hair.”¹ Sada [means] flowers, roots, fruits, &c. Vāhya, [vehicles such as] bullocks, &c. Lavaḥ, the wool of sheep, the hair of the chamari (Bos Grunniens), &c. As for [the text of] Manu [ch. viii., v. 151] :—“ Interest on grain, edible vegetable products, on wool or hair, on beasts of burden, must not exceed five times the debts,”² it is a prohibition of sixfold or higher interest. Kātyāyana says :—“ For gems, 10 pearls and coral, for gold and silver, for [cloth made of the produce of] fruit, or of silk, or of wool, the interest stops when it doubles [the debt].”³ Kaiṭam, [cloth] produced by an insect, such as the paṭṭa, dhūḍā, tasari, &c. Vasishṭha :—“ Interest on copper, iron, bell-metal, iron filings, tin, and lead, makes the debt threefold only if long time have elapsed.”⁴ Vyāsa :—“ Interest increasing the debt sixfold is declared allowable on vegetables, cotton, and seeds.”⁵ Kātyāyana :—“ For all sorts of oil and spirituous liquors, for the different kinds of clarified butter, for molasses and salt, interest is known to be octuple.”⁶ Vishnu :—“ On precious metals the highest increase [or interest] 20 shall be double; on cloth, treble; on grain, quadruple; on fluids, octuple; on female slaves and beasts, their offspring shall be taken as interest.” So, “ Flowers, roots, and fruit, what is [sold] by weight the increase is eight-fold.”⁷

Narada :—“ Of interest on loans this is the paramount (rule), but the rate customary in the country where the debt was contracted may be different.”⁸ Sārvabhauma, i. e. paramount or universal. And this relates to a debt doubled, or more than doubled by interest in a single transaction; for if at a different time, a fresh transaction be entered into with a different person, or even with the same person with a less or 30 greater [amount] and the like, in such a case, even the highest (allowable) interest may receive addition. So also Manu [ch. viii., v. 151] :—“ Interest on money received at once (not month by month, or day by day, as it ought) must never be more than double the debt (that is more than the amount of the principal paid at [one and] the same time).”⁹ But in any one transaction where it is realized at various times more than the highest (allowable) interest may be levied according to Vijñāneśvara [Mit. ch. ii., l. 18, p. 2] and the other Sāmpṛadāyikas.

OF PLEDGES.—(A'DHI.)

Bṛhaspati:—"A'dhi is a pledge, and is declared to be divisible into four kinds:—Movable, immovable, for custody [only], and for use."¹ Nārada:—"A pledge is that which is deposited, and is of two kinds, (one) to be released at a fixed time, and (the other) to be retained until payment."²

Hārīta [says]:—"A pledge must be preserved in the same state in which it was deposited, otherwise (the pawner) shall lose his interest, and in case of injury to the pawn, shall forfeit his principal."³ Tyatikramé [means] the destruction of the pledge. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 59]:—"There shall be no interest if a pledge for custody be used or a pledge for use be damaged."⁴ Hāpita* means so injured as to be made * unfit for use. Kātyāyana:—"He who employs on work an unwilling pledge without the assent of the pawner, shall be made to pay the profits of that work, or shall receive no interest."⁵ Karma-kārayit [means] he shall employ; Karma-phalam [is] wages.

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 59]:—"A pledge spoiled, or destroyed, unless by the act of God or the king, shall be made good [by the creditor]."⁶ Nuṣṭhah means deformed [damaged.] Deyah [means] should be restored in its original state. Bṛhaspati:—"A pledge being worn out by enjoyment, the principal is destroyed." Vyāsa declares that in the case of a pledge being destroyed, its value must be paid. "If gold or other (precious) thing shall be pledged, and lost by the fault of the debtor, the creditor, on being paid the principal and interest of his loan, shall be made to pay the price of the pledge."⁷ Nārada:—"If a pledge be destroyed, the principal itself shall be forfeited, unless the loss was caused by the act of God or of the king."⁸ Manu [ch. viii., v. 144]:—"The [pawnee] must satisfy the pawner by the payment of the price [of the loan] lest he should become a thief of the pawn."⁹

Bṛhaspati:—"If a pledge be destroyed by the act of God or the king, the debtor shall be made either to give [another] pledge or pay the principal with interest."¹⁰ Vyāsa [says]:—"If the pledge be destroyed by the act of God or the king, there is no fault of the creditor in any way."¹¹ Kātyāyana:—"If without any fault of the creditor, the pledge be damaged or destroyed, the debtor shall be compelled to deliver another; [as] he is not exonerated from the debt."¹² Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 60] also [says]:—"Acceptance of the pledge is [requisite] for the completion of the contract [of pawn]. If it be lost, [even] when carefully kept, another must be substituted, or the creditor must receive the amount due to him."¹ Nārada :—"Pledges are declared to be of two kinds, moveable and immovable; both are valid if there is [actual] enjoyment, but not otherwise."² Vasishṭha also [says] :—"In the case of several deeds being passed at the same time with respect to one pledge, he who first got possession of it has a superior claim."³ The same :—"If two creditors should, on the very same day, come to take possession of their

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 58] :—"A pledge, not redeemed until the principal is doubled, is forfeited. That with a term of redemption fixed is lost on the expiry of that term; [but] a usufructuary pledge is never forfeited."⁶ Brihaspati :—"Gold being doubled, or in the case of a stipulated period, that period having expired, the creditor becomes the owner of the pledge after a lapse of fourteen days."⁷
20 Vyāsa :—"After giving notice to the debtor's family, a pledge for custody may be appropriated when the principal is doubled; and so may a pledge for a limited period when that period is expired."⁸ Brihaspati :—"When the debt is doubled by the interest, and the debtor is either dead, or has absconded, the creditor may attach his pledge, and sell it in the presence of witnesses."⁹ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 61] :—"A debtor shall be compelled to pay with interest a debt contract on a charitra (friendly) pledge; and to pay two-fold a debt contracted on a chattel delivered as an earnest."¹⁰ When a borrower, from his confidence in the lender, deposits with him a valuable pledge for a small considera-30 tion, or where the lender, from a [like] confidence in the borrower, advances a large sum on a pledge of small value, the transaction is said to be a charitra pledge; or charitra may mean the merit from ablution in the Gangā, &c.; and charitra bandhaka may be a contract where such merit is pledged. In this manner, in case of a charitra pledge of both species, the chattel [pledged] is not destroyed even if the principal be doubled; the payment even of that double * amount must be made. Even in the case of a pledge delivered as an earnest, it is not lost on the principal being doubled.*

The same [ch. ii., vv. 62, 63]:—"The pledge shall be restored to the debtor offering to redeem it, on pain of the creditor not doing so, being deemed a thief. In the absence of the creditor, the debtor may pay the debt to his kinsmen and take back his pledge; or appraising it at its value at the time, may let it remain with the creditor, without interest."¹ The meaning is, if the creditor be not present, he [the debtor] may place the amount of his debt with interest in the hands of some other person of the creditor's family, and take back his pledge; or if he desire to pay the debt by selling the pledge, he may have it valued at the time and leave it with the creditor without interest." Brihaspati:—"When land or other [property] has been enjoyed, and more [than the principal] has accrued therefrom so as to cover the principal and interest, the debtor shall obtain his pledge." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 34]:—"Whenever a debt under mortgage has become doubled by interest, then the pledge shall be returned, when double the principal has been received out of the produce."²

OF SURETIES.

(Pratibhu.)

Now, surety is of three kinds according to Yājñavalkya [ch. ii.,

Sureties.

v. 53]:—"Suretyship is ordained for 20 appearance, for trust, and for payment."³

Pratyayah [means] the inspiring of confidence by saying "this man is honest." Brihaspati, again, mentions four kinds of sureties:—"The first says, 'I will point him out,' the second 'this man is trustworthy,' the third 'I will pay this money,' and the fourth 'I will cause it to be paid.' Arpayāmi means 'I will cause [the debtor] to pay it.'"⁴ Kātyāyana:—"Three Pakṣa (fortnights) at the most should be allowed for the finding of the absconding [principal]. If during that time the surety point him out, then he shall be absolved."⁵ 'Three fortnights' are mentioned only as an example, meaning that so much time must 30 be allowed as is required [for the search].

Kātyāyana:—"If a surety for the appearance of a debtor produce him not at the time and place [agreed on], he shall discharge what he is bound for, unless he was prevented by the act of God or the king."⁶ Nibandhamāvahat [means] shall pay the sum due to the creditor. Brihaspati:—"The two first on failure of their engagement must pay the sum lent at the time stipulated. The two last, and in their default, their issue, shall

This would be so only if the suretyship were entered into without receipt of wealth. In the case of suretyship undertaken after receipt of wealth, the son as well as the grandson shall pay it [the debt] with interest. And, moreover, Kátyáyana [declares] :—“Should a man become surety for the appearance of a debtor, on receipt of a pledge from him, his son shall be compelled to pay that debt even without assets from his father.”⁴

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 55] :—“When there are more sureties than one, they shall pay the debt proportionately. But when they are bound severally, the payment shall be made [by any of them] as the 20 creditor pleases.”⁵ Ekachchháyá [means] the condition made by each severally, that he will pay the whole [debt]; in the case of sureties with such an agreement some one of them shall pay according to the creditor’s demand. It must hence be understood that, in the case of a compact of each to pay his share, payment shall be made accordingly.” Kátyáyana :—“Of sureties jointly and severally bound, any one of them that is found may be made to pay. If he be absent in a foreign country, then his son shall be made to pay the whole; but if he be dead, his son shall pay according to his father’s share.”⁶ Pitransát means in proportion to the father’s share [of the debt guaranteed].

30 Yājñavalkya also [ch. ii., v. 56] :—“When a surety has been made* to pay publicly a debt to the creditor, the debtor shall * § be forced to repay double the sum to the surety.” Brihaspati :—“Should a surety, being harassed, pay the debt for which he was bound, he shall be entitled to receive twice the sum from the debtor, after the lapse of a month and a half.”⁷

vention, violent compulsion, and confinement at home."¹ Prati- pannam [means] assented to by the debtor. Upakramaiḥ [means] by means of remedies. The same author thus explains the [said] remedies:—"When a debtor is made to pay by the advice of friends or kinsmen, by mild remonstrance, by constant following, or by entreaty, 10 that mode of recovery is said to be consonant to equity. When a creditor with an artful design borrows anything of his debtor, or withholds a thing deposited by him, and thus compels payment of the debt, this is called circumvention. It is called violent compulsion when a debtor is tied and taken to the house [of the creditor], and is made to pay his debt by beating and such other means. When a debtor is forced to pay his debt by the tying of his son, wife, and cattle, and by the doorway being obstructed [by the creditor], then is ācharitam (confinement) [said to be used]."² Anugama [means] following. Prāyah [means] importunity. Anvāhitam [means] an ornament or some such thing 20 given to one to be handed over to another. With regard to the application of these remedies, Kātyāyana says:—"Let a creditor procure payment from a king, master, or a Brāhmaṇa by mild expostulation alone; from a friend or heir, by circumvention alone. Bhṛigu ordains that traders, cultivators of land, and artisans must be made to pay according to the custom of the country; while violent compulsion may be used in the case of the wicked [debtors]."³ The same [author adds]:—"The debtor may be [dragged before] an assemblage of people, and [there] restrained until he pay the debt, according to the custom of the country."⁴ The same [author] forbids the restraint 30 of [a debtor] confined in respect of evacuations:—"If [one] confined should need the voiding of urine or fæces, he should be followed, or should furnish a security."⁵ Nibandham [means] a son or the like [as a hostage] in lieu of himself.

The same [author] adds that the confined [debtor] should be set free for meals on receiving a security for his furnished security, he should be released every day at the hour of meals and at night [while] the security remains in custody. He who cannot man should not be confined in jail; [but] may be released without a surety, or with a surety [taken], or on his oath."¹ Na vá áśrayet [means] does not offer. Cháráke [means] in a house of correction. Rakṣṣīnah, &c. should be made over to guards. Prátyayikāḥ, trustworthy.

Bṛihaspati [says] :—"The creditor may [either] recover a debt, the interest on which has ceased [owing to] the limit having been exceeded, or [he] may obtain a writing allowing compound interest."² "Purṣāva-dhau [means] when doubling or the like has taken place. Hence the possibility of interest ceasing. Udgrāhayet should take. Chakravṛddhi 10 [means] the calculation of interest on the interest added to the principal. Nárada (says) :—"If owing to adverse times a debtor should be disabled, he should be made to pay [by instalments] from time to time, according to his ability as he improves."³ Manu [says] [ch. viii., v. 177] :—"The debtor, if of an equal or a lower class, shall pay off the creditor by [personal] labour; but if of a higher class shall pay it little by little."⁴ As for [the text of] Yājñavalkya [which says] [ch. ii., * 30 v. 43] :—"A disabled [debtor] of an inferior class should be made to work for [the payment of] his debts; a disabled Bráhmaṇa, however, should be made to pay gradually, according to his 20 ability;"⁵ the word Bráhmaṇa [here] refers to one of a superior class. The same adds [ch. ii., v. 40] :—"A creditor recovering an acknowledged debt will not be liable to the blame of the king; [and] if the debtor should complain to the king, he should be fined and made to pay the debt."⁶ Bṛihaspati [says] :—"This is the law in regard to an acknowledged [debt]; a [debtor], denying [his liability], shall be made to pay on proof by writing or witnesses. In a doubtful case, [the debtor], who claims an adjudication, should on no account be restrained; [for], he who restrains one who deserves no restraint, becomes liable to fine according to law."⁷ Ásedhak means restraint under royal 30 orders. The same :—"That debtor is termed Kriyávádi (one claiming adjudication), who says 'I will pay what may be found to be justly due.'<"⁸ Kátyáyana :—"A creditor who harasses a debtor claiming adjudication, shall forfeit his claim and pay an equal fine."⁹ Bṛihaspati :—"In [the case of] a contested claim, whoever proceeds [to recover his debt himself] without reporting [the matter] to the king, shall be seized and punished; and his claim will not succeed."¹⁰ Yama :—"A solvent debtor, who does not pay through wickedness, shall be made to pay [his debt] by the king who shall also take [a fine of] double the amount." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 42]:—"The king shall make the debtor pay to him ten in the hundred of the awarded [claim]; and the successful creditor to pay five in the hundred."¹ Daśukam [means] with an excess of ten; in other words, the tenth and the twentieth share. The sense is that those shares belong to the king, and the rest to the creditor. The levy of a tenth [share] refers to a poor [debtor]. Nārada lays down a special rule in regard to a wealthy [debtor]:—"A debtor who being wealthy does not pay through wickedness, shall be made to pay [his debt] by the king who shall [also] take [a fine of] twenty [in the hundred]."² Vinākam 10 means twenty in the hundred.

Yājñavalkya states the order [of payment] in the case of more creditors than one coming to claim at one and the same time [ch. ii., v. 41]:—"A debtor shall be made to pay his creditors in the order of loans,³ after discharging [those of] a Brāhmaṇa and afterwards to the king."⁴ Kātyāyana quoted in the Vivāda Ratnākara says:—"If there are many debts at once, that which was first contracted shall first be paid after those of the king or a Śrotriya (a Brāhmaṇa learned in the Vedās). In the case of [contracts] written on the same day, the debt, the payment, the balance and the interest should be equal. In all other 20 cases [the payment shall be] according to the order of time. He who proves that a certain thing was purchased [by the debtor] with his loan, shall be entitled to payment from the debtor, and not otherwise."⁵

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 93]:—"The debtor shall write the sums paid by him [at several times] on the back of the document, or the creditor shall give an acknowledgment in his own hand."⁶ Nārada [says]:—"When a debt is liquidated, [the creditor] shall pass a deed [of acquittance], or in its absence make a [public] acknowledgment. There will thus be a mutual acquittance of both the creditor and the debtor."⁷ Pratīśravah [means] a deed of acquittance declaring satisfaction [of the 30 debt].⁸ Kātyāyana states the evil results [ensuing] to a debtor on the nonpayment of debt:—"He who having obtained a debt or the like does not repay it to the creditor, shall be born again [to be] a slave, servant, wife, or a beast [of burden] in the house of the latter."⁹ Uddhārah

By [the use of the word] Adi (et cetera), a [gratuitous] loan and a deposit are [meant to be] included. Dāsah [means] a born slave. Bhṛityah [means] one purchased for a price. Nārada [says]:—“The debt or loan which the debtor does not repay [even] on demand shall multiply till it reaches to a thousand millions. On that amount having been reached, [the debtor] suffering [the consequences of] that act shall in each* [successive] birth be a horse, an ass, * ॐ a bullock, or a slave.”¹ Pratigraha means [that which was] promised to be given. 10 agnihotri (the keeper of a perpetual sacrificial fire) should die in debt, [the merit of] those austerities or that worship of the fire will belong to the creditor.”²

Bṛihaspati says:—“The sons should pay the debt of their father when proved, as [though it were] their own; the debt of the grandfather should be paid without interest, the sons of grandsons need not pay.”³ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 50]:—“When the father is abroad, dead, or immersed in difficulties,⁴ his debt, proved by witnesses if disputed, should be paid by the son and the grandson.”⁵ Nārada states that the debt should be paid by a son and the like who is twenty years old:—
20 “When the father, the father’s brother, or the eldest brother have gone abroad, the son shall not [be made to] pay before his twentieth year.”⁶ Kātyāyana:—“The debt [contracted] by the father, who though living is afflicted with a disease, or has remained away from his country, shall be paid after the twentieth year.”⁷ The word Proshita is illustrative even of one dead. For the same reason Vishṇu [says]:—“When the borrower is dead, or becomes a Sannyāsin (a religious anchorite), or has lived abroad for twenty years, the debt should be paid by his sons and grandsons.”⁸ Nārada:—“On the death of the father, the sons, whether separated or united, shall pay his debt according to their 30 shares, or he who succeeds to the charge [of the family affairs].”⁹ Kātyāyana:—“While the father’s debts remain [unpaid], the son shall not take the wealth of the father, which should be made over to the creditor; where [the father dies] without wealth, the son should be made to pay.”¹⁰ The term dravyam is to be construed with rite, [so that] the meaning is ‘without wealth.’ Bṛihaspati [says]:—“The father’s debts must be first paid; and then those of himself; the grandfather's debts should be paid before both. This is the manner in which debts should always be paid."¹

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 47] :—"The son shall not pay the paternal [debts] contracted for wines, lust and gambling, or due on account of the unpaid [portion] of a fine or a toll, or [on account of] an idle promise."² Brihaspati [says] :—"The son shall not be made to pay [the debts due by the father] on account of wines, dicing (gambling), idle promises, promises made under [the influence of] lust or anger, suretyship, and the unpaid portion of a fine or a toll."³ Uśenas [says] :—"The son need not pay the fine, or the balance of a fine, a toll or the 10 balance of a toll, or [any debt of the father] which is not proper."⁴

Yājñavalkya mentions the order of those [who are] bound to pay the debts [ch. ii., v. 51] :—"He who has received the estate or the wife [of the deceased], should be made to pay his debts; or failing them, the son who has not received an inheritance (ananyāśrita). In the case of a sonless [deceased], those who take the heritage [should be made to pay]."⁵ Rikthagrāha means one who takes the wealth [of the deceased] [either] justly, because his son, though living, is [laboring under] impotence or [other] similar disqualification; [or] unjustly [because there exists a son] without [any] defects. Yoshidgrāha 20 [is] one who similarly takes the wife of another. Ananyāśritadravyatvam (absence of the receipt of inheritance) is possible in two ways, because the negation [here spoken of] may either refer to property which belonged [at one time] to another or to property merely.⁶ [The sum and substance is] :—Here (i. e. among those bound to pay debts) he who receives the estate is the first; failing him, the taker of the wife; failing him, a son [who has] received no inheritance; failing him, the son's son to the extent of the principal; failing him the rikthinah, i. e. those who take the estate, such as the son of son's son, wife, the daughter, or the like. When no inheritance has been received, the 30 son of son's son, wife, or the like, need not pay [the debts]. The receipt of assets howsoever small will entail the repayment of debts however large.⁷ [The liability] cannot be limited to [the receipt of] equal or larger assets.* Another meaning of the last pāda † ३२ (quarter of the verse) is that in the case of a sonless creditor, his heirs, who succeed to his estate, such as the wife, the daughter, and the rest, may recover [the debts] from the debtors of their husbands, and the like [respectively]. Vishnu [says]:—"The debts [of a deceased], whether with or without a son, shall be paid by the receiver of assets."¹ Brihaspati [says]:—"In the absence of a receiver of assets, he who takes the wife would be similarly [made to pay]."² Kātyāyana [says]:—"The son shall be made to pay the debts [of his father] when he is not afflicted [with any disease], is solvent and of age; but not otherwise. The taker of the assets shall first [be made to] pay; after him the son; in the absence of a son, or in the case of the son being indigent, the taker of the wife."³ Nārada [says]:—"If the wife with the [family] wealth and her offspring should seek [the protection of] a stranger, he should pay the debts of her husband, or else give her up."⁴ Kātyāyana [says]:—"The debt [contracted] by drunkards and the like having no wealth or issue, shall be paid by the paramours of their wives." Nārada [says]:—"Of the successor to the wealth, the taker of the wife, and a son, he who takes the wealth shall pay debts. The son [shall pay] in the absence of the takers of the wealth or the wife; and the taker of the wife in the absence of a successor to the wealth or a son."⁵ The meaning of the last Pāda (quarter) is that the taker of the wife shall pay the debt in the absence of the successor to the wealth and of a son; as [mentioned] in the aforesaid text of Yājñavalkya. Kātyāyana [says]:—"Bhrigu says that debts contracted for family [purposes], though without authority, by the slave, wife, mother, pupil, or son of one who has gone on a distant journey, shall be paid." Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 46]:—"A woman need not pay the debts of her husband or son; nor the father those of his son, nor the husband those of his wife, unless contracted on account of the family."⁶ Kātyāyana [says]:—"That which has been promised or accepted [by ratification]."⁷ Nārada [says]:—"The debt contracted by a son in distress shall be paid by the father."⁸ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 48]:—"Among herdsmen, vintners, dancers, washermen, and hunters, the husband shall pay the debts of his wife; because his livelihood depends upon her."⁹ The same [ch. ii., v. 49]:—"A woman shall pay the debts agreed to by her, or contracted by her jointly with the husband, or by herself alone; she shall pay no other debts."¹⁰ A

* OF DEPOSITS.

[Nikshepa.]

Nārada [says]:—"Where one bails his goods to another in confidence [and] without suspicion, that is termed by the wise a Nikshepa (deposit), [which is] a head of law. That is said to be an Uṇmūlhi, which is made over uncounted, unseen, and under seal, and that Nikshepa [which is made over] after describing it."⁸ Brihaspati [says]:—"The merit of preserving a deposit is the same as that of giving gold, inferior metals, or clothes, or of protecting one who beseeches protection. The very thing 80 bailed should be returned to the very bailor and in the same manner [as bailed]; it should not be handed over to a near kinsman [of the bailor]."⁹ Nyāsa [means] a deposit. Pratyānantara is a near kinsman of the bailor.

Manu [ch. viii., v. 191] :—"He who restores not a deposit, or he who demands what was not bailed, shall both be punished like thieves, or shall be made to pay a sum equal [to the sum bailed]."¹ Brihaspati [says] :—"If the bailee destroy the deposit owing to his particular negligence, or refuse to return it or demand, he shall be made to pay that [i. e. its value] with interest."² Bheda means [difference in the] care [bestowed] upon his own property [and a deposit]. Hence no blame of negligence attaches to the destruction [of the deposit] [if] along with that, bailee's property should be destroyed. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 67] :—"The bailee making his living without authority [by the use of the deposit] shall be punished, and made to pay it with interest."³ Ājīvan means [one] living by using [it], or letting it out at interest. Udaya [means] interest, in regard to which Kātyāyana mentions a special rule :—"A deposit, the balance of interest, [the commodity] sold, and [the price of] a thing purchased, not being paid on demand, shall bear interest at five per cent."⁴ Manu [ch. viii., v. 192] :—"The king shall fine a depositary of a Nikshepa (an ascertained deposit), in a sum equal [to the value of the deposit], much more so that of an upanidhi (an unascertained deposit), if he should deny the deposit."⁵ Brihaspati [says] :—"There is no fault [of the depositary] if the deposit be destroyed along with [some] effects [of the depositary] by the act of God or the king."⁶ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 66] :—"That which has been removed by [an act of] the king, or God, or thieves, shall not be caused to be restored."⁷ Manu [ch. viii., v. 186] :—"He who, by his own free act, restores [a deposit] to the next [kinsman] of the deceased, shall not be harassed by the king or by the kinsmen of the bailor." Pratyantara [means] the nearest. The meaning is "he shall not be harassed with a demand of more in the absence of proof." Brihaspati dictates the whole of this law of deposits in regard to other [transactions] :—"This same law applies in the case of Anvāhita (a bailment for delivery), yāchitaka (a loan for use), a bailment with an artist, a pledge, and a person surrendering himself for protection."⁸ Anvāhita is [something] handed over to another after saying 'a particular person deposited this with me; and you shall deliver this to him.' Yāchitaka is an ornament or the like borrowed on occasions of marriage or such other [ceremony] for show. Silpinyāsa is [something] made over to a goldsmith or the like for [being made into] an earring or the like. The same [author] states the rule about the reduction of metals other than gold, when heated in fire [ch. ii., v. 178]:—"Gold is not reduced by fire; silver loses two palas in the hundred; tin and lead, eight; copper, five; iron, ten."⁵ In the case 20 of a loss to a greater extent of silver or other metals, the goldsmith or a similar artizan should be punished. The same [author] speaks of an increase [in weight] when yarn has been supplied to workmen [ch. ii., v. 179]:—"In the case of woollen and cotton yarns the increase is ten palas in the hundred; [so] in [cloth of] middling quality, five; and in [cloths of] fine quality, three [palas]."⁶ The same author speaks of reduction in certain cases [ch. ii., v. 180]:—"A reduction of a thirtieth part is allowed in embroidered cloths and cloths made of hair. There is neither an increase nor a decrease in the case of silken cloths or barks."⁷ Kārmika means a cloth upon 30 which figures like the Svastika are worked by different yarns.⁸ The same [author] *speaks of the freedom from blame of an artizan in the case of loss or refusal to return the bailment on demand before the stipulated time.⁹ "In the case of [loans taken] for a particular purpose or [for a particular] time, if a demand is made before the proper time, and [the deposit] is not returned [accordingly], [the bailee]

SALE WITHOUT OWNERSHIP.

[Asvāmi-vikraya.]

- 10 Vyāsa:—"When the wealth of another, whether borrowed for use, bailed for delivery, or stolen, is sold in the owner's absence, that [sale] is a sale without ownership." Kātyāyana:—"A sale, a gift, or a pledge made without ownership should be rescinded."⁴ Asvāmi, without an owner, is a word by itself and is an adverb. Nārada:—"An open purchase by a purchaser is pure; a purchase made in secret is a theft. A purchase made from a slave who has no authority from his master, or secretly from a bad man, [or] at a very low price, [or] at an unusual hour, becomes affected by that contamination."⁵ Taddoṣha (that contamination) [meaning] the thief's contamination. Panchabandha [means]* a fifth share of the lost property.

- * 34 When the evidence given by the witnesses adduced by the loser is contrary to his claim, he should be fined in double the amount of the lost property, as Vyāsa says:—"If the plaintiff prove not his lost thing by witnesses, he should be compelled to pay twice its value as fine, and the purchaser is entitled to the thing."⁷ He also lays down the course to be pursued by the purchaser:—"If the
- 30 seller is produced, the purchaser is by no means to be condemned, for then litigation is [to be carried on] between the owner of the thing lost and the seller."⁸ Bṛhaspati:—"When the seller has been produced and has been condemned in the law-suit, he should [be made to] pay the price to the buyer and a fine to the king, and to restore the property to its owner.”¹ Kātyāyana:—“Let time be given to the buyer for the production of the seller according to the length of the road;² if the seller cannot be produced, the buyer should be made to justify the purchase. If the purchase is justified, he [the purchaser] should in no wise be blamed by the king. The claimant should first prove his property by evidence of kinsmen; next, to clear himself, the buyer should prove a fair purchase by his kinsmen.”³

Even if the purchaser clearly prove the sale, still the property does revert to the person who lost it. And so Manu [ch. viii., v. 202]:—“Now if the vendor be not producible, and if [the sale be justified by] the vendee as an open sale, the latter should be dismissed by the king without punishment; and the property reverts⁴ to the person who lost it.”⁵ Anáhārya, not having been made to appear. The meaning is that the thing [is] justified by an open sale. Kātyāyana:—“The defendant not producing the seller, nor even establishing an open sale, the thing claimed should be caused to be delivered to the claimant, and the seller should be made to pay a fine.”⁶ Brihaspati:—“If a purchase be made from an assembly of traders with the knowledge of the king’s officers, or from a seller whose dwelling-place is unknown, or where the seller is dead, the owner of the thing may⁷ recover it on paying half the price given. In such a case half the value must be lost to each of them from legal considerations.”⁸ Marichi:—“But where the seller cannot be found, his dwelling place being unknown, the loss should be borne equally by the buyer and by the owner who has lost the thing.”⁹ Niveśa [means] the residence of the vendor. Nārada:—“What is permitted, whether women, beasts or the earth, that only should be enjoyed. He who enjoys them without leave, should be made to pay the profit of such enjoyment.”¹⁰ Uddiṣṭam [means] permitted. Bhukta-bhogam [means] profit arising out of enjoyment. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 178]:—“The owner of a thing¹¹ lost or stolen, which had been found by customs-officers or watchmen, shall take it [if claimed] within one year, after which the king shall retain it.”¹² As to this [says] Manu [ch. viii., v. 80]:—“The king should cause to be detained, for three years, property of which no owner appears.”¹³ After three years, the owner [if found out] can take it away.

After [three years, if the owner is not found out] the king may retain it.” This has reference to property of which a Śrotriya (one conversant in the Vedas) is the owner. The same [ch. viii., v. 33]:—“The king remembering the duty of the righteous may take a sixth, or a tenth, or a twelfth part of the property which had been lost and found.”² Here, in the first year, he should give up the whole of the property; in the second year, he should give it up, after retaining a twelfth part; in the third year, a tenth; in the fourth and the rest, a sixth.*

- * ॐ After which the king shall retain it, this only refers to an injunction to expend it in case its owner does not appear within three years; but if the owner appear, it must be returned to him, even if expended; thus says the Mitāksharā. This, however, only if the owner be unknown; for if it be known ‘that such an one went away forgetfully leaving the said property behind,’ then he shall get it back even after three years. Even the king has no right to spend it; but he should take a certain portion as his share.

- Yājñavalkya speaks of the remuneration to the keeper for protecting for a day the stray animals of another found [by him] [ch. ii., v. 174]:—“The owner of stray animals must pay four pañas, if the animal be of the species with single hoofs; five pañas for human beings; two for every buffalo, camel, cow, or animal with cloven hoofs; but only a fourth for every goat or sheep.” But their food must be paid for besides.

- On the subject of nidhī (treasure-trove) Yājñavalkya says:—[ch. ii., vv. 34, 35]:—“The king having found treasure-trove, should give half to the twice-born;³ but a learned Brāhmaṇa [finding treasure-trove] may keep the whole, for he is lord of all. [34.] The king should receive a sixth part of treasure-trove found by any other person. In case where information is not given by the finder, he [the finder] must be made to pay a fine [in addition to the king’s share].”⁴ If however any one prove by mark, measure, or otherwise, that the property found belongs to himself, in that case the king should deliver it to him after giving a twelfth part to the finder, and taking a sixth himself. This is stated by Manu [ch. viii., v. 35]:—“When a man claims treasure-trove, declaring truly, ‘This is my own property,’ the king should still retain his sixth share and also a twelfth.” The twelfth being taken to be given to the finder. On the subject of property carried off by thieves the same author says [ch. viii., v. 40]:—“Let property carried off by thieves be restored by the king to the 40 owner of whatever class he may be; if the king appropriate it, the sin

Nárada:—"Where traders or others jointly carry on business, it is called a 'concern among partners,' a title of judicial procedure."³ Brihaspati:—"Whatever property a man may lend with the assent of 10 many, or whatever business⁴ [transaction] he may cause to be performed is [considered] as the act of all [partners]. They are themselves declared [to be] competent arbitrators and witnesses for each other in doubtful cases, and in cases of deceit, provided they bear no enmity to either party. Should one of the partners be discovered to be fraudulent in buying or selling, he too is to be cleared by [the ordeal of] an oath; such is the rule in all [such] controversies."⁵ Yájñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 265, 260]:—"A man of crooked ways should be expelled [by the other partners] without profit; a partner unable to act may appoint another man to act for him [265]. RESUMPTION OF GIFT.

(Dattāpradānikam.)

- 10 Nārada:—"When a man, having unduly given a thing, desires to take it back, it is called Resumption of Gift, which is a title of judicial procedure."⁴ Asamyak (unduly) is an adverb, [and] means in a prohibited [mode]. The same [says]:—"In civil affairs, the law of gift is fourfold, what may be given, or what may not be given, and what is a valid gift, or is not a valid gift. What is bailed for delivery, what is borrowed for use, a pledge, joint property, a deposit, a son, a wife, and the whole estate of a man who has issue living, the sages have declared unalienable, as also what has been promised to another." Here as a man has no property in his wife or son, the express prohibition of a 20 gift of them is only explanatory [like the Vedic text], 'neither in the middle region nor skies nor in the heavens.'⁵ Thus the exception stated by Yājñavalkya in the text [ch. ii., v. 175]:—"Without causing detriment to the family property [everything] may be given except a wife and son,"⁶ is also explained. The non-existence of property in a wife or son has been already explained in discussing the subject of ownership.

In making gift of these things not only will the act be untenable in law, but penance also must be performed, as says Dakṣha in reference to these things. "The man who gives [them] away is a fool and must 30 expiate the sin by penance."⁷ Manu:—"He who receives what may not be given, and he who gives it away, shall both be punished like thieves, and both be caused to pay the highest fine."⁸ What may be given is [thus] declared by Brihaṭ:—“What remains after the food and clothing of the family [have been provided for] may be given.”¹ Kātyāyana declares what must be given without fail:—“He who having voluntarily promised a present to a Brāhmaṇa does not deliver it, should be compelled to pay it as a debt, and should be mulcted in the lowest fine.”² Gautama:—“A man should not give even what he has promised, to a person not following the duties of life.”³ Gift or sale of a *Vṛitti is thus forbidden by Vyāsa:—“They who are born or yet unbegotten, and they who are still in the womb, wish for means of livelihood: no gift or sale [of a Vṛitti] should therefore be made.”⁴ Nārada thus distinguishes 10 between valid and void gifts:—“Valid gifts are said to be of seven kinds,* and void ones of sixteen. They who know the law * of gifts declare that [1] the price of purchased goods, [2] wages, [3] a present made after being pleased [with poets, musicians, &c.], [4] a present] proceeding from natural affection, [5] [or] from gratitude, [6] a nuptial gift [to the brother of the bride], and [7] a gift for merit, cannot be resumed.”⁶ Anugrahaḥ [means] dharma or religious purposes. What was given through pain of [1] fear, [2] anger, [3] or intense grief; so also [4] a bribe, [5] what was given in jest, or [6] by mistake, or [7] through fraud, what was 20 bestowed by [8] a minor, [9] an idiot, [10] a person under duress, [11] a diseased person, [12] an intoxicated person, [13] an insane person, or [14] made in consideration that the donee will do some service, [but which has not been performed], [15] what was given through ignorance to a bad man who pretended to be good, and [16] for an undertaking said to be righteous; [these gifts] are declared as not given [or void].”⁷ Ruk [means] pain. The construction is pain caused by fear, &c. The meaning is what was given by one oppressed by fear of being beaten or the like; in the same manner what was given [to others] through anger against brothers and such other persons, [in order 30 that the latter may be deprived thereof]. Vyatyāsa [means] mistake; as when gold is given, while the intention was to give silver. Chhālayoga, practising fraud—such as if the king intended to give a cow to Devadatta and it was given to another who had personated Devadatta, even though the latter may have been a deserving person. Ārttaḥ, one whose mind is unsettled by disease. Maittaḥ, inebriated with some intoxicating drug. Unmaittaḥ, affected by wind in the head or delirium. Apavarjitam [means] given. — t made to one who fails to do the work which the donor thought he would do; a gift made to one practising sinful arts under the belief that he will perform a righteous act; these gifts revert [to the donor]. Kátyáyana:—“What was given by men through lust or anger, or by one not his own master, or by one diseased, or deprived of virility, or by one inebriated, or of unsound mind, may be taken back in order that the effects of mistake may be averted.”¹ Kámát, in order to seduce another's wife. Klibah, frightened [into unmanliness]. Vyatyása, &c.

10 what was given as a bribe for preventing the effects of a mistake. That Utkocha [or bribe] which is promised to be given for the accomplishment of any object, should not be given even if that object be accomplished. But if it have already been actually given, it should be restored by force, and a fine equal to eleven times [its value] should be inflicted according to the followers of Garga.”² The same author explains the nature of utkocha (a bribe):—“Whatever is received for withholding information of a thief, a felon, a man violating the rules of his class, and an adulterer; for secreting a wicked man, or by threatening to denounce a man by giving false testimony against him, is denominated

Manu [ch. viii., v. 165]:—“When [the judge] discovers fraud in a pledge or sale, a gift or acceptance, or in any [other transaction] whatever, he should annul the whole transaction.”⁴ Yoga [means] fraud. In whatever other transaction the taint of fraud is discovered, all that should be reversed; this is the meaning. Kátyáyana:—“If a gift be promised by a person whether in health or in sickness, for a religious purpose, and he die without making it, his son should be compelled to make it; of this there is no doubt.”⁵ Further explanation of this subject may be found by referring to the Dvaitanirṇaya by my

He is also called the [head] family servant.”²

Kātyāyana :—“ According to Bhrigu, one who is free, by giving himself becomes a slave like a wife. Slavery should be known as [limited] to three classes, never can a Brāhmaṇa become a slave. The servitude of men of the military, commercial, and servile classes who give up their freedom, is [to be] in the direct, not in the inverse order of the 10 classes.”³ Nārada :—“ In the inverse order of the classes, slavery is not ordained.”⁴ Kātyāyana :—“ When men of the three twice-born classes forsake the fourth order [proper to the twice-born], [the king] should banish a man of the [sacerdotal class], and reduce to slavery a man of the Kshatriya [or military] class, as Bhrigu says.”⁵ The use of the term ‘Kshatra’ is intended to include the Vaiśya and Śūdra classes.

Dakṣha and Nārada relate the method of banishing a Brāhmaṇa :—“ He, who having entered on the fourth order [called Sanyāsa] does not abide by its duties, should be instantly banished by the king with the mark of a dog’s foot.” Kātyāyana :—“ But even a man of equal class 20 must not reduce a Brāhmaṇa to slavery ; a mild and learned man may indeed employ in labour one inferior to himself in qualities ; but the highest twice-born man should not perform even the slightest impure work.”⁶ Manu [ch. viii., v. 411] :—“ Both him of the military and him of the commercial class if distressed for a livelihood, a Brāhmaṇa should support, making them perform without harshness some work appropriate to them.”⁷ Śrāmi-Karma, meaning some respectable work as may be suited [to their class]. king who should annul what they may have done. He who impelled by lust should enslave a woman of [good] family [who went to him] for refuge, or cause her to go to another [for a like purpose], shall be punished, and his act shall be made void. He who treats as a slave the nurse of an infant child, or one not¹ a nurse, or the wife of his dependant should be mulcted in the lowest fine."² Vishṇu:—"He who employs one of the highest class in slavish work shall be fined in the highest amercement."³ Kātyāyana:—"He who not being in distress and able [to maintain her], wishes to sell a devoted female slave [resisting the sale] by her cries, shall be fined in the lowest amercement."⁴

Nārada enumerates the different kinds of slaves:—"The home-born; one bought; one received [by gift]; one received by inheritance; one maintained in a time of famine; and likewise one pledged by a [former] master; one released from a heavy debt; one made captive in war; one won in a stake; one who comes [forward], saying 'I am thine'; an apostate from religious asceticism; one who has become slave for a stipulated time; one [who has become] a slave [merely] for maintenance; one enamoured of a vaḍavā (domestic female slave), i.e. he [who has become a slave by marrying her]; and one who has sold himself." 20 These are the fifteen kinds of slaves declared by law. Of these the first four cannot be released from slavery except at the pleasure of their masters, [for] their servitude has come by descent. That human wretch who, being independent, sells himself, is the vilest of [them] all. He also cannot be released from slavery. Of all these, whoever rescues his master from imminent danger to his life, should be released from slavery, and should receive the share of a son."⁵ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 188]:—"He who having become a Sannyāsi (a religious ascetic) falls from that order, shall become the slave of the king for life."⁶ Nārada:—"One maintained in a time of 30 famine shall be released* from slavery on giving a pair of * 40 oxen. One pledged shall be also released when his master redeems him by discharging the debt. On paying a debt with interest, a debtor is released from slavery. He who has become slave by saying, 'I am thine,' one made captive in war, and he who was won in a stake, are emancipated on giving a substitute who will do

In this section the word slave not being expressly confined to the masculine gender, all these rules should throughout be understood as applying to female slaves also.

Kātyāyana states a reason for enfranchising female slaves :—"If a man approach his own female slave, and she bear him issue in consequence, she should, in consideration of the seed, be enfranchised with the child."⁵ Bijam [means] seed or offspring of good qualities. Nārada :—"He who pleased at heart, wishes to emancipate his own slave, should take a jar of water from his [slave's] shoulders, break 20 it when full of water, and sprinkle the water with rice and flowers on his head; and having pronounced him free three times, he should then dismiss him with his face turned towards the east. Thenceforward he should be said to be cherished by his master's favour; his food is fit to be eaten, his gifts fit to be accepted, and himself is fit to be respected by worthy people."⁶ Kātyāyana :—"A female who is not a slave, if married by a slave, becomes a slave, for her husband is her lord; and that lord is subject to his master. The duty of the king in these matters is thus laid down by Bṛihaspati:—"Assembling Bráhmaṇas conversant with the Vedas, Śrotriyaś (learned teachers of the Vedas), and Agnihotris (those who keep the three perpetual domestic fires), the king should establish them [in his kingdom], and assign them a maintenance. He should grant to them houses and lands, exempt from land-tax and [other] taxes, after recording [the fact of the grant] in his own mandate."¹ Anāchchhedyakaráh [means] those [houses and lands] on which taxes are not to be levied. Muktabhāvayāh [means] those [lands and houses] which are exempted from [a payment of the share of] the produce from land or the like. Of those Śrotriyaś (persons learned in the Vedas) and the rest, Yājñavalkya thus lays down the law [ch. ii., v. 186]:—"Customary law as well as usages established by kings should be carefully upheld, if not inconsistent with [the revealed] law."² Nārada:—"The king should maintain the Samaya or established usages prevailing among bodies of Pákhaṇḍis, Naigamas, Śreni, Pugas, and Vrátas, as well as [obtaining] in forts or countries."³ The Śrenis are communities of persons of different castes, carrying on one kind of trade or business. In regard to an article bought after an examination of it by himself, says Nārada:—"A purchaser who having bought an article for a price, thinks that he has made a bad purchase, should return it to the seller the same day without seeing it" [i. e. return it as received]. If the purchaser return it on the second day, he shall forfeit a thirtieth part of the price; if on the third day, twice as much [i. e. fiftieth part]; and after that it [i. e. the commodity] is altogether the buyers."⁵ Nārada [says]:—"But a used garment which is soiled, and dirtied when purchased, cannot be returned to the seller though possessing 20 blemishes."⁷ End of 'Rescission of Purchase.'

DISPUTES BETWEEN THE MASTER AND THE HERDSMAN.

[Svāmipālavivāda.]

On the damage done to cattle and other animals by the fault of the herdsman, [says] Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 165] :—"When injury is done [to animals] by the fault of the herdsman, the fine ordained for him is twelve paṇas and a half,⁸ and he should restore the thing [i. e. the animal] to the owner."⁹ Dravyam (the thing) [means] a cow or

Manu lays down the mode of ascertaining the death of cattle or other animals [ch. viii., v. 234]:—"When animals die, let him [i. e. the herdsman] carry to his master their ears, their hides, their hair, the skin below the navel, their tendons, and the pigments [found in their foreheads]; let him also show [other] marks."¹ Āṅka, according to Madana, [means] horns and the like. Yājñavalkya defines the portion of ground [to be set apart] as pasture for kine and other animals [ch. ii., v. 167]:—"A space should be left between one village and another village [measuring] one hundred dhanus [or 400 cubits] in extent; [measuring] two hundred dhanus around a country town, 10 and four hundred dhanus about a city."² Parīṇāha [is] the land appropriated for pasture of kine and other animals. This [parīṇāha] is the parihāra (enclosure) mentioned by Manu in the text [ch. viii., v. 237]:—"Round about a village a parihāra (enclosure) should be left of one hundred dhanus." A kharvaṭa is a village having several artificers and husbandmen.³ According to some⁴ it is a place * ८३ abounding in thorny shrubs. Yājñavalkya states the fine to be paid by the owner of a beast which has eaten the corn or the like of another [ch. ii., vv. 159, 160, 161]:—" [The owner of] a she-buffalo doing damage to corn shall be fined eight *māśas*⁵ [for each animal]; 20 that of a cow, half of that; and that of a goat or sheep, a half of that again. [Again] for cattle eating and lying down in the field, the fine is double the [one], mentioned [above]. The fine is equal in the case of lands where grass or fuel is stored, and the fine for an ass or a camel is the same as that for a she-buffalo. As much corn as may be destroyed shall be paid to the owner of the field; the herdsman shall be scourged, but the owner of the cattle incurs the fine already declared."⁶ Vivitaṃ [means] a place for storing grass, wood, or the like. BOUNDARY DISPUTES.

Bṛihaspati states the means whereby boundaries may be known :—"Dry cow-dung, bones, husks of grain, charcoal, gravel stones, potsherds, sand, bricks, cows' hair, cotton seeds, and ashes having been placed in vessels, should be deposited underground at the extremities of the boundary."⁴ Yājñavalkya distinguishes the witnesses required in this matter [ch. ii., v. 152] :—" Sāmantas,⁵ men of the neighbouring villages, or of that in which the disputed ground is situated, equal in number [from each village] [being] either four, eight or ten, having put on a garland of red flowers
20 and a red dress, and taking some of the earth [on their heads], shall point out the true boundary."⁶ Nārada :—"A single man shall not point out a [disputed] boundary, even if he knew it; for from the weighty nature of this business, this act [viz., the pointing out] rests with many."⁷ Bṛihaspati :—"In default of persons knowing [the boundary] and [where the aforesaid] marks [of a boundary] are wanting, even a single man who is virtuous and upright, and is agreed to by both parties, having put on a garland of red flowers and red clothes, and taking some earth on his head, and having fasted, may mark out the boundary."⁸ Kātyāyana :—" [In the case of] tracing a boundary, [in]

Nārada :—“Injury inflicted upon the limbs³ of another with the hand, foot, weapons, or the like, or by throwing ashes or the like, is called dandapārushya (assault).”⁴ Brihaspati :—“The man who having received abuse, returns abuse, or being beaten, returns the blow ; 10 or he who stripes one who does him wrong, does not commit an offence.”⁵ Kātyāyana :—Bhrigu has ordained that the highest punishment shall be inflicted for cutting off an ear, a nose, a thigh, the eyes, tongue, the penis, or a hand ; [that of] the middling degree for breaking [or wounding] any one of them.”⁶ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 213, 214] :—A fine of ten panas is recorded [as] the punishment for throwing ashes, mud, or dust on a person. Double that sum [is recorded] for throwing at him filth,⁷ the heel, or the spittle. This [holds, if the offence be committed] against one of the same [class]. But [if the offence be committed] against the wife of another or against 20 one of a higher class, [the fine shall be] doubled ; if against one of an inferior class, the fine shall be half ; if committed through aberration of the intellect, drunkenness, or the like, no fine [shall be inflicted].”⁸

³ Vīr explains the word शब्द, which primarily means body, to be स्थारजङ्गमान्मक (im- 30 moveable as well as moveable) ; so that the injury referred to in this text would be injury to the body as well as to property.

⁷ The word in the text is अनेच्य which is explained to be अनुश्लेष्मादीनि (tears, phlegm, 40 &c.) see Vīr l. 145, p. 2.

⁸ Vīr l. 145, p. 2 ; Vya. M.

Pārshṇīh [is] the hind part of the foot. Kātyāyana:—"The fine is declared to be fourfold when a vomit, or urine, or fæces, or the like, are thrown upon the lower extremities; sixfold if [thrown] upon the middle of the body; but eightfold if upon the head."¹ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 216]:—"For holding up [threateningly] a hand or a foot, the punishment shall be ten and twenty [paṇas respectively]. The middle scale of punishment is declared for all classes for mutual pointing of weapons."² The same [author says] [ch. ii., vv. 217, 218]:—"The [fine of] ten paṇas [shall be inflicted] for violent 10 pulling of the foot, the hair, the clothes, or the hand [of another]; a hundred, for violently pulling a man caused to be tied in his clothes and trampling him under foot. The man who causes pain [to another] with a stick or the like, without shedding blood, shall be fined thirty-two paṇas, double that sum if blood be shed."³ Piḍetyādi, (pain, &c.) The meaning is that a hundred [paṇas is the fine] for trampling a man under foot [after] having tied him in his clothes and pulled him violently. The same [ch. ii., vv. 219, 215]:—"The middle fine [shall be imposed] for breaking a hand, a foot, or a tooth; for tearing the ears or the nose; for laying open a sore, and likewise for beating
 20 one till he is almost dead. The limb with which any one, not himself a Brāhmaṇa, gives pain to a Brāhmaṇa, shall be cut off. The lowest amercement is laid down [if the limb or weapon is only] raised; and half of it, if the Brāhmaṇa was touched [with the weapons]."⁴ Manu [ch. viii., vv. 279, 280]:—"With whatever limb a man of the lowest caste [i. e. a Śūdra] shall assault or hurt one of a superior class, even that member of his shall be cut; so ordains Manu. He who raises his hand or a staff [against another] shall be liable to have his hand cut off."⁵ Kātyāyana:—"Just as [different] fines are laid down for vākpārushya (abuse) according to the regular or inverse
 30 order of the classes, even so shall fines for assault be imposed according to the same scale."⁶ Viṣṇu:—"The fine for every one of many persons beating one* shall be double of that declared [for a

men. The meaning is—what may be fixed by skilled persons should be paid [to the sufferer]. With reference to the beating and the like of animals, says Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 225, 226]:—“For giving pain, drawing blood, cutting off the branches [as horns, &c.] or a limb, the fine shall be from two paṇas upwards¹ in the case of minor quadrupeds. For cutting off their organs of generation and causing [their] death, the middle amercement shall be paid [in addition to] their value. A double punishment shall be imposed in the case of [similar injury to] superior animals.”² In respect of damage to trees [says] Manu [ch. viii., v. 285]:—“According to the use and value of trees must a fine be 10 imposed for destroying them; this is an established rule.”³ End of ‘Assault.’

THEFT.

[Steṭyam.]

Nārada specifies three classes of things [which are] the subject of it. “Earthen utensils, seats, bedsteads, [articles made of] bone, wood, or leather, grass, and the like, leguminous⁴ grains, and cooked food are termed inferior articles. All but silken [kinds of] cloth, likewise all beasts except kine; all metals⁵ except gold, [and grain] like rice, barley, and the like, are termed articles of middling 20 quality. Gold, precious stones, silken cloth, females, males, kine, elephants, horses, and [the wealth] of the gods, Bráhmaṇas, and the king are to be understood articles of the best quality.”⁶ The same [author] here first enumerates open thieves [i. e. cheats or impostors]:—“Naigamas [traders], quack-doctors, assessors taking bribes, cheats, astrologers, prostitutes, artizans, forgers, and those who perform unlawful acts, [false] arbitrators, false witnesses, and likewise jugglers [living by fraud or deception]—these are open thieves.”⁷ Similarly in another *Smṛiti*⁸ [we find] “open cheats, persons dealing in false weights and measures, those who take bribes, 8(those who practise fraud, impostors, women of ill repute, forgers

That physician who although ignorant of medicine or mantras (incantations), or unacquainted with [the nature of] disease, yet takes money from the sick, shall be punished as a thief. Those who play with false dice, prostitutes, those who appropriate the king’s dues, astrologers, and cheats
 10 are swindlers declared as deserving of punishment. Assessors pronouncing an unjust decision, also those who live by bribery, and those who cheat persons trusting them—all these should be banished. Those who do not understand the science of the stars, or [of] portents, and [yet] expound omens and the like to mankind, shall by all means be chastised. Those who exhibit themselves [as religious mendicants] with a staff, deer’s skin, and the like, and murder mankind in that disguise, shall be whipped by the king’s people. Those who dexterously dress a thing of very small value into one of great price, and impose [thereby] upon the ignorant, deserve to be punished in proportion
 20 to the amount [gained by fraud]. Those who make false gold, false gems, false coral, and the like* shall be required to give back
 * ८९ their price to the buyer and pay a fine of double the amount to the king. Arbitrators who become corrupt through favour, gain, or other [motive], and witnesses who give false evidence, shall be compelled to pay a fine of double [the amount in dispute].”² Vyāsa:—“Those who are found stealthily walking about at night, furnished with implements [of theft] and the like, and those whose place of abode is not known, are to be known as secret thieves.”³ The same [author adds]:—“A pick-pocket,⁴ a house-breaker, a highway 30 man, a cut-purse, and a stealer of women, men, cattle, horses, and other animals are declared the nine kinds of thieves.”⁵ Sandhiv (joint) is the [joint] of a wall, &c. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 274]:—“The tongs [i. e. the forefinger and index] of the hands of the pick-pockets and cutpurses should be cut off [for the first offence]; for the second offence they should be deprived of a hand or a foot.”⁶ Sandanśa [means] the forefinger and thumb. Manu [ch. ix., v. 276]:—"The robbers who having broken a wall commit a robbery at night, shall have their hands cut off, and they should be impaled on a sharp stake by the king." Brihaspati:—"So also shall highwaymen be hanged by the neck from a tree."² "[The king] shall cause two fingers of a cut-purse to be cut off for the first offence; on a second conviction, one hand and one foot; on the third, he would deserve capital punishment."³ Angulī (two fingers) [meaning] the forefinger and the thumb.⁴ Nārada states a special rule in [regard] the flight of a thief taking the stolen property with him:—"A thief shall by every effort be seized by that [officer] 10 within whose district⁵ he may have committed theft; unless a trace or foot-mark be carried out [of the district], he [i. e. the village officer] shall be made to pay the amount of the loss. Again, when the trace [of a thief] having left a certain district is found, but is not carried into another definite place, the sāmantas (neighbouring villagers), the mārgapāla (road-keepers), and dīkṣpālā (those guarding the entrances) should be made to pay the loss."⁶ Yājñavalkya also [ch. ii., v. 272]:—"The village shall pay when [the theft took place] within its limits, or that village to which the trace is carried. If [the theft be committed] beyond one krośa (two miles) [from any village], [the communities of] 20 five surrounding villages or even of ten villages [shall pay]."

On [the subject of] kidnapping women, Vyāsa [says]:—"The woman-stealer shall be burnt on an iron bedstead with a fire of grass; the man-stealer shall be set up where four roads meet after having his hands and feet cut off."⁷ Brihaspati:—"Having cut off the nose of a stealer of kine and bound him, let them plunge him into the water."⁸ Nārada:—" [Confiscation of] the whole property is [the punishment] for the kidnapper of a woman; death for that of a maiden; so shall [the whole property] be confiscated of those who carry off horses, elephants, or metals; as is ordained by Brihaspati."⁹ The word 30 Sarvasva (whole property) is to be repeated [in the latter hemistich]. The same [ch. viii., v. 323]:—"For stealing principal gems, the thief deserves capital punishment."⁴ Nārada:—"Capital punishment shall be inflicted for stealing more than a hundred [pieces] of gold and silver, or the like, valuable clothes and likewise all precious stones."⁵ Manu [ch. viii., vv. 321, 322]:—"The cutting of the hand is the punishment approved for those who steal more than fifty gold and silver [pieces] and the like, or valuable clothes; for [stealing] less, the king shall impose a fine of eleven times the value."⁶ here [means] force or strength.”¹ Brihaspati :—“ Manslaughter, robbery, assault on another man’s wife, and both species of pārushya (assault) are the four kinds of Sāhasa.”² *Ubhaya*m [means] both; that is abuse and assault. Nārada [says] :—“ Destroying fruits, roots, water, and such other things, and agricultural implements, throwing them away, treading them under foot, or the like, is declared to be Sāhasa of the lowest degree. [Misusing] in the above-mentioned way, clothes, animals, food, drink, and household utensils, is declared to be Sāhasa of the middle degree. Homicide with poisons, weapons, or the like, an indecent assault on another man’s wife, and anything 10 jeopardizing life is called Sāhasa of the highest degree.”³ Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 273] :—“ [The king] shall cause to be impaled on a stake Bandigrāha (sacriligious house-breakers), likewise those who steal horses and elephants, and also violent murderers.”⁴ Brihaspati :—“ Having carefully ascertained who are notorious murderers, and likewise secret murderers, and having seized their effects, the king shall inflict death upon them by different modes of killing.”⁵ The same :—“ When many persons filled with rage beat one single individual [to death], then he who strikes him on a vital part is declared to be the Ghātaka (murderer).”⁶ Kātyāyana :—“ He who commences a sāhasa, or aids it, so also 20 he who points out the road, he who gives an asylum or furnishes weapons or food to evil-doers; so even he who advises a battle; he who sets [others] on destruction; he who stands aloof [i. e. renders no help to the sufferer in an affray]; he who speaks ill [of the dead]; he who approves [of the murderer’s action]; or he who possessing the power does not prevent the offence—all these are participators in the deed. [The king] shall inflict on them suitable punishment proportioned to the power [of each to suffer].”⁷ Nārada lays down a special rule in regard to the punishment of a Brāhmaṇa :—“ This is the law of punishment laid down for all without 30 distinction save in the case of a Brāhmaṇa [offender deserving] death;

* [because] a Brāhmaṇa is [said to be] not liable to undergo
* ९ capital punishment. His punishment shall be shaving of the head, banishment from the city, a brand of infamy on the forehead, and parading upon an ass.”⁸ A Brāhmaṇa, even though an ātutāyin (a felon), is not liable to death; because of the text of Sumantu [which says] :—“ There is no sin in putting to death persons guilty of felony, except kine and Bráhmaṇas."¹ Kátyáyana :—"According to Bhṛigu, there shall be no capital punishment in the case of a felon of the highest class devoted to austerities and to reading the Vedas. Capital punishment is for sinners who are of a low class."² The same author declares who are felons :—"He who [feloniously] uses a sword, poison, or fire; also he who raises his hand in imprecation, and he who kills by incantations [such as are found in] the Ātharvāṇa [Veda], and also an informer to the king; one who [harasses] his wife by transgressing the law, who is diligent in picking out defects [of other people];—all these persons and the like of them are to be known as felons."³ Vasishṭha also [says] :—"An incendiary and a poisoner, one who [offensively] handles weapons, who robs [another of his] wealth, also he who steals [another's] land or wife—these six are átatáyins (felons)."⁴ As for the text of Manu [which says, ch. viii., v. 350] :—"Let a man without hesitation slay a felon who assails him [with intent to murder], whether [he be] the preceptor, or young, or old, or a Bráhmaṇa deeply versed in the scriptures" and as for [the text of] Kátyáyana [which says] :—"A felon coming with intent to take one's life should be killed, even though he [the felon] have gone through the Vedas; there will be no sin by that [act] of being the slayer of a Bráhmaṇa."⁵ [The existence of the words] vá and api [in the above two texts] shows that they relate to the slaying of all felons except Bráhmaṇas. The mention of a Bráhmaṇa is [here] made to give force to the law by an extreme example. [This is explained] in the Mitáksharā [as follows] :—"A felon even though a Bráhmaṇa is liable to be slain; how much more then [is] any other man;" in accordance with [the following text of] Gálava [which says] :—"He who kills a learned Bráhmaṇa that feloniously attacks him with a raised weapon, does not become a Bráhmaṇa's murderer; did he not kill him, he would really be guilty of a Bráhmaṇa's murder;"⁶ [and also] of the [text of] Bṛihaspati [which says] :—"He who kills a [Bráhmaṇa] felon versed in the Vedas, and come of a good family, does not commit a Bráhmaṇa's murder; did he not kill him, he would be guilty of a Bráhmaṇa's murder." [The following] is the conclusion [drawn from the above by] the [Smṛiti] Chandriká [on this subject] :—"A Bráhmaṇa felon coming to kill another is by all means to be slain. A Bráhmaṇa [however] who seizes the land or wife or any other thing of another, [and is so far a felon,] is not to be killed; while Kshatriyas and persons of the other classes in similar cases are to be killed.' This is correct; because the [preceding] texts from Manu, Kātyāyana, Gālava, and Bṛihaspati having reference to a particular felon [viz., one who is] intent upon killing, it is proper to take them as exceptions to the [aforesaid] general texts of Sumantu and Kātyāyana [in regard to a felon]. As for the [following] text of Bṛihaspati:—"He who will not kill a felon of the highest class, who performs austere acts of devotion and reads the Vedas, though deserving death, shall obtain the merit of [the performance of] a horse sacrifice;"¹ this [text] too has reference to a felon other than one intent upon killing the killer. Besides [by the 10 text], "an excellent Brāhmaṇa acting feloniously should not be killed [even] in a just fight;"² the slaying of a Brāhmaṇa felon intent upon killing is forbidden in the Kali age. This prohibition in the Kali age would be unmeaning, if it [i. e. the slaying of a Brāhmaṇa felon] was not enjoined by law. Moreover, all works [on Dharmaśāstra] declare all prohibitions in the Kali age to refer to acts [specifically] enjoined, [so as to give] the word Dharma (commandment) its proper meaning in [the text] "The wise declare these Dharmas (commandments) to be inapplicable in the Kali age."³ Therefore in this Kali age a Brāhmaṇa feloniously seeking the life of another* is not to be killed [by that other]. 20

* ९२ In other ages, however, he was indeed [liable] to be killed. A Brāhmaṇa felon other [than one intent upon killing] is exempt from death in all ages; while felons of the Kshatriya and other classes are in all ages liable to be killed. This is the bare outline [of the subject].

Bṛihaspati declares the punishment for stealing articles of low, middling and great value thus:—"One destroying or carrying off implements of husbandry, or flowers, roots, or fruits, shall be fined a hundred or more paṇas according to his offence. In like manner, one destroying or stealing [inferior] animals, cloths, grain, liquids, 80 and household utensils, shall be fined not less than two hundred paṇas. [In the case of] women, men, kine, gold, gems, and the property of the gods, of Brāhmaṇas, and of females [and other] costly things, the fine shall be equal to the value of the property stolen or destroyed. Or double the amount may be imposed by kings according to the [status of] the thief; or the thief may be [even] put to death with a view to the prevention of a recurrence [of the offence]."⁴ Yausheyam is Strīdhanam [woman's property]. Vā means eva (by all means). According to Madana, looking to the proper meaning of the words Vināśayan (destroying) and hartā (robber), the [above] text belongs to the subject of Sāhasa (heinous offences) [and not to steaya (theft)].

Yājñavalkya lays down the punishment for one who procures the commission of a heinous offence [ch. ii., v. 231]:—“He who causes the commission of a Sāhasa (a heinous offence) shall be made to pay a double fine; and he who does the same by saying, ‘I will give [such a reward],’ shall be made to pay quadruple the amount.”¹ Dvaiguṇyam (double), or chāturguṇam (quadruple), means double or quadruple of the fine imposed on the actual offender. Manu lays down the punishment for him who by force enjoys a virtuous Brāhmaṇa woman [ch. viii., v. 378]:—“A Brāhmaṇa who enjoys a guarded Brāhmaṇa woman by force shall be fined a thousand [paṇas].”² But if the crime be committed against such a woman by a man of the Kshatriya or other class, Brihaspati [says]:—“The king should seize the whole of the property of one who enjoys by force [a woman], and having cut off his penis and scrotum cause him to be carried about upon an ass.”³ Kāmayet [means] shall have connexion with the lawful wife of another. Kātyāyana imposes the following punishment for forcible enjoyment of a married woman of the same class by persons of the Kshatriya, the Anuloma (offspring of a mother married to a man of a higher class) and the Pratiloma (offspring of a mother married to a man of a lower class) classes:—“When a man has forcibly obtained enjoyment of a woman, capital punishment is to be inflicted in that case as it is a transgression of duty.”⁴ The same:—“A woman who has been enjoyed against her will should be kept in the house, with her person in a slovenly state sleeping on the ground, and furnished only with a mere morsel [i. e. bare maintenance].”⁵ The same:—“She who has been enjoyed by a man of a low class is to be put away or to suffer death.” Her death is to be understood in the case of her [previous] consent [to the guilty act]. Nārada thus declares the punishment of Sāhasa of the lowest, the middling, and the highest degree:—“The punishment for it must be in proportion to the crime. For [a crime of] the lowest degree, not less than a hundred [paṇas]; for one of the middling degree, not less than five hundred as declared by those versed in the law; for Sāhasa of the highest grade, the punishment is declared to be not less than a thousand [paṇas]. ment, confiscation of everything (belonging to the criminal), banishment from the city, branding, amputation of [the offending] limbs—these are the punishments declared for the highest degree of Sáhusa.¹ The command for inflicting capital punishment, mutilation, and the other punishments, however, [is given] to the king and to no other; since to him alone pertains the right of inflicting punishment. End of Sáhusa (a Heinous Offence).

ADULTERY.

[Sti-Saigraha.]

The punishment for forcible enjoyment of another man's wife being 10 a [species of] sáhusa [a heinous offence] has already been declared. As regards the fraudulent enjoyment of another's wife of the same class, Bṛihaspati says:—"If a man by fraud enjoy [a woman], his punishment shall be the confiscation of his all, and afterwards banishment from the city with a brand of the *pulendum muliebre * ९३ [on his body]."² Sarrahara [is] that [punishment] which takes away the whole property. This punishment [applies in the case] of a woman of an equal class. In the case of one of a lower [class], the [punishment] is half of this, and of one of a higher [class], death. For, the same author [says]:—"The half of that punishment 20 [which is to be] inflicted [for connexion] with a woman of an equal class is imposed in the case of a woman of a lower class. But for connexion with a woman of a higher class the punishment of the man is death." The same [author] lays down the punishments for the lowest, middling, and the highest [kinds of] adultery:—"The punishment in each of these three cases is respectively the lowest, the middling, and the highest fine. For forcible enjoyment in secret, even a greater [punishment may be inflicted]."³ Manu lays down the punishment for a vagabond who converses with the wife of another man [ch. viii., v. 35]:—"A man before noted for vice who converses in secret with the wife of another 30 shall pay the lowest amercement."⁴ Yājñavalkya imposes the following punishment for conversation between a man and woman who have been both forbidden by their fathers or other [relatives] [ch. ii., v. 285]:—"A woman [erring after] being forbidden should be fined one hundred [panas], and a man [under similar circumstances], two hundred; where the prohibition [has been laid] on both, their punishment is the same as [that] for adultery."⁵ The first distich has reference to prohibition [laid on] either of the parties [only]; the last, to a [prohibition] laid on both. Yājñavalkya declares the punishment for intercourse brought about through the [mutual] desire of both [ch. ii., v. 286]:—" [For intercourse with one] of an equal class the highest fine may be imposed; [with a woman] of a lower class, the middling [fine]; and [with one] of a higher class, death [in the case] of the man, and the lopping of ears or other [limbs] [in the case] of the woman."¹ Kātyāyana:—" In [the case of] all offences the woman shall pay half of the pecuniary fine which is laid down for a man. Where death [is ordained] for a man, a woman shall be mutilated."² With regard to 10 intercourse with a Brāhmaṇa woman of loose life, Manu [says] [ch. viii., v. 378]:—" For intercourse with a willing woman, the fine shall be five hundred [paṇas]."³ This relates to a woman of an equal class. On intercourse with women of a lower class and loose morals, the same [author says] [ch. viii., v. 385]:—" A Brāhmaṇa shall be fined five hundred [paṇas] for intercourse with an unguarded woman of the Vaiśya, Kshatriya or Śūdra class, and one thousand for [intercourse] with a woman of the tribe of Antyaja."⁴ As for [the text of] Manu [ch. viii., v. 383]:—" A Brāhmaṇa having intercourse with a guarded woman [of the] two [classes, viz., Kshatriya or Vaiśya] shall be 20 fined one thousand [paṇas]"⁵ it refers to a virtuous woman. Manu declares the punishment of a Śūdra for intercourse with a woman of a higher class [ch. viii., v. 374]:—" A Śūdra having intercourse with a woman of a twice-born class, whether guarded or unguarded, shall lose the part [offending], and [further] his whole wealth when [she is] unguarded, and everything [including his life] when [she is] guarded."⁶ The meaning is:—A Śūdra having criminal intercourse with an unguarded woman of a twice-born class, shall have his offending part cut off, and all his property confiscated; and when [she is] guarded he deserves the confiscation of his property and death. Gautama:—" For 30 adultery with the wife of the preceptor, the man's offending part shall be taken away, and all his property confiscated; [and] if the woman be guarded, let him further suffer death." Manu [ch. viii., v. 376]:—" But if a Vaiśya or Kshatriya have intercourse with a Brāhmaṇa woman who is unguarded, the Vaiśya shall be fined five hundred [paṇas] and the Kshatriya a thousand."⁷ The same [ch. viii., v. 377]:—" Both of them, however, if they commit that offence with a Brāhmaṇa woman who is guarded shall be punished like Śūdras, or be burnt in a fire of dry grass or reeds.”¹ The same [ch. viii., v. 382]:—If a Vaiśya have criminal intercourse with a guarded woman of the Kshatriya class, or a Kshatriya with [a similar] one of the Vaiśya class,* they both deserve the * ९९ same punishment as in the case of an unguarded Brāhmaṇa woman.”² The meaning is:—[The fine is the] same as that which is imposed for connexion with an unguarded Brāhmaṇa woman. Vasishṭha:—“If a Kshatriya have intercourse with a Brāhmaṇa woman, he should be tied with a bundle of long grass and thrown into the fire; the same [should be done] if a Vaiśya have sexual intercourse with a Kshatriya woman; and likewise if a Śūdra [commit the crime] with a 10 woman of the Kshatriya or of the Vaiśya class.”³ Nārada:—“He who has criminal connexion with any one of [the following] women, [namely,] the mother, the mother’s sister, the mother-in-law, the mother’s brother’s wife, the father’s sister, the wives of a father’s brother, a friend, and a pupil; a sister, her [i. e. sister’s] friend, a daughter-in-law, a daughter, and the wife of the preceptor, every woman descended from the same family, any woman who has sought [the man’s] protection, the king’s wife, a pravrajitā (a female devotee), the [man’s] nurse, a virtuous woman, and a woman of the highest class, is said to be a gurutalpaga (a violator of his religions 20 preceptor’s bed). No punishment save that of cutting off his secret parts is laid down for such a crime.”⁴ Yājñavalkya also [ch. iii., vv. 232, 233]:—“A man who has connexion with his father’s sister or his mother’s sister, or with his mother’s brother’s wife, and also with his [own] daughter-in-law, with his step-mother, his sister, so also with his preceptor’s daughter, or his preceptor’s wife, or with his own daughter, is a gurutalpaga (the violator of his preceptor’s bed); his privy parts being cut off, capital punishment should be inflicted on him, and the same for the woman, if she were consenting to the act.”⁵ This punishment however is not to be inflicted on 30 Brāhmaṇas; for among the texts of Brihaspati referring to Brāhmaṇas, we find:—“One [Brāhmaṇa] who has been guilty of committing adultery with another man’s wife should be punished by painful brands and banished. One, not a Brāhmaṇa, doing the same guilty act, deserves any punishment up to death.” Śaṅkha and Likhita say:—“With whatever member any particular offence is committed, that very member should be cut off except [in the case of] a Brāhmaṇa.” Yājñavalkya declares the punishment of a Brāhmaṇa having connexion with a female slave or the like [ch. ii., v. 290]:—

 “A man [having intercourse] with an avaruddhā (protected female slave) and Bhujishyā (another’s mistress), shall be required to pay a fine of fifty paṇas, even though intercourse with them be [in other respects] permissible.”¹ Avaruddhā [means] female slaves forbidden by their master to have intercourse with other men. Nārada:—“An unchaste [married] woman [who is] not [of the] Brāhmaṇa [class], or a professional prostitute, a female slave, who has left the family [protection], may be carnally known by a man of the same or a higher class; 10 [but] not by a man of a lower class. But if such women be the kept mistresses [of some persons], the offence [of approaching them] would be that [of approaching] another man’s lawful wife.”² The word Abrahmani [in the text] is an adjective qualifying the word Svairinī. Svairinī [means] an unchaste woman [who is her] own mistress. Nishkāsinī [means] an unchaste woman who has left the family. Ājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 274]:—“If a man have connexion with an Antyā woman he should be branded with an obscene mark, and banished. If a Śūdra [act in such a manner], he is similarly liable to be branded. But if an Antyā have connexion with a woman of any of 20 the four classes of Aryas, he shall be put to death.”³ The punishment for an indecent assault committed by a woman is thus declared by Nārada:—“That female who going to a [man’s] house, excites him by tickling him or the like, and so causes him to have intercourse with her, should be punished, as declared [by sages], in half the fine prescribed for a man [guilty of like conduct].”⁴

Yama prescribes the punishment for women of the Brāhmaṇa and other classes who have criminal connexion with a Śūdra or the like. “A Brāhmaṇa woman who, overpowered by desire, seeks [the company] of a Vrishala, should be caused by the king to be devoured by 30 dogs at the place of the executioners. A Brāhmaṇa woman who has intercourse with a Vaiśya, or even a Kshatriya, shall have her head shaved, and shall be carried about upon an ass.”⁵ Vrishala [means] a Śūdra, Vadhyaghātinaḥ [means] executioners; at their place [the execution is to take place]. This punishment, according to the Chandrikā, is for excessive attachment [to the paramour]. Ājñavalkya points out the means of determining [the act of adultery] (ch. ii., v. 283):—“A man should be caught in the very act of adultery; or while holding each other’s hair, or by other signs of excitement, or by the admission of both.”⁶ From the expression dvayoh (of both) there is no proof of adultery upon the confession of one only. As regards slander says Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 289]:—"He who utters a [true] slander against an [unmarried] woman shall pay a hundred (paṇas), but for a false accusation [he shall pay] two hundred. For connexion with a beast he shall be made to pay a hundred, and the middling fine for connexion with a distressed woman or a cow."¹ Moreover [ch. ii, v. 293]:—"If a man have intercourse with a woman in an improper part, or make water, or void excretion [before women], he shall be fined twenty-four paṇas;* so also he who has connexion with a female

* ९५ devotee."² Dīnū [means] distressed, even one's own wife.¹⁰

The meaning of abhimehatah (of one making water) is that of him who shall perform his evacuations or the like before a woman. End of 'Adultery.'

DUTIES OF MAN AND WIFE.

(Strī-pun-dharmah.)

Now the punishment for a husband who abandons a virtuous wife, is thus declared:—"The husband who abandons a wife that is obedient, not evil-tongued, dexterous [at her duties], virtuous and devoted to her husband,³ shall be restrained with a fine by the king."⁴ Yājñavalkya [ch. i., v. 76]:—"He who deserts a wife [that is] obedient to his²⁰ commands, diligent [at her duties], mother of an excellent son, and speaking kindly, shall be compelled to pay the third part [of his wealth to her]; or if poor, to provide maintenance for her."⁵ The same author says with respect to a wife [ch. i., v. 77]:—"Wives should do the bidding of their husbands. This is the highest duty of a wife. Even if he be tainted with a primary sin, yet let her wait until he be purified." End of 'Duties of Man and Wife.'

GAMBLING AND PRIZE-FIGHTING.

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii, v. 201]:—" [Payment of] that which has been³⁰ won publicly in an assembly of gamblers in the presence of the master of a gaming house, and when the king's share has been paid, shall be enforced, but not otherwise."⁶ Prasiddhē [means] not in secret. Dhūrta-maṇḍale [means] in a gaming house. Sabbhikah [means] a superintendent of gambling appointed by the king. The meaning is that the king should cause to be paid whatever was won under the [just mentioned] circumstances, and nothing else. The same [author] lays down the punishment for one guilty of fraud in gambling [ch. ii., v. 202] :—"A man who plays with false dice or by deceit, shall be branded and banished by the king."¹ [Upadhā means] fraud. Manu declares the punishment for gambling without permission from the king [ch. ix., v. 224] :—"The king should punish all those who [themselves] gamble or cause [others] to gamble whether with inanimate or animate things, and the 10 Śūdras who adopt the marks of the twice-born."² Dvijalīṅgam (the marks of the twice-born) is [wearing] the sacred thread, reading the Vedas, or the like. Yājñavalkya thus declares the law of gambling (dyūta) to apply to prize-fights [ch. ii., v. 208] :—"This very law should be understood to apply in the case of Samāhvaya (prize-fighting)."³ The [term] prāṇi-dyūta (gambling with animals) is an adjective qualifying Samāhvaya, and means the same thing. End of 'Gambling and Prize-fighting.'

MISCELLANEOUS.

- 20 Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 295 and 296] :—"He who either omits or adds anything in writing to the king's edicts, or he who allows an adulterer or a thief to escape [shall suffer] the highest amercement.⁴ He who defiles a Brāhmaṇa, a Kshatriya, a Vaiśya, or a Śūdra by feeding him with things not fit to be eaten,* shall be [respectively]
 * ₹१ amercement with fine for the highest, the middling, and the lowest Śābasa (a heinous offence) and [half of the last]." Abhakshyam (things not fit to be tasted), i.e. intoxicating liquors, urine, faeces, and the like. The same [ch. ii., v. 297] :—"He who deals in false gold [as pure], and he who sells unclean meat, should be maimed and com-30 pelled to pay the fine for the highest sāhasu (heinous offence)."⁵ Vimāmsam (unclean meat) [as] the flesh of cows and the like. According to the Mitākshara, [ch. ii., l. 98, p. 1] by the use of the particle cha (and), mutilation is also [intended]. Also [ch. ii., v. 300] :—"The master of any animals whether possessed of teeth or horns, who, having the power, still fails to relieve [any one in pain from it when attacked], shall be fined in the lowest amercement, and in double [that amount] if the sufferer likewise cry out [for help] beforehand." Vikrośah [means] crying out. Manu [ch. viii., vv. 296, 297, and 298] :—"For killing a man, a fine equal to that for theft shall be instantly imposed, half that amount for large animals such as a bull or cow, an elephant, a camel, a horse, and the like; for killing very small animals, the fine shall be two hundred [पाण्डु], and fifty for handsome quadrupeds or birds. For an ass, a goat, or a sheep, the fine shall be five māshakas; and one māshaka for killing a dog or a boar.¹ This fine must be understood to be over and above the payment of the value of the [animal] killed. Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., vv. 301, 302]:—"He who charges a gallant as a thief, shall be made to pay five hundred [पाण्डु] as a punishment. For him who taking money [from an offender] lets him go, eight times its amount is ordained [as the fine]." Uṣṇīṣṭu means having 10 received. "The king should banish, after cutting out his tongue, that man who imprecates evil against him, who calumniates him, or who divulges his secret counsels." Aniṣṭam [means imprecates] his death, or the like. Ākrośā (abuse) [such as] saying, 'May thy reign not last', or the like. Manu [ch. ix., v. 275]:—"Men who rob the king's treasure or [obstinately] oppose his commands, and those who help his enemies, shall be punished by various modes of punishment."² Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 303]:—"The punishment of him, who sells what was on a dead body, and likewise of him who strikes his preceptor, and of him who seats himself in the king's carriage or throne, is the 20 highest amercement (uttama Śāhasa)."³ Mṛitāṅgalagṇam [means] what is on a dead body [such as] the clothes of the dead or the like. The same [ch. ii., v. 304]:—"The punishment⁴ of him who puts out both eyes [of another], who performs acts forbidden by the king, or who being a Sūdra lives as a Brāhmaṇa, shall be eight hundred (ṣaṣṭas)."⁵ The meaning is [the punishment abovementioned is] for him who puts out both the eyes [of another], for him who does an act prohibited by the king, and for a Sūdra who lives by the profession of a Brāhmaṇa. According to the Mitākṣarā [ch. ii., l. 94, p. 1], which quotes another Smṛiti:—"If he [i. e. the Sūdra] assumes the sacred thread for taking 80 food at a Śrāddha, he shall have a line resembling the sacred thread imprinted [on his body] with a red-hot rod."

The same author propounds the punishment for those who make unjust decisions [ch. ii., 305, 306]:—"An unjust decision should be revised by the king and the sabhyas (assessors), together with the person in whose favour it was given should be fined in twice the amount [in dispute]. If a man, though he have justly lost his cause, thinks, 'I am not [justly] conquered,' and again come into court, he when again nonsuited shall be made to pay a double fine."⁶

Here [i. e. in this work], where mere number is mentioned without 40 the object [to which it refers], it must be understood to refer to paṇas.

The paṇa is a copper piece equal in weight to the Karsha [of 16 māśas], from this verse in the dictionary, “A paṇa is made of copper of the Karsha [weight].”¹ A Karsha is the fourth of a pala. And a paṇa is thus defined by Bhāskarācārya,—“A Kākinī is twice ten Kauris, and four Kākinīs make a paṇa.”²

Now, as regards the Uttamasāhasa (highest fine) and other fines:—“The Uttamasāhasa (the highest fine) is a fine of one thousand and eighty paṇas; the madhyama sāhasa (middling fine) is pronounced to be half of it, and the half of that [again] is declared the adhama sāhasa (the lowest).”
10 Moreover, if in any of the aforementioned crimes, repression is not attainable by fines regulated after the above specified scale, even a greater fine may be imposed. For, says Āpastamba:—“Daṇḍa (punishment) is so called because it represses [a culprit]; therefore those unrepressed by the [fine already inflicted] should be brought into subjection.”

Again, Nārada points out some exceptions in the punishment of confiscation of a man's all:—“Even when confiscation of all that a criminal possesses is enjoined, it is not fit that the king should take away his weapons, if a soldier, the beasts of burden or other (conveyance) of those who subsist by carrying for hire; the ornaments of professional prostitutes; the musical instruments of musicians, or those imple-20 * ९० ments by which artisans subsist; in short, anything* by which any person gains his livelihood.”³

Yājñavalkya [ch. ii., v. 307] declares what is to be done with a fine levied unjustly:—“What has been obtained through injustice by the king as a fine, should be devoted by him to Varuṇa, and given with his own hands to Brāhmaṇas on being increased thirty-fold. The meaning is, ‘let him give thirty times as much to Brāhmaṇas, having vowed it to Varuṇa under a ritual.’ End of the ‘Miscellaneous.’

In the middle regions, famed for [good] acts, in the vicinity of 30 the auspicious confluence of the Charmanvati and the Yamunā, [stands] the famous city of Bharā, whereof the [reigning] king is Bhagavantadeva, devoted to the lotus-eyed [i. e. God].

Thus ends the Vyavahāra Mayūkha (the ray relating to municipal law) of the Bhagavadbhāskara (the sun) composed by Bhaṭṭa Nīlakaṇṭha, son of Saṅkarabhaṭṭa, who was the jewel of learned men, the head of those who have travelled over the Mīmāṃsā [ocean] from one end to the other, and son of the learned Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, the preceptor of the whole world, [compiled] under the orders of Śrī Bhagavantadeva, who is the lord of kings, and an ornament of the progeny of Sagara.

(INSTITUTES OF YĀJÑAVALKYA.)

ĀCHĀRĀDHYĀYA.

CHAPTER [I] ON RELIGIOUS AND MORAL OBSERVANCES.

SALUTATION TO GAṆEŚA !

[Introduction.]

1. The *Munis*¹ having worshipped Yājñavalkya, the lord of Yogins,² said, 'tell us completely the *dharma*s (duties) of the classes, orders, and the mixed.'³

2. That chief of the Yogins, resident of Mithilā,⁴ having meditated 10 for a moment, spoke to the sages [thus] : 'know [that] the duties [which I am going to describe relate] to the country where the black antelope⁵ [lives].'

² Yogi, one who has subdued his passions. Vijñāneśvara calls him the chief of Sanaka and other sages; but Sanaka and others appear in the Kṛita yuga or first age of Hindu history; whereas Yājñavalkya, the author of the present Smṛiti, appears to have lived at a much later age. He is sometimes styled Yogi and sometimes Yogindra.

³ By classes is meant:—1, Bhāhmanas; 2, Kshatriyas; 3, Vaiśyas; and 4, Śūdras. Orders signifies the four stages of the life of a twice-born Ārya, namely, those of Brahmachārin (or student), Gṛihaṣṭha (or householder), Vānaprastha (or the hermit), and Sannyāsī (or the retired sage): "the mixed" means according to the Mitāksharā the mixed classes, who are beyond the pale of the four regular classes and the four orders; and whom the author calls ūnara or the others. The present law is thus limited to the above classes and orders, and the mixed classes of two sorts, viz., the anuḷoma and the pratiloma, or the issue of mixed marriages in the direct and inverse order of the classes respectively.

"वर्णभेदेतराणां" is a compound of वर्ण, आश्रम, and इतर. And as इतर is a pronoun, its sixth case would be इतरेषां. But in the case of a द्व्यङ्ग, Pāṇini ch. i., quarter i., Sūtra 31, "द्व्यङ्गेषु" would treat such pronouns like ordinary substantives.

The Aryās have always considered this animal as the purest. At the time of the Upanayana ceremony of a Brāhmaṇa, the skin of the black antelope must be worn: see Manu ch. ii., v. 41. Prayogaratna by Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭa, [प्रवरणार्थं कृष्णाजिनं वा. Translation:—For wearing, the skin of the black antelope or]. Āpastamba cited by Kullūkabhaṭṭa says कर्ष्णं ब्राह्मणस्य (to the Brāhmaṇa, the skin of the black antelope). Āśvalayana recommends the skin of the antelope, without qualifying it as black. Among the sixteen great dānas or things to be bestowed on Brāhmaṇas, the skin of the black antelope is one. In the Soma sacrifice, the horn of the black antelope is recommended for the purpose of scratching during the time of the sacrifice, so that the hand may not contract any impurity during that process.

See Śikṣhā:—"छन्दःपादौ तु वेदस्य हस्तौ कर्णौऽथ पयते ॥ ज्योतिषामयनं चक्षुर्निरुक्तं श्रोत्रमुच्यते ॥ शिखा घ्राणं तु वेदस्य मुखं व्याकरणं स्मृतं ॥"

- 30 Translation:—Chhandas [is] described as the two feet of the Veda, the Kalpa [sutras or aphorisms], as the two hands; [while] the Jyotiṣa (or the science of the heavenly bodies), [is] said [to be] the eyes, and the Nirukta the ears; the Śikṣhā [is] spoken of as the nose, [and] the Vyākaraṇa (or grammar) as the mouth.

- ² The word in the original is Prayojakūh (प्रयोजकाः) which some lexicographers would render by 'law-givers' (see Monier Williams' new Sanskrit and English Dictionary, p. 640). But prayojakūh signifies the causer or propounder, the person who causes another agent to act. See Sābdastomamahānīdhi by Tārānāth Tarkavācāśpati Bhaṭṭācārya: p. 278. (प्रयोजकः—वि. कार्योदौ भूत्यादीन् प्रदुष्टे, प्र × युज्—युज्, निवृष्टस्य भूत्यादेः प्रेरके ॥ व्याकरणोक्तं हेतुसङ्घे कर्तारिच ॥). And it seems that it would be better to consider Manu and the rest rather as the causers, than as the actual writers of the Smritis which bear their names. For, to begin with the list, Manu himself is the prayojaka or the causer, and Bhṛigu, the author of the Smṛiti which bears Manu's name. Each chapter of Manu ends thus:—मानवे धर्मशास्त्रे भृगुप्रोक्तार्या संहितायामुक्ताध्यायः which means "[Here ends] a certain Adhyāya (chapter) of the Samhitā (text) composed by Bhṛigu in the dharmaśāstra (a legal treatise) of Manu." In the case of the Parāśara Smṛiti also, Suvraṭa is the author, and Parāśara is evidently the sage at whose command the work was composed. Thus:—विभिः श्लोकसहस्रैस्तु विभिर्ब्रह्मसूतैरापि । पराशरोदितं शास्त्रं सुमतः प्रोक्तवान्मुनिः ॥ This is the reading found in the Calcutta

6. Things given from [motives of] faith, in the [proper] country, at the [proper] time, by the ways [prescribed by the Śāstras,] to a proper person are the cause of Dharma [or virtue].¹

7. The source of Dharma is described to be [1] the Vedas, [2] the Smṛiti, [3] the practice of good men, [4] what is acceptable to one's own soul, and [5] the desire produced by a virtuous resolve.²

edition of the Smṛitis by Pandit Jibānanda. An old MS. in my possession gives the latter hemistich as 'पराशरोदितं धर्मशास्त्रं श्रीवाच सुव्रतः। The meaning is :—"The sage Suvraṭa composed the dharmaśāstra (a treatise on law) in 3300 verses as propounded by Parāśara." 10

In the case of the Yājñavalkya Smṛiti also, Yājñavalkya cannot be the author of the Smṛiti; for, the writer begins it by invoking Yājñavalkya (see Śloka 1st), and in the above enumeration again, the fourth law-giver is stated to be Yājñavalkya. The author of the Mitāksharā again in his comments puts him at the top of Sanaka and other Yogis of the Kṛita age. He therefore places him far into a remote antiquity.

It seems therefore that the Smṛiti is the collection of the precepts of Yājñavalkya by a follower of his school. This conclusion is also suggested by Mitrāmīśra in his work entitled the Vīramitrodaya.

Vijñāneśvara in his commentary on the first verse says :—याज्ञवल्क्यशिष्यः कश्चित्प्रभोत्तर-रूपं याज्ञवल्क्यप्रणीतं धर्मशास्त्रं सङ्क्षिप्य कथयामास। यथा मनुना कं भूतः। which means "some dis- 20
ciple of Yājñavalkya composed [the present treatise] by condensing the jurisprudence propounded [to him] by Yājñavalkya in the form of question and answer."

Hemādri Chaturvarga Chintāmaṇi, Dānakhaṇḍa (vol. I. pp. 14, 15) thus discusses the six essentials of dāna (gift) from which virtue arises :—दाता प्रतिग्रहीता च भक्ता देयं च धर्म-
युक्तं। देशकालौ च दानानामङ्गन्येतानि षड्विदुः॥ अपापरोगी धर्मोन्मादित्स्वरव्यसनः शत्रुः। अनित्यजीवकमौ

दानार्हौ देशकालौ तौ स्यातां श्रेष्ठौ न चान्यथा॥

"The giver, the receiver, faith, [the thing] to be given according to law, the place, [and] the time—these are known to be the six constituents of gift.

"That giver is approved of, who is not [afflicted with] a bad disease, who has a desire to give, who is in no difficulties, who is pure, and who lives by blameless work.

"That Brāhmaṇa is declared [to be] a proper recipient [of a gift], who is pure in three [things, viz., learning, birth and conduct of life], whose means are limited, who is humane, who has no defective sense, and who is free from the vice of lechery.

"Faith is said then [to exist] when [the giver] is always courteous and highly pleased on seeing mendicants, receives [them properly] and does not carp [at them]. 40

"That wealth, whether small or great, which is earned with [honest] labour, which brings no compunction and does not injure another, is said to be [a proper object of] gift.

"That place and that time are the best for gift, where and when [respectively, the thing given] is hard to get and desirable."

² See Manu, ch. ii., v. 12 :—

श्रुतिः स्मृतिः सदाचारः स्वस्य च प्रियमात्मनः।

उत चतुर्विधं प्राहुः साक्षाद्धर्मस्य लक्षणम्॥ which means "The source of Dharma is fourfold—[viz.] the Veda, the Smṛiti, the practice of the good, and what is acceptable to one's soul." The same thus speaks of the Vedās and Smritis (ch. ii., v. 10) :—

8. Of all acts—[such as] sacrifices, ceremonial observances, repression of sensual desires, harmlessness, gifts, and the study of the Vedās, this is the best dharma, [namely] viewing one's own self by [means of the] *Yoga*¹ (abstraction).

9. Four [men] versed in the duties prescribed by the Vedās,² or versed in the three sciences [constitute] an assembly.³ What it speaks, is dharma; or that which one, the best self-knower,⁴ [speaks].

श्रुतिस्तु वेदो विज्ञेयो धर्मशास्त्रं तु वै स्मृतिः ।

ते सर्वेऽर्थेष्वमीमांस्ये ताभ्यां धर्मो हि निर्बभौ ॥

"[The term] Śruti refers to the Vedas, and Smṛiti to dharmaśāstra (a treatise of law). They should not be called in question in any matter, for the Dharma (duties) was elucidated by them." And again about Sādāchāra or the practice of good men [ch. ii., vv. 17, 18] :—

सरस्वतीदृषद्वन्द्वोर्देवनयोर्धेदन्तरम् ।

तं देवनिर्मितं देशं ब्रह्मवर्तं मन्त्रक्षते ॥

तस्मिन्देशे य आचारः पारम्पर्यक्रमगतः ।

"That country being created by God is termed Brahmāvarta, which lies between the rivers Sarasvatī and Drishadvatī. The usages of [the four] classes and the mixed [classes] living in that district, which are handed down from generation to generation, are termed the usages of the great." About what is acceptable to one's soul, Vijñāneśvara observes that this consultation of one's own mind is to be made only in the case of optional performances; as for instance when the question is whether the investiture with the thread is to be performed in the eighth year of the boy from birth or from conception (Mit. ch. i, l. 2, p. 1.)

² "Yoga is the concentration of the powers of the mind." See the Pāṇjāla Yoga-sūtram (p. 1) for the comments on this aphorism. See further on (ch. iii., vv. 147 and 148) where the author describes Yoga in the section on Adhyātma or self-knowledge.

³ As to who are Trividyā, Manu says [ch. xii., v. 112] :—ऋग्वेदविषजुर्विष सामवेदविदेव च । त्र्यवरा परिषज्ज्ञेया धर्मसंज्ञयनिर्णये ॥

"That parishat (assembly) is enjoined in deciding disputes about Dharma (duties), [which consists of] not less than three men knowing the Rick, Yajush, and the Sāman Vedās."

⁴ As to a parshat or assembly, see Manu, ch. xii., vv. 110 to 114. Yājñavalkya makes the assembly to be पर्वत्, while Manu makes it परिषत्. The constitution of the law-giving assembly is somewhat differently laid down in these two works. The Mitāksharā makes it consist of four Brāhmaṇas learned in the Vedas and Dharmaśāstras, and holds "the three" in the above verse to mean "a concourse of three who have studied the three sciences" without defining those sciences.

⁵ What is Adhyātma-vidyā or self-knowledge, Yājñavalkya describes in ch. iii., vv. 126 to 205. The "one priest" described in Manu ch. xii., v. 13 is evidently the same as the adhyātmavivittamaḥ in the above verse. On this subject Bṛihaspati says :—"लोकवेदज्ञधर्मज्ञाः सप्त पञ्च त्रयोऽपि वा । यत्रैवपिष्टा विभाः स्युः सा यत्सदृशी सभा"; translation: "where seven, five or three Brāhmaṇas versed in the Vedās and Dharmaś (duties) are sitting,

12. On the 11th day [after birth] *Nāmakaraṇa*⁵ (or naming rite); 10 in the fourth month, *nishkramaṇa*⁶ or “taking out [the child to see the sun or the moon]”; in the sixth [month], *annaprāsana*⁷ or eating boiled rice; chūḍākarma,⁸ or tonsure right to be performed according to family custom.

13. In this manner, the sin produced from the seed and the womb is destroyed.⁹ These rites [are performed] silently¹⁰ for women; their marriage however [is performed] with Mantra texts.

14. The *upa-nāyana*¹¹ (or carrying near to the preceptor for investiture with the sacred mantra) of a Bráhmaṇa [is to be performed]

² From dei, two, and jīyate, is born. See Manu ch. ii., v. 169.

³ Mantra signifies Veda or Smṛiti texts. The ceremonies of the Sūdras are to be performed with Purāṇik texts.

¹⁰ See supra, v. 10, p. 5.

¹¹ Upa-nāyana or upanayana means bringing near. The student is brought near the preceptor who instructs him in the Gāyatrī, the sacred Vedic verse, to make him fit to receive instruction in the Vedās. Upanayana is the correct word according to grammar, but most Smṛiti writers make it upanāyana, and Bhaṭṭojīdīkshita, in his comments on the twenty-four Smṛitis, defends the latter at great length; but Samskāra-kauṣṭhubha says that upanayana is the idiomatic word, and its principal part consists in 40 initiation with the Gāyatrī, and its secondary portion consists in taking the pupil to the teacher. Aparārka in his commentary on Yājñavalkya defines it as the connecting of the pupil with the Gāyatrī by the A’chārya.

in the eighth year from the time of conception or birth ; of *Kṣatriyas*¹ in the eleventh ; of Vaiśyas in the twelfth year. Some [sages maintain that it should be performed] according to family custom.²

15. To the student led to the preceptor [for learning the Veda], the Veda is to be taught, and the purificatory rites to be taught preceded by the great *Vyākṛiti*³ texts.

16. During the day, and during the morning and evening twilight, the urine and the faeces are to be voided, facing the north, and with the sacred thread on the [right] ear ; and at night facing the south.

10 17. Rising with the male-generative organ [in one hand], purification, destructive of stink sticking to the body, is to be attentively made with earth and uplifted waters.

18. [He] is to sit facing the north, or the east with the hands between the knees, in a clean spot ; a twice-born is daily to sip the water of Brāhma-tīrtha.⁴

19. The beginning of little finger is the Prajāpati-tīrtha, that of the index is the Pitri-tīrtha, that of the great finger the Brāhma-tīrtha, and the end of the hand is the Deva-tīrtha.

20 20. Water should be thrice drunk ; [the mouth] should be twice cleared ; the [nose, ears, and eyes, these three] holes should be touched with water. The waters should be in the natural pure state free from foam and bubbles.⁵

21. The twice-born become pure by [waters] reaching the heart, the throat, and the palate, respectively.⁶ Women and Śūdras become pure, [directly the waters] once reach the palate.

¹ The word used is rājan (king), which here is significatory of the kṣatriya or military class.

² See Manu ch. ii., v. 36. Manu in the next verse (37) gives other periods ; and lays down the proper time for a Brāhmaṇa, to be the eighth year from conception.

30 Different Smṛitis lay down different periods for upanayana from the 5th to the 16th year ; but the 8th year is the one accepted by most ; and Āśvalāyana in his Gṛihya Sūtras adopts the same. See the texts of Paithīnasi, Uśanas, Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, Viṣṇu, in the section on Upanayana in the Prayogaratna and the Samskāra-Kaustubha. The opinion of most Smṛiti and Gṛihya writers appears to be that the upanayana of a Brāhmaṇa should be performed in the eighth year from conception. Vijñāneśvara appears to suggest that where two Smṛitis differ, both may be obeyed.

³ Mitākṣarā, on the authority of Gautama, lays down the number of these texts to be seven.

⁴ As to what is a Brāhma-tīrtha, see the next verse, which lays down the four 40 tīrthas to be drunk. See Manu ch. ii., v. 59. Amarakośa ch. ii., sec. vii., v. 51.

⁵ Manu ch. ii., v. 60.

⁶ That is, the Brāhmaṇa is purified when it reaches the heart ; the Vaiśya, when it reaches the throat ; and the Śūdra, the palate. Vijñāneśvara says that the uninitiated twice-born are ranked along with women and Śūdras. See Manu ch. ii., v. 62.

22. Bathing, throwing [purifying] water over the body with Mantras addressed to the water-gods, retention of breath, making *Upasthāna*¹ to the sun, [and] reciting the Gāyatrī, daily.²

23. The Gāyatrī is to be recited with the head of it, preceded by the Īśāhritis each to be coupled with the Pīṇava. Three of these when recited constitute the retention of the breath.

24. Subduing the breath, sprinkling [the body] with water's, [reciting] the three Mantras addressed to the water-gods, with the face to the west, he is to recite the Gāyatrī till the stars rise.

25. In the same manner, in the morning twilight, he is to stand 10 facing the east till the appearance of the sun. Afterwards fireworship is to be performed for both the twilights [respectively].³

26. Then, he is to bow to the elders, saying—'I am so and so'; and composing himself, he is to serve the preceptor in order to learn the Veda.

27. Being invited [by the preceptor] he ought even⁴ to study; and whatever may be acquired should be bestowed [on him, the preceptor]; and by his mind, speech, and body, he should conduct himself so as to benefit him [the preceptor].

28. The grateful, kind,⁵ quick of perception and able to retain, 20 pure, strong in body and mind, one who gives out the good acts, but not the faults of others, well-behaved, devoted [to the preceptor's service], one related, one able to give knowledge or money: such [students] should be taught.

29. The staff, the skin [of the black antelope,] the sacred thread, and the girdle, let him wear; [and] for his living, let him beg of blameless Brāhmaṇas.⁶

30. In [obtaining] living by begging, the Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are respectively to use the word 'thou' in the beginning, in the middle, and at the end.⁷

¹ The word means, standing in the presence of, and with hands raised and pressed together, addressing appropriate prayers to the object of worship.

² All the five rites of the day are here referred to.

³ Once after the morning twilight and again after the evening twilight.

⁴ api is the original word, which, Vijñāneśvara says, is put to include all duties laid down by Gautama.

⁵ So rendered by Vijñāneśvara. The original literally means "not hating." See Manu ch. ii., v. 109. Atri.

⁶ Manu ch. ii., v. 48.

⁷ Thus the Brāhmaṇa is to say 'Bhavaṁ bhikṣhām dehi' (thou give alms); the 40 Kṣatriya, 'Bhikṣhām bhavati dehi' (give thou alms); and the Vaiśya 'Bhikṣhām dehi bhavati' (alms give thou). In all instances this is addressed to females. See Manu ch. ii., v. 49.

31. Performing the worship of the fire, let him, with the permission of the preceptor, dine silently¹ after making the *Āpośana*² and honoring the food, not blaming [it].

32. Remaining a Brahmachārin when not in distress,³ let him [the Brahmachāri] not eat food from one man.⁴ A *Brāhmaṇa*⁵ [Brahmachāri] may dine⁶ at a Śrāddha, without breaking [the rules laid down for his] conduct.

33. Let [him] abstain from honey, flesh, applying black pigment to the eye-lashes;⁷ eating the leavings of another man,⁸ fermented 10 liquors,⁹ woman, destruction of animal-life, looking at the sun [at rising and setting],¹⁰ low speech, and fault-finding.

34. He, who performing the rites (of conception, &c.) gives (i. e. teaches) him [the student] the Veda, is Guru;¹¹ he who performing the Upanayana [only] gives (i. e. teaches) the Veda is described as Achārya.¹²

35. [He who teaches] a portion of the Veda is Upādhyāya;¹³ he who performs a sacrifice is called Ritvij;¹⁴ these are to be honored in their order; greater than all these is the mother.¹⁵

36. For each Veda, the rules of a Brahmachāri are to be observed 20 twelve years or five (years). Some [authors] say that [they are to be

² The act of drinking the water with certain ceremonies at the beginning and the end of meals.

³ Vijñāneśvara renders anāpadi into "disease, &c. not existing."

⁴ See Manu ch. ii., v. 188.

⁶ The original is Kāmaṃ aśnyāt. But in commenting on Manu, ch. ii., v. 189, 30 Viśvarūpa says that the rule of his order is kept inviolate, if he partakes of honey or flesh at a Śrāddha. Sarvajñanārāyaṇa, in commenting on the same, says that although the eating of these things at a Śrāddha does not destroy the rule of the order, still it is objectionable. Therefore if he eats at a Śrāddha, he ought to perform penance by retaining the breath, &c.

⁷ Vij. makes añjana mean ointment as well as pigment.

⁸ Vij. qualifies it by saying "except those of the preceptor."

⁹ Vij. translates sukṭa into "harsh words;" but that signification does not seem to be appropriate.

¹⁰ 'At rising and setting' is added by Vij.

observed) till the study of the Veda is completed.¹ In the sixteenth year the hair is to be shaved.²

37. The maximum age for the performance of the Upanayana rite for the Bráhmaṇas, Kshatriyas, and Vaiśyas [respectively] is up to the sixteenth, the twenty-second, and the twenty-fourth year.³

38. After this, all these [youths of the three classes] fall out-casts from religion, degraded from the Gáyatrí, and, if the Vryátya-stoma rite be not performed, [they become] Vrátayas.⁴

39. The first [birth] of the Bráhmaṇas, Kshatriyas, and Vaiśyas is from the mother; the second is from the tying of the Munji: hence 10 they are called dríjas (or twice-born).⁵

40. To the twice-born classes, the Veda is the highest road to beatitude [as the expounder] of sacrifices, of austerities, and of good actions.

41. The dríja who daily⁶ studies the Rig [Veda] satisfies the

² The rite is called Keśánta, or cutting of the hair. See Manu ch. ii., v. 65. The above Keśánta rite according to Yáj. would appear to be only for Bráhmaṇas. 20

Áśvaláyana describes these Vrátayas as being impure, and unfit for upanayana, for receiving the Vedas, and for intercourse as to food, worship, &c. But he nowhere expressly provides expiation for them. Various writers, (such as Gágábhata in his Játiviveka), have stated the law applicable to the progeny of the Vrátayas, who therefore must have been living as a class at some time in Hindu history. See Yájñavalkya, ch. iii., अथर्ववेद for a Vrátaya. The expiatory ceremonies for Vrátayas are laid down by other writers to be Uddálaka Vrata, bathing in the Avabhṛitha ceremony at a horse sacrifice, and Vrátayastoma.

⁵ See Manu ch. ii., v. 169. This verse should have been inserted immediately after v. 10 (see above p. 161). 40

gods with honey and milk, and the manes with honey and clarified butter.¹

42. He who daily studies the Yajur-Veda, as far as he can,² satisfies the gods with clarified butter and nectar, and the manes with clarified butter and honey.

43. He who daily studies the Sāmans, satisfies the gods with the Soma juice and clarified butter, and the manes with honey and clarified butter.

44. The dvija who daily studies, as far as he can, the Atharvan and Angiras,³ satisfies the gods with fat⁴ and the manes with honey and 10 clarified butter.

45, 46. The questions and replies in the Vedas,⁵ the Pu-ānas, the Dharmaśāstras [beginning with that of Manu], the Nāradaśāsis,⁶ the Gāthas,⁷ the histories, the science, [like that taught by Varuṇa's son]—whoever daily studies these as far as he can, [45]

Satisfies the gods with flesh, boiled rice mixed with milk and honey ; and the manes with honey and clarified butter. [46]

¹ The Vedic text is “जायमानो वै ब्राह्मणश्चिन्तयन् जायते” &c. and the other Smṛiti writers say that by studying the Vedas the debt due to the Rishis is discharged ; but Yāj. makes no mention of them at all. Manu mentions कवियज्ञ (see ch. iv., v. 21), and 20 it is made by reading the Veda. [See ch. iii., v. 70 where the same is called ब्रह्मयज्ञ].

² “As far as he can” is a qualification applicable to the preceding verse ; also Yāj. being a Yajur-Vēḍi Brāhmaṇa glorifies his Veda over the Rīgveda, as the mention of nectar in this verse shows. Manu ch. iv., v. 124, shows the relative importance of the Vēḍas.

³ The Vīramitrodaya describes Angiras as that branch of the Atharva Veda which principally treats of incantations.

⁴ Vīj. makes no mention of this in the Mitākaharā. This is an unusual word of rare occurrence, and one which peculiarly called for comment.

Vīramitrodaya calls certain three tricks beginning with इदं जना उपस्कृता इ० in the appendix called kṣhila to the Rīg-veda as Nāradaśāsis.

⁷ Prose writings in the Vedas addressed as prayers to deities.

47. They being satisfied, satisfy him with all beneficial desired fruits.¹ Whichever Mantras he repeats, he derives their [proper] benefits.

48. The dvija who daily recites the Veda, enjoys the fruit of giving away three times the whole earth filled with treasures, and of austerities [like the Chândráyana].

49. The Naishthika Brahmachárin is to live near the Āchārya: in his absence near his son or his wife, or his fire.

50. In this manner the Brahmachárin using his body, and subduing his senses, attains the world of Brahmā, and is not born again.

[End of the section relating to the Brahmachárin.]

SAMÁVARTANAM.

[Return to another order.]

51. Having finished [the study of] the Veda, or the observance of rules [laid down for a Brahmachárin, or having done] both [and] given to the Guru what he may wish for,² let him bathe with his permission.

MARRIAGE.

52—53. He who has not lost his Brahmacharya (chastity), let him marry a girl of [good] parts, who has not been accepted or enjoyed by another, [who is] attractive in his sight, who is not a Sapinda of him [and is] a junior; [who is] free from irremediable disease 20

¹ Yáj. generally abbreviates where Manu lengthens; but here it is the reverse; of what Manu has done in one verse (Manu ch. ii., v. 107), Yáj. has taken seven to accomplish. It seems, however, that Yáj. has in this instance followed the Taittiriya A'raṇyaka and not Manu, as may be seen on actual comparison of the texts.

³ I have translated Vara into "what he may wish for." In the Gobhila Smṛiti, or what is called Karmagradīpa, the word Vara is thus defined (vr. 89 and 90):

गौक्षिष्टतया विप्रैर्वेदेष्वपि निगद्यते ॥ न ततोऽन्यद् यस्माच्चस्मादौर्वैर उच्यते ॥ ८९ ॥

येषां व्रतानामन्तेषु दक्षिणा न विधीयते ॥ वरस्तत्र भवेदानमपि वेच्छावशाद्गुरोः ॥ ९० ॥

Translation:—"Even in the Vedas the cow is described by the Brahmanas as the 30 highest [being]; therefore the cow is to be vara (high). In the case of those Vratas (ceremonies) where no dakṣhiṇá (present) at the end [to the priest] is prescribed, the dakṣhiṇá (gift) is to be either a vara or whatever the guru (preceptor) might wish.

Vara means four kārahāṇas according to several commentators on the Kaṭha Sūtras and other writers. Vij. has left off this technical meaning, and adopted the common acceptation. The Vīr says that some read dāna (wealth) instead of vara.

who has brothers; who is descended from one whose *gotra*¹ and *pravara*² are different from his; and who is removed five degrees on the mother's and seven on the father's side.

54. [She should be descended] from a high learned family, ten ancestors [viz. five on each side] of which are distinguished; but not from a family tainted with hereditary diseases, even though [she be qualified] as above stated.

55. Endowed with these³ qualities, of the same class, versed in the Vedas, young, talented, and popular, and whose manhood has 10 been tested, [such should be] the husband.

56. The taking of a Sūdra wife by the twice-born is [indeed] ordained [by some], [but] it is not agreeable to my views; because from her he is himself born.⁴

57. Three, two, or one [wife] to the Brāhmaṇas, Kshatriyas, and Vaiśyas [is laid down] according to the priority of classes, and respectively [i. e. to a Brāhmaṇa, a Brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya and Vaiśya wives and so on]; to the Sūdra [is] a wife born in the same class.

58. That is called Brāhma marriage [wherein the bridegroom] being invited, [the bride] is given away, bedecked according to the [givers']
20 means. The [son] born of her purifies twenty-one persons on each side.⁵

59. [Giving away the bride] to the Ritviḍa sitting at a sacrifice [makes] a daiva [marriage]; [giving the bride] after taking a cow, and a bullock [makes] an ārsha [marriage]; the son born of the first [i. e. the daiva] marriage purifies fourteen persons, that produced from the second, six.

30 Nīlakaṇṭha and Anantadeva both say that gotra is that progeny of any of the Saptarṣi (seven sages) and Agastya which is popularly known as gotra. The number of gotras are thus indefinite, and determined by usage alone (see the Saṃskāra Kaustubha I, 179, p. 2).

² A pravara is explained in the Saṃskāra Kaustubha to be ऋषितृप्त्वेनाग्नेः पार्थनादि on the authority of Baudhāyana [see I, 182, p. 2], which means 'the prayers [addressed] to the fire after [the mention of the invoker's] connection with a ऋषि (sage)'. Nīlakaṇṭha says gotra is the offspring of the abovementioned eight sages, and forty-nine of these are termed pravara. For their list see the verses from the Smṛiti-manjari cited by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Saṃskāra Mayūkha, in regard to the enumeration 40 of gotra and pravara, as showing the extent of intermarriages permitted.

⁵ That is, ten ancestors and ten successors, and himself.

60. Giving the bride after telling the bridegroom 'may she fulfil with you the duties of religion,' makes a *Kāya*¹ marriage; the son born of that will purify six and six persons along with himself.²

61. The A'sura is [that marriage which takes place] on the acceptance of money; the Gāndharva is that which occurs in consequence of each other's [love]³; Rākshasa [is that where the bride] is taken away in war; [and] Paśācha is that where deceit is practised on the bride.⁴

62. When [the bride and bridegroom] are of the same class, the hand [of the bride] is to be taken; in the marriage of a Brāhmaṇa, a Kṣatriya [bride] is to take hold of an arrow;⁵ a Vaiśya [bride], 10 of a whip, [and a Sūdra one, of the skirts of a garment].⁶

63. The father, father's father, brother, a paternal male relative [i. e. sapindas, sagotras, &c.], [and] the mother [is to be] the giver of the bride, provided [the giver] be of sound mind, the second in the absence of the first, the third in that of the second, &c.

64. [He who being qualified to give] does not give her [in marriage], incurs [the sin of] infant-killing at each menstrual period. If there be no giver, the maiden is herself to select a [suitable] bridegroom.

65. Once is a maiden given; [he who] takes her after giving is 20 liable to be punished like a thief. If a bridegroom better than the previous one comes, even the given [maiden] may be taken away.⁷

66. He who gives away [a maiden] without describing her blemishes is to pay the highest fine⁸; who abandons a blameless one is to be similarly punished; who falsely blames one is to be fined a hundred [paṇas].⁹

² Six after him, and six before him, making with himself thirteen.

³ One made by each other's consent without the intervention of a third party.

⁵ See Manu ch. iii., vv. 43, 44.

⁶ This clause is added by the commentator; but of this there is not one word in the text; and as Yājñavalkya condemns the union of a Brāhmaṇa with a Sūdra, it is rather too much for the commentator to make such an addition. Sarvajñanārāyaṇa in his comments on Manu ch. iii., vv. 43 and 44, says the bridegroom is to hold an arrow and a whip, and the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya brides are to touch them respectively.

⁸ Uttamasāhasa is the original word which is defined by Yāj. in this very chapter (vide vv. 365, 366). It is 1080 paṇas.

⁹ Paṇas is added by Vijñāneśvara.

67. She who is again married, whether she be uninjured or injured [by connection], is a Punarbhā;¹ she who, leaving a husband,² lusts after another man of the same class, is a svairinī.

68. To a sonless [widow] when in season, a younger brother of the husband or a sapiṇḍa or a sagotra,³ commanded by the Guru (preceptor) and desirous of raising a son should go, after applying clarified butter to his body.

69. He should go until conception takes place; otherwise he will become patita (or fallen); the son born in this manner is a kshetrāja.⁴

10 70. An adulteress is to be allowed to live, deprived of her authority, dirty, fed with a view to sustain life only, dishonored, sleeping on the ground.⁵

71. The moon gave purity to women, the Gandharva [gave them] good speech, the fire [gave] purity throughout; therefore women are all pure.⁶

72. The purification from adultery⁷ is at the menstrual period; on [adulterous] conception,⁸ on the killing of the foetus, or of the husband, or [on the commission] of some great sin, [the wife] is to be abandoned.

20 73. [A wife who is] drunkard, diseased, deceitful, barren, who speaks bitterly, who bears female-children, and who hates her husband, should be superseded.

74. Although superseded, she should be maintained; otherwise great sin will be [caused]. Where the wife and husband agree, there three [virtue, wealth, and pleasure] increase.

¹ Punarbhā is of two sorts—kshatā, i. e. one who has had connection with another man previous to marriage, and akshatā, i. e. one who has been once married, and is married a second time.

² Vij. says her Kaumarapati, i. e. her first husband.

30 ³ The second in the absence of the first; and so on.

⁴ Kshetra is the place or soil wherein the seed is sown.

⁵ Vij. says that this is to be adopted to produce repentance.

⁶ This identical text occurs in Atri Smṛiti where it is the 188th verse; probably Yāj. has borrowed it from Atri. In the 27th chapter of Vasishṭha Smṛiti the like passage runs thus :—

“तावां सोमो ददत् शौचं गन्धर्वैः शिक्षितां गिरं”

अग्निश्च सदैमकृत्स्वं तस्याग्निष्कल्मषाः क्षियः ॥

The last clause of Vasishṭha differs. It says that ‘fire gave them the power of eating everything,’ which means that fire being one of the three husbands a maiden enjoys 40 before marriage, she may eat any ordinarily forbidden thing before her marriage to her human husband.

⁷ This must be mental adultery, see Vij. 1.9, p. 2. The Vīr. adds that this purification applies in the case of a forcible connexion as well.

⁸ If impregnated, says Vīr., by a man of an inferior order.

75. She who whether her husband be alive or dead, does not approach another, attains to glory here, and rejoices with *Umd*¹ [hereafter].

76. [He who] abandons an obedient, attentive,² son-bearing, and sweet-speaking wife, should be compelled [by the king]³ to give her a third of his property.⁴ If poor, he should [be ordered to] maintain her.⁵

77. Wives are to act according to the words of their husbands: this is the wives' highest duty. If the [husband] has been guilty of some great sin,⁶ his purification should be awaited.⁷

78. Because the attainment of worlds, and of eternal [happiness] and 10 of heaven is through sons, sons' sons, and sons' grandsons [respectively], therefore women should be enjoyed, and should be well taken care of.⁸

79. Sixteen nights is the season of wives, wherein they should be approached on the even nights; the *Parvan*⁹ nights, and the first four [nights] should be excepted: thus acting [he is] even a Bráhma-charin.¹⁰

² Vij. explains dakṣām by Śighrakārinīm, i. e. quick in action; but the above is also one of its meanings, and seems better than the one adopted by Vij. 20

³ This is added in the Mitākshara by Vij., who explains maintenance to be food, raiment, &c.

⁴ Moveable, immoveable, or both.

⁷ The wife is independent of the husband in regard to the performance of her necessary religious duties, so long as his great sins remain unatoned; but for other things she would await his purification.

⁸ See Manu ch. ix., v. 137 "पुत्रेण लोकाश्च जयति, पौत्रेणानन्त्यमनुते । अथ पुत्रस्य पौत्रेण ब्रह्मस्याप्नोति विदुषः ॥" Translation:—" [A man] secures the [future] worlds by [means of] a son, enjoys perpetuity by [means of] a grandson, and reaches the heaven of the sun by [means of] a grandson of a son." Vij. translates lokānantyam into the continuity of the family; but the meaning is opposed to the above explicit text of Manu and the critical sense of the above passage.

The taking of a wife is for the purpose of begetting good progeny; and to the 40 attainment of this end, wives should be well taken care of.

⁹ The 4th and 14th nights of the bright and dark haloes of each lunar month, and the full and new moon days. See Manu ch. iii., vv. 46-48.

80. Thus going once to the slender¹ wife, avoiding [the conjunction of the moon with] the Maghá² and Múla³ constellations, [and] when the moon is lucky, he should beget a son endowed with good qualities.

81. Or, remembering the gift made to the women, he should act according to her wish ; and he should always be devoted to his wife,⁴ because it is said that women should be always protected.⁵

82. By the husband, the brothers, the fathers, kinsmen,⁶ the mother-in-law, the father-in-law, the husband's younger brothers, and 10 by *Bandhus*⁷ are women to be worshipped with ornaments, raiment, and food.⁸

83. Keeping the household furniture, attentive, cheerful, opposed to expense, devoted to the husband, she is to venerate the feet of her father-in-law and mother-in-law.⁹

84. She whose husband is gone abroad, should leave off playing [with balls, &c.,] adorning the body [with scents, &c.], seeing assemblages of men and festivals, laughter, going to the houses of strangers.

85. The father is to protect the maiden [before her marriage] ; the married woman is to be protected by the husband, and in old age [in his 20 absence]¹⁰ by sons, or in their absence by kinsmen ; because women are never to have independence.¹¹

86. She who is bereft of her husband, is not to be without [the protection of] the father, mother, sons, brothers, mother-in-law, father-in-law, mothers' brothers ; otherwise she will incur reproach.¹²

87. She who is intent upon what would be pleasing to the husband, whose conduct is praiseworthy, and who has subdued her senses, attains to glory in this world, and the blessed state after death.

¹ She should be slender in consequence of confining herself to the proper diet.

⁴ Vij. says the use of the word eva (even) shows that he should not go after another's wife. See Manu ch. ix., v. 5.

⁵ And this cannot be done unless their desires are satisfied by the husband devoting himself to them, and abstaining from similar intercourse with other women.

Vij. discusses the above, and quotes the texts of the Mīmāṃsā, and comes to the conclusion that in season going to the wife is essential. In support of his views he cites the old commentators Bhāruchi and Viśvarūpa.

As to the vara or gift to women, see the Taittirīya or black Yajurveda, Kānda ii., 40 Adhyāya. v., Anauvāka 1, beginning with "तान् यजुर्वचं वृणोते ॥"

⁶ Jñāsi is the original word.

⁷ Bandhu means the technical Bandhus according to the Vīramitrodaya.

⁸ See Manu ch. iii., v. 55.

⁹ See Manu ch. v., v. 150.

¹⁰ This is added by Vijñāneśvara.

¹¹ See Manu ch. ix., v. 3.

¹² See Manu ch. ix., v. 2.

88. Should there be wives of different classes, religious duty is not to be performed by one of a different class ; amongst wives of the same class, the eldest is to officiate in religious ceremonies, and no other.¹

89. The husband having burnt his well-conducted wife with the *Agnihotra*² fire, should without delay take another wife, and [kindle] another fire.

DISQUISITION ABOUT CLASSES, CASTES, &c.

90. Sons continuing the line and begotten after proper marriages by men on women of the same class are sajāti (of the same caste).³ 10

91. The son begotten by a Brāhmaṇa upon his Kshatriya wife [is] a Mūrāhavasikta, one upon a Vaiśya wife is an Ambashṭha, one upon a Śūdra is a Nishāda or Pāraśava.⁴

92. The sons borne by Vaiśya and Śūdra wives to a Kshatriya are called Māhishya and Ugra [respectively]⁵ ; the son born of a Vaiśya by a Śūdra wife is a *Karāṇa*⁶ : this rule refers to wives regularly married.

93. One begotten on a Brāhmaṇi woman by a Kshatriya [is] a *Sūta*⁷ ; by a Vaiśya, a *Vaidehaka*⁸ ; and by a Śūdra, a *Chāṇḍāla*⁹ outcaste to all religion.

94. A Kshatriya woman with a Vaiśya [man] produces a Māgadha,¹⁰ 20 and with a Śūdra produces a *Kshattā*¹¹ ; a Śūdra begets upon a Vaiśya woman an Āyogava.¹²

95. A Māhishya produces upon a *Karāṇi*¹³ [woman], a Rathakāra. [In short] all Pratilomaja (those produced in the inverse order), and all Anulomaja (those produced in the direct order), are to be understood as bad and good respectively.

96. The rise in caste [comes], be it understood, by the fifth or seventh birth¹⁴ ; by acts done against rule¹⁵ [he similarly sinks] to an equality [with the caste whose rules he adopts]. [In the mixed classes, the issue begotten by Brāhmaṇas, &c.] rise or fall as before. 30

¹⁴ Thus, Vj. says, that a Brāhmaṇa begets upon a Śūdra, a Nishād ; she (the Nishād) marrying a Brāhmaṇa produces a girl who again marries a Brāhmaṇa ; in this manner the marriage of the sixth daughter with a Brāhmaṇa produces a Brāhmaṇa (ch. i., l. 15, p. 1). Again a Brāhmaṇa produces upon a Vaiśya, an Ambashṭha who marrying a Brāhmaṇa bears a daughter, and these connections going on for five generations produce a Brāhmaṇa. 40

¹⁵ If a Brāhmaṇa or its like a Kshatriya, &c., he sinks after the fifth or seventh generation to the level of the class whose rules he adopts. And so do the other classes (ch. i., l. 15, p. 1.)

DUTIES OF A HOUSEHOLDER.¹

97. Let the householder daily perform the *Smárta*² ceremonies on the marriage-fire, or the fire taken at the time of taking the heritage; and the *Śrauta*³ ceremonial on the *Vaitánika*⁴ [or the three sacred fires].

98. After finishing the care and attention with respect to the body, a twice-born, making the purificatory rites, should first clean his teeth, and then say the morning-prayer.

99. Having offered sacrifices to the fires, let him, with collected
10 thoughts, repeat prayers sacred to the sun; let him study the meaning of the Vedás and of the various Śústrás.⁵

100. Let him approach the ruler in order that what he has not may be obtained, and what he has may be preserved; [afterwards] bathing, let him offer libations of water to the gods, the manes, and worship the gods.⁶

101. Let him [then] repeat the Vedas, the Atharvan, the Purānas, together with the Itihāsas (histories), according to ability, in order that the rite of uttering prayers may be completed: and let him likewise meditate on the science of self-knowledge.⁷

20 102. The great sacrifices to the Bhútas,⁸ the manes, the gods, the *Brahma*⁹ and men, are—[1] the Bali-karma (making of the Bali sacrifice),¹⁰ [2] the svadhá offering,¹¹ [3] the offering of food to fire, [4] the repeating the Vedas, and [5] the honoring of guests.¹²

² As directed by the Smritis, and laid down in the Gṛhya Sūtra of the performer's branch of the Veda: see Manu ch. iii., v. 67.

³ According to the Śruti or Veda.

⁴ Vaitánika means the three sacred fires called A'havanīya, Gárhapatya, and Dakṣiṇāgni: see A'gvaláyana Śrauta Sūtra, p. 2.

80 ⁵ Vij. adds that the word cha indicates that what has been studied, should be revised.

⁶ Vij. suggests that the water should be offered by the river side, where the bathing should be performed. The worship, &c. is to be performed according to the Gṛhya Sūtra of the party. The use of cha after the Pitṛis (manes) shows that water is to be offered to the sages likewise.

⁷ The Upanishads. Vij. says that these should be recited entire or in portions.

⁸ A class of unseen spirits.

¹⁰ See next verse.

40 ¹¹ Giving of food after uttering the word svadhá.

¹² Yāj. has first succinctly described the five daily sacrifices in this verse, and afterwards amplified the same subject in the three following verses. See Manu ch. iii., v. 70.

103. Let him offer the sacrifice to the Bhútas from the remains of food after sacrifice has been offered to the gods; let him then place on the ground food for dogs, Chándúlas, and crows.

104. Food [is] to be daily given to the manes, and men, and water also,¹ daily; the vedas to be [likewise] daily repeated; food is not to be cooked simply for oneself.

105. Children, the married girls, the old, the pregnant, the distressed, the unmarried girls, the guests and the servants, are to be fed; and the man and his wife are to eat of the remaining food.²

106. Let the twice-born diner take food covered and sweet, by 10 means of the *Āpośana*³ in the beginning as well as in the end.⁴

107. Gift is to be made to men of the [four] classes [coming] as guests according to ability; giving precedence [according to the order of the classes];⁵ even in the evening a guest is not to be turned away, and hospitality is to be shown [if there be no food to give, at least]⁶ with [kind] words, [and giving] room, grass, and water.⁷

108. To the Sannyāsin and to the Brahmachārin, alms are to be given with kind treatment; also, those friends, relatives and brethren who come at [dinner] time, should be fed.⁸

109. Let him give a big ox or a big goat to a Brāhmaṇa knowing 20 the Vedas,⁹ and [let him give him] also good reception, delicious food, sweet speech, and precedence in sitting.

110. Let him once a year worship [with a Madhuparka],¹⁰ the snataka,¹¹ the āchārya,¹² the ruler, the friend, the son-in-law, and again the ṛitvij (the officiating priest) [should be worshipped] at each sacrifice [with a Madhuparka].

¹ Vij. says that water is to be given in the absence of food, roots, &c; but the word is api, which cannot directly bear such a construction. Vij. has evidently followed some other Smṛiti here. See Manu ch. iii., vv. 81—93.

² See Manu ch. iii., vv. 114—118.

³ See verse 31 of this chapter, and note at p. 164.

⁴ Food is said to be naked in the beginning, and when a devija takes in the water as directed, he spiritually covers it, and in the end by another similar sip of the water he gives it the power of nectar.

⁵ Vij. interprets anupūrvāśah by 'according to the order of classes.'

⁶ Vij. adds the words within the brackets.

⁷ See Manu ch. iii., vv. 99—112.

⁹ See below verse 111.

¹⁰ Whoever is to be honored with a Madhuparka is to be seated, to have his feet 40 washed with water, to be asked to take some water by means of the Āchamana, and to have honey mixed with curds given to him to eat. This is called a Madhuparka. See Manu ch. iii., vv. 119, 120.

¹¹ See above verse 51: he who bathes as therein stated is a Snataka.

111. He who is a traveller is to be understood to be an Atithi (guest); the *śrotriya*¹ and one versed in one of the Vedas [who come as guests] are to be honored by the householder who wishes [to attain] the world of Brahmā.

112. Without unexceptionable invitation, let there not be [a desire to] taste another's food; let him avoid [abuse]² of speech, hands, feet, &c. and too much food-taking.

113. The satisfied Śrotriya guest is to be escorted to the boundary; the rest of the day, let him remain [or spend] with superior men,³
10 the friends,⁴ and brethren.⁵

114. Having made [i. e. said] the evening Sandhyā (prayers), and having sacrificed to and prayed to the [three] fires; and having dined so as not to produce too much satisfaction surrounded by servants, let him go to sleep.

115. Getting up at the *Brāhma*⁶ hour, the benefit of one's own son should be studied; duty, wealth, and pleasure, according to ability, at the proper times should not be abandoned.

116. Knowledge, acts,⁷ age,⁸ brothers,⁹ wealth,—for these in their order¹⁰ men are to be respected. Even a Sūdra endowed with 20 these deserves respect in old age.¹¹

¹ Śrotriya is one who knows the Vedas; he who knows one branch of a Veda is a vedapāra according to Vijñānesvara.

² Pāṇini, Adhyāya v., ii., 84 : “श्रोत्रियं वदो धीति” i. e. “He who studies the Vedas is a Śrotriya.”

³ भट्टारानाथतर्कवाचस्पतिकृतशब्दस्तोमशाधि p. 453 : एकां शाखां सकल्पां वा षडभिरङ्गैरधीत्य-च । षट्कर्मेनिरतो विप्रः श्रोत्रियो नाम धर्मेति ॥ which means “that Brāhmaṇa who studies one recension [of his Veda] with its kalpa, and the six Angas (subordinate parts), is devoted [to the performance of] the six duties, and knows the dharma (law) is a Śrotriya.”

80 ⁴ The original word is chāpalyam or activity; Vij. makes it the mischievous use or abuse of the senses specified, of which he gives examples.

⁵ Śiṣṭa or superior men; Vij. translates it into men versed in histories, Purāṇas, &c.

⁶ Iṣṭa is the original word which Vij. translates into men versed in poetry, stories, &c.

⁷ Bandhu is the word in the text. Vij. makes it skilled in good acceptable conversation. See Bāṇabhaṭṭa's Haraharita as to this and notes 3 and 4.

⁸ The last four ghatikās of the night : a ghatikā being equal to 24 minutes.

⁹ Vij. describes these as Śrauta and Smārta acts.

40 ¹⁰ That is, says Vij., either senior in years to ourselves, or is more than seventy years old.

¹¹ Vij. says extensive connection with relatives.

¹² That is, a man with knowledge takes the precedence of one only more aged, and so on.

¹³ Vij. says according to a text of Gautama that this is so after he has passed his eightieth year, whether he is possessed of all the above attributes, or some of them.

117. To the old, the loaded, the king, the student who has bathed after just finishing his studentship, the diseased, the bridegroom, the driver of a carriage,¹ way should be given; the king is to be preferred; and the student who has just finished his Vedic studies and bathed is to be respected by the king.²

118. Sacrificing, studying and giving alms are [appointed] for the Vaiśyas³ and Kshatriyas; and to the Brāhmaṇas, there are, in addition, receiving gifts, assisting others to sacrifice and teaching [the Vedas].

119. To the Kshatriyas is ordained the protection of [their] sub-10 jects as the chief duty; for the Vaiśya lending at interest, agriculture, trade, and tending cattle are laid down.⁴

120. For the Sūdras is [laid] down the service of the twice-born [as the chief duty], or if he cannot thereby earn his livelihood he may become a trader; or studying the benefit of the twice-born, he may subsist by various mechanical arts.⁵

121. He should be attached to his wife, should be pure [internally and externally], maintain those who depend on him for support, and perform the Śrādhā ceremonies. He should not neglect [the performance of] the five sacrifices, making use of the Mantra 'Namah'.⁶ 20

122. Non-killing, truth, non-stealing, purity, restraint of the senses, giving [alms], restraining the [passions or the] mind, mercy, forgiveness of injuries,—these are the means of attaining virtue.⁷

123. Let him practise real and not assumed behaviour, worthy of his age, intellect, wealth, speech, acquaintance with the science [of acquiring the chief ends of humanity],⁸ and his profession or calling.

124. The twice-born who has got food sufficient to last for more than three years may drink the Soma juice.⁹ He who has a year's food in store, let him perform the ceremonies antecedent to a Soma sacrifice. 30

125. The Soma sacrifice is to be performed once a year, the pāśu (goat) sacrifice is to be made half-yearly at each equinox; the Āgrāyana sacrifice [at the harvest-time], and the *Chāturmāsya*s also.

² Manu ch. iv., vv. 138, 139.

³ Vij. says that for the Anuloma classes, also these rites are ordained. Manu ch. x., vv. 75, 83.

⁴ See note to v. 118.

⁵ See note to v. 118.

⁶ Vij. says that some say that the verse "देवताभ्यः पितृभ्यश्च महायोगिभ्य एव च ॥ नमस्वाङ्गायै स्वधायै नित्यमेव नमोनमः" should be repeated; others that simply नमः should be said. 40

⁷ These are duties common to all men. Manu ch. vi., v. 92. ⁸ Added by Vij.

⁹ Vij. says for three years, or for upwards of three years. Drinking Soma juice means performing the Soma sacrifice. He who has not sufficient means should not incur sin by "drinking the Soma."

126. When these sacrifices are not probable, the twice-born should perform the Vaisvânari sacrifice. A sacrifice which is to be performed for the attainment of a certain object, should not be performed with insufficient means.

127. He who performs a sacrifice by begging money of a Śūdra becomes a *Chāṇḍāla*¹; he who does not give away all that has been obtained for sacrifices, becomes a vulture or a crow.²

128. Let the kuśūla-dhānya, the kumbhī-dhānya, the tryāhika and the *asvastana*³ householder⁴ subsist by gleaning grains or ears of 10 corn: they are to be preferred in their inverted order.

DUTIES OF A STUDENT.

129. Let him not wish for wealth which will prevent his Vedic study; nor from here and there⁵; nor from reprehensible occupations. Let him be also cheerful.

130. If he is afflicted by hunger, let him seek money from a king, a disciple, or from a person for whom he is sacrificing. Let him avoid hypocrites, doubters, heretics, and cheats.⁶

131. He should wear white garments, should clip the hair on the head and face, and the nails, he should be clean, should not eat in the 20 presence of his wife⁷; nor should he eat with a single cloth on, nor eat standing.⁸

132. He should run no risk,⁹ should not without a cause speak bitterly, or what is injurious, or untrue.¹⁰ He should not steal, nor live by forbidden interest.¹¹

² Vij. says for a hundred years.

⁵ That is from anybody who may wish to give. Vij. says "from persons whose character is not known." It clearly appears that a gift is not to be accepted until the character of the giver is known.

⁶ Vij. explains heretics as those who reject the ways accepted by the learned and the aged.

For the meaning of a Bakavṛitti (cheating like a crane) see Manu ch. iv., v. 196.

Compare further Manu ch. iv., v. 192.

⁷ The reason assigned by Vij. is that her presence while eating would make their progeny weak.

40 ⁸ See Manu ch. iv., vv. 35, 43.

⁹ Vij. : "acts involving risk to life."

¹⁰ Manu ch. iv., v. 138.

¹¹ Vij. defines vārdhushī as "one living by lending at forbidden interest."

183. He should wear gold,¹ and the sacred thread, carry a stick and a water-pot²; [and] should move round the god, the earth, the cow, the Bráhmaṇa and trees.³

184. He should not commit nuisance in a river, shade, a road, cattle shed, water, and ashes; nor facing fire, the sun, the cow, the moon, [at the time of] the twilight, water, a woman, or the twice-born.⁴

185. He should not look at the sun, a naked woman, or a woman who has just given up sexual intercourse; nor at urine or ordure; nor should he look at the *Rahu*⁵ and stars⁶ when unclean.

186. In the rainfall uttering the whole Mantra [commencing with] 10 Ayam me Vajrah (this is my sword), he should not go [about] unclothed, nor should he [unclothed] sleep with the head towards the west.⁷

187. He should not throw into water [or fire], spittle, blood, ordure, urine, and semen. He should not heat his feet over the fire, nor should he leap over fire.⁸

188. He should not drink water by the hollow of his hand, nor should he awaken a person sleeping. He should not play with the dice or by unrighteous acts⁹; nor should he sleep with a dead body.

189. He should avoid a prohibited act, the smoke from a [burning] 20 corpse, and crossing a river [by swimming]. He should not sit on hair, ashes, husk, charcoal, and a potsherd.¹⁰

140. He should not report a drinking cow,¹¹ nor should he in any place enter by an improper entrance. He should not receive [anything] from an avaricious king transgressing the scriptures.¹²

141. As regards receiving [a gift] from a butcher, an oilman, a vintner, a prostitute, and a king, each of these is ten times more wicked than the one preceding.¹³

¹ Manu ch. iv., v. 36: the gold would appear to be ornaments of the ears as stated in the Vīramitrodaya: and such is the current usage. 30

⁹ Vij. renders वृद्ध, by forbidden acts such as leaping over a cow. But the Vīr makes it to mean irreligious persons, and Manu supports him (see ch. iv., v. 79.) 40

142. When herbs have grown, the commencement of the studies of Vedas [should take place] on the 15th day of Śravaṇa, or [a day with] the lunar asterism of Śravaṇa, or on the fifth day of Śravaṇa with the lunar asterism of Hasta.¹

143. Outside [the village] he should at a watery place relinquish the study of the Vedas according to ceremonies on the 8th day of [the dark fortnight of] Pauṣa,² or [another day of that month with] the lunar asterism of Rohiṇi.³

144. In the case of the death of a pupil, a sacrificer, a preceptor and 10 a Bandhu, the [annual] beginning and relinquishing the studies of the Vedas, and in case of the death of a Śrotriya of one's own Sakhā (redaction,) he should observe three holidays [each time].⁴

145. He should observe a holiday [day and night] when there is thunder at twilight, when there is an atmospheric disturbance or an earthquake, when there is a fall of meteors, when he has finished the Vedas [mantra or Brāhmaṇa], or when he has studied the Āraṇyaka.

146. [He should observe a holiday] on the fifteenth, fourteenth, and eighth [days of a fortnight], on the day of an eclipse of the sun or moon, at the junction of two seasons, or after having dined at or accepted 20 [a gift at] a Śrāddha.

147. [He should not study] a whole day and night when a beast, a frog, a mungoose, a dog, a serpent, a cat, or a mouse passes [between him and his preceptors,] or when Indra's standard is raised or taken down.

148. [He should not study] when the voice or sound of a dog, a jackal, an ass, an owl, the [chanting of the] Sāma [Veda], the sound of a bamboo⁵ are being heard, or in the vicinity of ordure, a corpse, a Śūdra, an Antya, a burning ground, or an apostate.

149. [He should not study] in an impure country, when he himself is impure, during thunder and the flashes of lightning, when his 30 hands are wet, when he is in water, at midnight after dinner [and] when high wind is blowing.

150. [He should not study] during the fall of dust, oppressive heat in all directions, twilight, the mist, the time of danger,⁶ whilst running, whilst nasty smell is issuing, and when a respectable man has come to his house.

¹ Vij and the Vir. say that when owing to drought or otherwise herbs have not grown, the commencement of the studies is to be made on that day in the month of Bhādrapada, when the moon is with the asterism Śravaṇa (Aquilæ) or on the full moonday of Bhādrapada. Compare Manu ch. iv., v. 95.

40 ² Generally corresponds to December and January.

³ Tauri, Aldeharan. Compare Manu ch. iv., v. 96.

⁴ For the several holidays in the study of the Vedas see Manu ch. iv., vv. 97—127.

⁵ Vir. applies this to the Vina, a guitar with 7 strings.

⁶ Vij. says the danger here meant is that arising from the king or robbers.

151. [He should not study] while riding an ass, a camel, an elephant, a carriage, while embarked on a boat, while on a tree, or waste ground, or a desert. These thirty-seven occasions [the wise] understand to be respites from study for the time [while those things are happening].

152. He should not cross the shadow of a god, a Ritvij (sacrificer), a Snátaka, (he who has finished his study of the Vedas), the preceptor, the king, and a woman other than his wife; nor [should he cross] blood, ordure, urine, spittle, unguents, &c.¹

153. He should never show disrespect to the Bráhmaṇa, the cobra, the king, and to himself; he should seek wealth until death²; he 10 should not touch any one to the quick.³

154. He should throw the remnant of the eaten food, ordure, urine, and water of the feet far away [from his house]. He should practise ordinances prescribed by the Vedas and Smṛitis.⁴

155. He should not touch, while impure⁵ or with his feet, the cow, the Bráhmaṇa, fire, and food; nor should he revile or strike them. He may chastise his son and pupil.⁶

156. He should strenuously practise ordinances in deed, mind, and word; but he should not practise that which though ordained is rejected by the people, and can therefore not lead to [the acquisition of] 20 heaven.

157—158. With the mother, father, guests, brothers [including the non-uterine], women with their husbands living,⁷ persons connected by marriage, maternal uncles, the old,⁸ the young, the sick, the preceptor, physicians, the dependents, and relations [maternal and paternal] [157],

[With] the sacrificer, the family priest, one's child, wife, slaves, and the uterine⁹ brothers, the householder should avoid discussion; [for thereby] he will win the [future] worlds. [158].¹⁰

² The Vír. says this desire for prosperity should cease with the end of the second order. 30

³ Compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 135, 137.

⁴ Compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 151, 155.

⁵ The word is utsṛṣṭa which literally means unwashed after meals, but the Mit. and the Vír. both take it in an extended sense here.

⁶ Compare Manu ch. iv., v. 164.

⁷ Vīj. has explained the word ṁṁṁ as has been rendered above. The Vír. explains it to mean a sister or the like.

⁸ The Vír. says a śāl is a boy under sixteen years of age, and a śū is one over 40 seventy years.

⁹ सन्तान: is explained by Vīj. as uterine brothers, and by the Vír. as Sapiṇḍas.

¹⁰ Compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 169—171.

159. He should not bathe in another's water without having removed [from its bottom] five lumps of clay. He should bathe in a river,¹ a natural pool, a lake,² or a mountain-spring.³

160. He should avoid another's bed, seat, garden or house without permission. He should not, except in distress, eat the food of one who is without the [domestic] fire.⁴

161—165. Of a miser,⁵ a person under restraint, a thief, an impotent person, a person appearing on the stage, a bamboo-cutter, a person practising base acts, a person living upon usury, a prostitute,
10 and a sacrificer for various persons⁶ [161],

Of a physician, a person diseased, a person enraged, an unhaste woman, an intoxicated person, an enemy, a bloody person, a person of a savage disposition, an outcast, an apostate,⁷ an impostor, and one eating the remains of eaten food [162],

Of a wayward⁸ woman, a goldsmith, an effeminate person, a village sacrificer, a seller of arms, a blacksmith, a tailor, and a keeper of dogs⁹ [163],

Of a wicked person, a king, a dyer, an ungrateful person, a butcher, a washerman, a vintner, and a person living in his house with the 20 paramour of his wife [164],

Of a backbiter, a mendacious person, an oilman,¹⁰ a bard, and a seller of the Soma-juice,—he should not receive food.¹¹ [165.]

166. Among the Śūdras, the slave, the cow-keeper, the ancestral friend, the co-cultivator, the barber, are persons of whom he may eat food; [so may food be taken from] one who has surrendered himself [in body, mind and soul].

¹ The Vīr. defines a नदी as a body of water that flows for 8,000 dhanush (a measure equal to four cubits).

30 ² The same authority notices a reading of गङ्गा instead, which he defines to be a body of standing water over 1,000 dhanush.

³ Compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 201, 203.

⁴ Compare Manu ch. iv., v. 202.

⁵ कदर्य is thus defined by Devala :—आत्मानं धर्मेकृत्यं च पुनर्दारांश्च पीडयेत्। लोभाच्च पितरौ भृत्यान्श्च कदर्य इति स्मृतः ॥ “He is declared to be a kadarya (miser) who out of covetousness pinches himself, his religious performances, son, wife, parents, and servants.”

⁶ The Vīr. unlike Vij. and Sulapāṇi considers गणदीक्षिणाम् to be a copulative compound, गण meaning the joint feast by several and दीक्षिन् sacrificer. Vij. says the compound means a sacrificer for many.

40 ⁷ See supra p. 165, v. 38.

⁸ The Vīr. adopts the alternative interpretation of this word suggested by Vij., viz., a woman without a husband or issue.

⁹ The Vīr. applies this word to a hunter who like a dog lives by hunting.

¹⁰ Vīr. says it means a cartman.

¹¹ With the above five verses compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 205—223.

THINGS FIT AND UNFIT TO BE EATEN.

167—168. Food not given with due respect, improper flesh,¹ food filled with hair and worms, sour food, stale food, offals, food touched by a dog, food on which the sight of an outcast is cast [167],

Food touched by a woman in her monthly course,² food publicly offered,³ food given by one not an owner,⁴ food smelt by a cow, food eaten by a bird, and food voluntarily touched by the foot, he should not accept.⁵ [168.]

169. Unctuous food, though stale and kept long, is fit for use ; so also is unctuous food made of wheat, barley and the transformations of the 10 cow's milk.

170—175. He should abstain from the milk of a cow which is in season,⁶ which is within ten days from its delivery, or which is without its calf ; from the milk of a camel or animal with uncloven hoofs, of a woman, of a wild animal, and of a sheep [170],

From offerings prepared for deities and sacrifices, the sigru pod, red gums exuding from trees, gums issuing from incisions in trees, unhallowed flesh, herbs growing on filth and mushrooms [171],

From [the flesh of] carnivorous birds, the Ohātaka, the parrot, the pecking birds, the Tittibha [bird], the Indian crane, animals with 20⁺ uncloven hoofs, the swan, and all the domestic fowls [172],

From [the flesh of] the heron, the water fowl, the Ohakravāka bird, the Balāka (a species of the crane), the Baka (another species of the crane), the tearing birds⁷ ; [from the following kinds of dishes, viz. :] the Krisara, samyāva, pāyasa, apūpa, and śashkuli without first presenting them to the gods [173],

From [the flesh of] the sparrow, the jackdaw, the osprey, the wild cock, the web-footed birds, the wag-tail, and unknown birds and quadrupeds [174], ¹ दृष्टान्त is explained by Vij and the Vīr. to be flesh, no portion of which has 30 been dedicated to God or to the manes.

² Vij. says a woman in her monthly course is here used as illustrative of a Chāṇḍāla and the like.

³ That food which a crier takes with him about the town, and invites mendicants to partake of.

⁵ Compare Manu ch. iv., vv. 207—209, 211—213.

⁶ Vij. adds a सन्धिणी may also mean a cow that has ceased to give milk regularly, or 40 one that suckles another calf.

⁷ Such as chakora.

From [the flesh of] the blue jays, the red-footed birds, flesh from a butcher, dry flesh, and fish. Having voluntarily eaten these, he should fast three days and nights.¹ [175]

176. Having eaten an onion, the domestic boar, a mushroom, the domestic cock, garlic, and turnip (or red garlic), he should observe the Chândrâyana [penance].²

177—178. Of the five clawed animals, the porcupine, the lizard, the tortoise, the Sallaka (a species of the porcupine), and the hare, and of the fish, the Simhatuṇḍaka and the rohita,³ [177]

- 10 So also the Pāhīna, the Rājiva, and the Sashalka,⁴ are fit for use by the twice-born. Hear now about the injunction as to the eating and abstaining from flesh. [178.]

179. He who eats flesh for saving life, or at the performance of a Śradhā, he who eats sacrificial flesh, or flesh for gratifying a Brāhmaṇa after having worshipped the gods and the manes with it, incurs no sin.⁵

180. That evil doer who kills a beast unconformably to the prescribed mode shall dwell in awful hell as many days as there may be hair [on the body] of that beast.⁶

181. By abstinence from flesh a Brāhmaṇa accomplishes all his 20 desires, and obtains the fruit of a horse-sacrifice. Even living in the house he becomes a muni (a sage).

PURIFICATION OF THINGS.

182—183. Of a golden or silver vessel, of a shell, of a sacrificial vessel, of a ladle, of a stone, of vegetable, cords, root, fruit, cloth, bamboo-work, hide [182],

Of sacrificial vessels like chamasa, the purification is effected by water. Of a charu (a vessel in which rice is cooked), of a śruci (a sacrificial vessel), of śruva (a Soma-ladle), of oil-vessels, [the purification is effected] by warm water.⁷ [183.]

- 30 184. [So also] of a sp̥h̥ya (a sacrificial implement), a winnowing basket, a deer's skin, corn, a wooden pestle, a wooden mortar, a cart. Of collected corn and cloth in large quantity, sprinkling of water [is the purification].

185. Wood, horns and bones [are purified] by paring off [their surface]; so are vessels made of fruit-shells by brushing with cows' hair, and sacrificial vessels in a sacrifice by the sprinkling of water by the hand.

¹ For the prohibited kinds of flesh, see Manu ch. v., vv. 8-16.

⁶ Compare Manu ch. v., vv. 26, 27.

⁷ Compare Manu ch. v, vv. 112, 116, 117.

186. A camlet or a silken cloth is purified by salt-carth, water and cow-urine; sackcloth by the Bilva fruit [with water and cow-urine]; and a shawl by soap-berries [with water and cow-urine].

187. So is a kshauma (linen cloth) by white mustard seeds [with water and cow-urine]; an earthen vessel by being baked again. The hand of an artisan is pure; so is an article of sale, alms, and the mouth of a female.

188. The purification of the ground takes place by cleansing, by burning, by the lapse of time, by the walking of the cow, by the sprinkling of water, by digging and by smearing. The house is purified 10 by cleansing and smearing.¹

189. Food being smelt by a cow or sullied by hair, flies or worms, water, ashes, or earth should be thrown on it for its purification.

190. The purification of lead, tin, and copper is by salt, tamarind, and water; that of bell-metal and iron by ashes and water, and that of a fluid by pouring² [it into a pot to overflowing].

191. Of that which is besmeared with an unclean thing, the purification is by earth and water, because they remove the smell; what is declared to be pure by the speech [of a Brūhmaṇa], what is cleansed by water, and what is not known [to be impure] is always pure 20

192. Water which is as much as is sufficient to quench the thirst of a cow, which is in its natural state, and which is on the ground is pure; so is flesh dropped by a dog, a Chāṇḍāla, and carnivorous [birds], &c.

193. A ray of light, fire, dust, shade, a cow, a horse, the earth, wind, drops of water, a fly touching, and the calf of a cow when sucking are pure.

194. The goat and the horse are pure at the mouth; the cow is not pure at the mouth; the filthy matters issuing from the body of man are not [pure]. The roads become pure by the rays of the sun and moon, and by the wind. 30

195. Drops or particles issuing from the mouth are pure; so are drops of sipped water. The hairs on the face entering the mouth are pure. So also does a person become pure by throwing out what is clung to his teeth.

196. Having bathed, drunk, sneezed, coughed, slept, eaten, ridden in a carriage, or put on clothes, a man should rinse the mouth again though he had rinsed it before.

197. The filth and water on the road touched by a Chāṇḍāla, a horse, or a cow, and houses built of burnt bricks become pure by the wind only.³ 40

² Vij. says that fluids below a prastha (a certain measure) cannot be purified, and must be thrown away.

³ For the above verses on purification of things, see Manu ch. v, vv. 111—116.

GIFTS.

198. Brahmá having practised austerities created the Bráhmaṇas for the preservation of the Vedas, for the satisfaction of the gods and manes, and for the protection of righteousness.

199. The Bráhmaṇas are the heads of all [the three last classes]. Of them, those that are versed in the study of the Vedas [are superior]. Among them those who practise observances are superior, and among the latter those who have the knowledge of the soul are excellent.

200. Fitness [to receive in charity] does not arise by mere learning or austerities. Where observance and these two dwell, that is declared to be the fit recipient [of charity].

201. A cow, land, sesamum, gold, &c. should be given with due celebration to a deserving [Bráhmaṇa]. A learned man desiring his welfare, should give nothing to one who is undeserving.

202. A gift should not be accepted by one who is destitute of learning and austerities. If he accepts it, he leads the giver and himself to hell.

203. Every day something should be given to a deserving person ; more so on special occasions.¹ A person begged of should also give with due faith according to his means.

204. A good milch cow, whose horns are covered with gold and hoofs with silver, which is covered with cloth and a vessel of bell-metal,² should be given with dakshiná (a money present).

205. The giver of her attains heaven for as many years as there are hairs [on her body]. If the cow be a kapilá, he saves himself and six ancestors of his.

206. If she be two-faced,³ the giver of her, giving according to the aforementioned method, attains heaven for as many years as there are hairs on her body and on her calf.

207. While the two legs and the face of her young one appear from 30 within her womb,⁴ and while she is not delivered of the foetus, a cow is to be considered as the earth.⁵

208. Having somehow given a cow, whether giving milk or not, which is free from disease, and is not emaciated, the giver is honoured in heaven.

209. The affording relief to a fatigued [guest], the service of a sick man, the honouring of the gods, the washing the feet,⁶ and sweeping the remains of food eaten by a twice-born, are each like the giving of a cow.

¹ Such as those of an eclipse and the like.

² The Vir. says this vessel is the milking pot.

40 ³ For the meaning of this, see the following verse.

⁴ The first part of this verse explains what is meant by a double-faced cow.

⁵ Meaning that the gift of a cow in such a state produces the merit of a gift of the earth.

⁶ Vj. adds 'of a twice-born who is either of an equal or superior rank.'

210. Having given land, lamps, food, cloth, water, sesamum, clarified butter, an asylum to travellers, something to help one in marriage [such as a girl or the like], gold, or a strong bull, he is honoured in heaven.

211. Having given a house, corn, protection, shoes, an umbrella, a garland, an ointment, a conveyance, a tree, a desired thing, or a bed, he shall become extremely happy.

212. The knowledge of Brahman is full of all virtue, for it is superior to the gifts [of things]. He who imparts it, enjoys the heaven of the Brahmá without [the fear of] a fall. 10

213. He who being able to accept, does not accept a gift, attains the several worlds which the charitably disposed [attain by their gifts].

214. The kúśa grass, vegetable, milk, fish, perfumes, a flower, curds, land, flesh, a bed, a seat, fried barley, and water should not be rejected [when offered].

215. These are fit to be accepted even of an evil-doer, except a prostitute, an impotent person, an outcast, and an enemy, if offered without solicitation.

216. For honouring the gods and guests, for the living of his preceptor, his dependents [such as the wife and children], and others, and 20 for his own maintenance, he should accept [a gift] from any one.¹

End of the chapter on 'Gifts.'

OBLATIONS TO THE MANES.

217—218. The new moon's day, the eighth day after full moon,² addition [to the family by birth], the second fortnight of the month, the two solstitial days, [the days when] dainties [enjoined for a śrāddha ceremony] and a worthy *Bráhma*n [are got], the equinoxes [217],

A vyatipáta, the gajachchháya,³ the eclipse of the sun and moon, and, whenever the Śrāddha performer chooses;—these are the times 30 prescribed for the performance of a Śrāddha.⁴ [218.]

² Aśviniyana mentions four *Aśtami*s (eight lunar days) in the year as called *Aśtaka*s, viz., the eight lunar days of the dark fortnight in the seasons of Hemanta and Śiśira, or the months of *Mārgaśrī*ṣa, Pausha, Māgha, and Phālguna.

³ These are particular conjunctions of time.

⁴ The word Śrāddha literally means that food which is offered out of faith. Compare Manu vv. 122, 123.

219—221. Young men who have studied all the Vedas, a young Śrotriya, a youth knowing the Brahman, a young person knowing the meaning of the Vedas, a young person acquainted with the Jyeshtha Sāma (a particular portion of the Sāma Veda), Trimadhū (three richs from the Rigveda), or Trisuparna (particular Richs that occur in the Yajurveda Āraṇyaka),¹ [219]

A sister's son, a sacrificer, a son-in-law, he for whom one performs a sacrifice, the father-in-law, a mother's brother, a Triṇāchiketa,² a daughter's son, a pupil, a relation, a kinsman,³ [220]

- 10 Persons devoted to observance, persons devoted to austerities, those who worship five fires, a Brahmachārin (one of the first order), persons devoted to their father and mother,—these are Brāhmaṇas fit for [invitation to] a Śrāddha.⁴ [221.]

222—224. A diseased Brāhmaṇa, a Brāhmaṇa with a deficient or superfluous limb, a Brāhmaṇa with one eye,⁵ a Pannarbhava (one born of a twice-married woman), an Avalāṇa (one who has violated his celibacy), a Kuṇḍa (a son born of adultery during the lifetime of the father), and a Golaka, (a son of a widow unmarried), one with contracted nails, one with black teeth, [222]

- 20 A teacher for fees,⁶ an impotent person, the defiler of a damsel, a person of bad repute, the betrayer of a friend, a backbiter, the seller of the soma, and a parivindaka (one married before his elder brother) [223],

The forsaker of his father, mother, or preceptor,⁷ one eating of a Kuṇḍa,⁸ one born of an apostate, the husband of a twice-married woman, a thief, and a non-observer of the precepts of the Śāstras are disqualified [for the Śrāddha]. [224.]⁹

² The reciter of triṇāchiketa, which is that portion of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa which consists of three Anuvakas, and contains the story of Nāchiketa.

³ The Brāhmaṇas mentioned in this verse are middling for a Śrāddha.

⁴ These are inferior Brāhmaṇas for a Śrāddha. Compare Manu ch. iii., vv. 128—137, 143, 147, 148, 183—186.

⁵ Illustrative of persons totally blind, deaf, bald, &c. according to Vij.

The following is the translation of a verse found here in some MSS. :—

⁶ One entirely naked, one very hungry, one having white leprosy, one with a diseased productive organ, one afflicted with a disease, one with an evil tongue, one tending [cows, &c.] and [a subordinate royal] servant, and those who subsist by trading and weapons.

40 ⁶ Vij. here includes the pupil too who studies by paying regular fees to the teacher.

⁷ Vij. includes the forsaker of a wife here.

⁹ Compare Manu ch. iii., vv. 149—181.

225. Well composed and pure, he should invite Brāhmaṇas on the previous day, who should be under restraint as regards the action of the mind, the speech, and the body.

226. In the afternoon,¹ having honoured them after their arrival with hospitable words, with his hands pure he should seat them on seats after they have sipped water.

227. [The Brāhmaṇas to be invited should be of] an even number, according to [the performer's] means, at a Daiya Śrāddha (an offering to God), and an uneven number at a Pitrya Śrāddha (an offering to the manes), in a covered and pure place inclining towards the south.² 10

228. At a Daiya Śrāddha, two Brāhmaṇas should sit facing the east; at a Pitrya Śrāddha, the three should sit facing the north; or there may be only one [at each of those Śrāddhas]. The same rule holds in the case of a Śrāddha (oblation) to the mother's ancestors. The [worship of the] Viśve Deva [in these two cases] may be either single or [separate].³

229. Having poured water into their hands, and also given kūśas for a seat, he should with their permission invoke the Viśvedevas, with the rich beginning ' Viśvedevāsah.'

230—233. Then having scattered barley-grains on the ground, and 20 poured water with the rich beginning with ' Sannodevi' in a vessel purified with kūśa grass, and then having thrown therein barley-grains with the formula [beginning with] ' yavosi' [230],

He should pour argha (water) into their hands with the formula [beginning with] Yādīvyā. Having given water, unguent, flowers, incense, a lamp [231],

And having given a garment and water for washing hands; then having thrown the sacred thread on the right shoulder, having made a revolution to the manes from the left [232],

Having given doubled kūśa grass, and having with their [i. e. Brāhma- 30 nas'] permission invoked [the manes] with the rich [beginning with] ' Uśantastubh,' he should mutter [the mantra beginning with] ' Ayan-tunah.' [233.]

234—242. Sesamum grains should be substituted for barley-grains; he should make oblations, &c. as before. Having offered water [into their hands], he should carefully collect it in a vessel [234],

And keep the vessel turned downwards [with the mantra beginning with] Pitribhyah sthānamasi (thou art the abode of the manes, &c.).⁴ Having taken boiled rice mixed with ghee, having requested permission of [the Brāhmaṇas] to offer a sacrifice to the fire [235], 40

¹ The word is अत्रिह, which is the fourth of the five divisions of the day.

² Compare Manu ch. iii., vv. 125, 206.

³ Compare Manu ch. iii., v. 208.

⁴ Compare Manu ch. iii., v. 210.

Being commanded (by them) 'Do,' and having given oblations to fire as in the Pitriyajña (oblation to the manes), he should carefully distribute the remains of them into vessels [236]

Procured according to his means, especially silver ones.¹ Having placed the boiled rice in vessels, and having consecrated them with [the formula beginning with] 'Prithivī Pātram' [237],

He should place the thumb of the Brāhmaṇas on it with [the mantra beginning with] "Idam Viṣṇu" (this is Viṣṇu, &c.). Having muttered the gāyatrī with the vyāhritis,² together with the three richs
10 [beginning with] "Madhuvātāh" [238],

He should address them—'[eat] as you please'; and they on their part should eat without uttering a word. Without anger, without bustle, he should serve them with the desired food and havishya (objects of oblation)³ [239],

Till their gratification; having meanwhile muttered holy texts⁴ and the former prayers. After having asked [the Brāhmaṇas] with food in his hand if they are satisfied, and having obtained their permission [with regard to the use of the] remainder [240],

He should spread the remaining food on the ground, giving water 20 once [into the hands of each Brāhmaṇa]. Having taken all the boiled rice mixed with sesamum, he should with his face to the south [241], Offer rice balls [to the manes] near the remains of the food [eaten by the Brāhmaṇas] as in the pitriyajña (oblations to the fathers).

[The piṇḍas (balls) should be made as big as the mouth of a child of two years can contain; and should be offered on the ground separately].⁵

Thus [he should give rice-balls] even to the manes on the maternal side.⁶ Then he should give water [to Brāhmaṇas] to sip.⁷ [242.]

243. Then he should cause a Svastivāchya (a request to the Brāhmaṇas to pronounce a benediction), and the Akshayyodaka (water which causes the oblation to be everlasting) to be made. Having given presents [to the Brāhmaṇas] according to his means, he should request permission to hear Svadhā repeated.

² See supra p. 162, verse 15 and the note.

³ See for the list of the different kinds of havishya, Manu ch. iii., vv. 256, 257.

⁴ See Manu ch. iii., v. 232.

⁵ The portion within the brackets is the translation of a verse found in the Bombay lithographed edition A of Yājñavalkya.

40 ⁶ Compare Manu ch. iii., vv. 215, 216.

⁷ Compare Manu ch. iii., v. 218.

244. And being commanded by those Bráhmaṇas to do so, he should say—'let Svadhá be pronounced on the manes.' Then they should pronounce—'let svadhá be.' It being pronounced, he should sprinkle water on the ground.

245—246. And when the performer of the oblation has said—'Let Viśvedevas be pleased,' [and when] the Bráhmaṇas have replied, he should mutter [the following]:—'Let givers increase in our family; let our family increase; let the Vedas prosper [245];

Let our faith not vanish, and let us have much to give.' Having said thus, having spoken sweet words, and fallen [at the feet of the 10 Bráhmaṇas], he should cause the Visarjana [sending away of the manes, etc.] [246.]

247—248. He should with a delighted heart dismiss them, beginning with the father and with the formula [commencing with] Váje. Having turned up the arghapátra (vessel for water), in which the water [dropping from the hands of the Bráhmaṇas] was collected before [247],

He should dismiss the Bráhmaṇas. Having followed them [to some distance], and returned after going round them, he should eat the remnant of the food eaten by the manes. [248.]

249—250. He and the Bráhmaṇas should abstain from sexual 20 intercourse that night. In this same way he should offer oblations to the manes in the vridhí and Nándi [ceremonies], with [the difference that] the revolution [is to be from left to right] [249],

[With] rice-balls mixed with curds, and the jujube fruit; [all] the ceremonies [should be performed] with yava (barley-grains). In an ekoddishṭa oblation, there is no oblation to the gods, and there is only one vessel for argha (sacred water) and pavitraka (a braid of kúśa grass.) [250.]

251—252. There is [further] no áváhana (invocation of the manes) and agnaukarāṇa (oblation to the fire), and the sacred thread should 30 be on the right shoulder. [The performer of the Ekoddishṭa] has further to say 'upatishṭhatám' (stand up) instead of Akshayya (everlasting), [which is done in the aforementioned oblations]. At the time of dismissing the Bráhmaṇas [251],

He should say 'be satisfied,' and they [should answer] 'we are satisfied.' For the preparation of argha he should have four vessels. [252.]

253. [Those vessels should] contain wet sandal-powder, water, and sesamum; the water in the vessel for the deceased should be poured into the vessels sacred to the manes with the two formulas [beginning 40 with] Yesamannah. He should do the rest as before.

254—256. This [is called] Sapindīkaraṇa (associating the deceased with the manes). The ekoddishṭa ceremony [should be performed] even for a deceased female. Even when Sapīṇḍīkaraṇa of the deceased has taken place within a year [from his death] [254],

The food and the pot of water should be given [to a Brāhmaṇa] for a year. Every month for a year, a Śrāddha should be performed on the [lunar] day of death [255];

Similarly [after that, once] every year. The first [Śrāddha] is to be performed on the eleventh day. He should offer the piṇḍās (balls) to a cow, sheep, or a Brāhmaṇa, or throw them into fire or water, [256].

- 10 257—260. He should not remove the remains of the food eaten [by Brāhmaṇas] in their presence. The manes are satisfied by haviṣhya (food fit for sacrifice) for a month; by food mixed with milk for a year [257];

And by the flesh of fish, the red deer, ram, bird, sheep, spotted deer, black deer, antelope, wild boar and hare respectively¹ [258],

For a period progressively increasing by a month. He who offers [to the manes] the flesh of a rhinoceros or of the Mahāsalka (a kind of fish), or honey, or the food of the sages [259],

- Or of the red sheep, or a vegetable, or the flesh of an old white sheep, 20 or makes any offerings [to the manes] at Gayā attains eternal pleasures. [260.]

261—263. So also he who gives on the Varshātrayodaśī (the fourteenth day of the dark fortnight of Bhādrapada), especially when the lunar asterism on that day is maghā. A [worthy] daughter, son-in-law, beasts,² good sons [261],

[Success in] a game, husbandry and commerce, whole-hoofed and cloven-hoofed beasts, sons shining with learning, gold and silver with other [i. e. base] metals [262],

- Superiority over his tribe are together with all desired objects 30 obtained by him, who offers oblations on all the lunar days [of the fortnight]³ save the fourteenth respectively.⁴ [263.]

264—271. On that day [viz., the fourteenth,] oblations are offered to those who are killed by weapons. Heaven, offspring, glory, valour, crop, strength [264],

Sons, superiority, good luck, prosperity, leadership, good, unresisted authority, commerce, and the like [265],

Health, fame, freedom from sorrow, beatitude, wealth, [knowledge of] the Vedas, success in medical treatment, any metal except gold and silver, also cows, goat, sheep [266],

40 ¹ Compare Manu ch. iii., vv. 237, 272.

² Such as the goats and the like.

³ The Vīr. says these lunar days should be those of the dark fortnight.

⁴ Compare Manu ch. iii., v. 276.

Horses and long life—all these objects he obtains, who duly performs the Śrāddha on the different asterisms beginning with Kṛttikā and ending with *Bharanī*¹ [respectively] [267],

With faith and belief and without arrogance and envy. The manes are represented by the sons of Vasu, Rudra, and Aditi, who are the real gods in a Śrāddha [268],

And are satisfied by a Śrāddha [offered] by the mortals. Life, progeny, wealth, learning, heaven, salvation, happiness [269],

And also a kingdom is given to men by the manes when satisfied.

WORSHIP OF GAṆAPATI.

For the accomplishment of obstructions, Vināyaka (Gaṇeśa) was constituted [270]

The head of the Gaṇas by Rudra (Śiva), Brahmā and [Viṣṇu]. Hear the description of one who is possessed by him [i. e., Vināyaka]. [271.]

272. In dreams he enters the depths of water, and sees head-shaved persons, and mounts carnivorous animals covered with red garments.

273. He [in dreams] sees himself in the midst of chāṇḍālas, asses and camels. Whilst going, he fancies himself followed by others.²

274. One, who has been possessed by him, becomes absent in mind, so fails in his undertakings, is dejected without cause, and will not get his kingdom even though he be born of a king.

275. [When so possessed], a damsel does not obtain a husband, a woman does not conceive or bear children; a Śrotriya does not obtain preceptorship, and a pupil, learning.

276. Nor a merchant, profit; nor a husbandman, crop. His [i. e. of the individual possessed] bathing should be effected on an auspicious day according to the following ceremony.

277. [He should be] smeared with an ointment of white mustard with ghee, and should have his head smeared with sarvaśaulhi (an 80 assemblage of certain herbs)³ and various perfumes.

278—279. [He should then be] seated on the Bhadrāsana (blissful seat), and should have the Svasti (blessing) pronounced upon him by

² Vij. applies the latter hemistich of this verse to dreams, but the Vīr. disapproves of this interpretation. The latter has been followed in the above rendering.

³ Vij. explains the term सर्वौषधिः, thus:—

कुट्टं मांसी हरिद्रे द्वे मुराशौलेयचन्दनम् ।

वचाकपूरमुरतंच सर्वौषधिः प्रकीर्तिताः ॥ worthy Bráhmaṇas. [Having obtained] earth from the stable of horses and elephants, from an ant-hill, from the junction [of rivers], or from a lake [278],

Rochanā (a kind of yellow substance), perfumes, and guggula (a fragrant gum resin), he should throw them into waters which were brought by him in four vessels of the same colour from a lake. [279.]

280—285. Then the blissful seat¹ on the red leather of a bull should be spread. 'With the water whose vitality is thousand-fold, whose flow is hundred-fold, which was consecrated by the sages [280],

10 I sprinkle thee with that; may that purifying water purify thee. May King Varuṇa, the sun, and Bṛihaspati give thee prosperity [281];

And so may Indra and Váyu, and so the seven Rishis. Any awkwardness about thy hair, in the parting line of thy hair [on the crown], in thy head [282],

In thy forehead, in thy ears, in thy eyes, may always be destroyed by these waters.' When he has so bathed, mustard oil by means of a ladle made of the Udumbara tree (Ficus glomerata) [283],

Should be poured on the head with kūśa grass in the left hand [of the preceptor], as an offering made to Mita, Sammita, Śāla, Kaṭaṇ-20 kaṭa [284],

Kúshmāṇḍa, and Rájaputra,² with the word Svāhā added at the end of each. An offering [of boiled rice] should then be made in the names [of Gaṇapati abovementioned] with salutations. [285.]

286—289. Spreading kusās on all sides in a basket placed where four roads meet, he should give rice imperfectly unhusked, boiled rice mixed with sesamum flour [286],

Fish, raw and cooked flesh only of [the just mentioned] kind, a variegated flower, perfumes, also the liquor of three kinds [287],

A mūlaka (a radish), a pūruka (a meal-cake), or apūpa (a sort of 30 cake made of wheat), a string of Uṇḍoraka (a dish made of rice), rice mixed with curds, páyasa (preparation of milk), flour mixed with coarse sugar, and modakas (sweet balls) [288];

Having taken all these, and rested his head on the ground, he should then invoke Ambikā, the mother of Vináyaka [289].

290—294. Having presented her with offerings and a handful of dūrvās [grass], mustard and flowers, [a prayer should be made thus]:—
'Grant me, oh Goddess, beauty; grant me prosperity; [290]

'Grant me sons, grant me wealth, grant me all my desires.' Then clothed in white, garlanded with white flowers, and anointed with 40 unguents [291],

¹ The Bhadrāsana, says Vij., is a mat made of Bhadrāparṇi plant.

² The above are six names of Gaṇapati.

He should feed the Bráhmaṇas, and present them and also his preceptor with a pair of garments. By thus worshipping Vináyaka and the Grahas (planets) according to rule [292],

He earns the fruit of his acts and incomparable splendour. He who always renders worship to the sun and makes a tilaka (a golden or silver image) of him, or Skanda [293],

Or the great Gaṇapati shall give salvation.

PROPITIATORY RITE FOR GRAHAS (PLANETS).

Ho who is desirous of wealth or peace should offer a sacrifice to the graha (planets). [294.] 10

295—297. So should he who wishes rainfall, life, and strength; as also he who practises exorcism. The sun, the moon, the son of the earth [Mars], the son of Soma [Mercury], Jupiter [295], Venus, Saturn, Ráhu, and Ketu: these are declared to be the grahas (planets). Of copper, crystal, red sandal-wood, two of gold [296],

Silver, iron, lead, and bell-metal, the graha (images of planets) should be made respectively; or they should be represented in their own colours on cloth or on marked ground¹ with unguents. [297.]

298. They should then be presented with garments and flowers of their respective colours; as also with perfumes, bracelets, and incense. 20

299—304. He should also make oblations of boiled rice to every one of them, with their several formulas [in the following order commencing with] Ákrishṇena, Imam Deváh, Agnirmúrdhālivah kakut [299], Udbudhyasva, Brihaspate Atiyadaryah, Annátparisrutah [300], Sanno Devih, Kāṇḍát, and Ketum kriṇvan. Arka, Paláś, Khadira (Acacia Catechu), Apámarga, Pepul [301], Udumbara (Ficus Glomerata), Śamí, Dúrvá, and Kuśa are the samidhs (sticks to be offered in sacrifice) respectively [for the several planets]. To each of them should be sacrificed one hundred and eight 30 or twenty-eight [302],

Samidhs, wetted with honey and ghee, or curds and milk. Guḍaudana (food mixed with coarse sugar), páyasa (preparations of milk), havishya (food fit to be sacrificed), and śháshtika (paddy that is grown in sixty days) boiled in milk [303],

Rice mixed with curds, with ghee, with sesamum, with flesh, and chitránna (a dish of rice) should be respectively offered to Bráhmaṇas whom a wise man should feed in honour of the planets. [304.]

305—306. This should be done after properly honouring them according to the giver's power and means. A milch cow, a conch shell, a strong bull, gold, cloth, a horse [305],

A black cow, a weapon, and a sheep are declared to be the respective presents [in honour of the planets]. Whoever has any evil Graha should specially honour him [306].

307—311. Brahmá has bestowed on them [i.e. Grahas] a boon, viz., 'being honoured you will honour.' The rise and fall of monarchs, and the existence and non-existence of the world, are dependent upon 10 the Grahas [planets] [307];

They are, therefore, highly to be honoured.

THE DUTIES OF A KING.

A king should be very energetic, learned,¹ mindful of the past, subservient to the sages [308],

Modest, even-minded, of a noble family, truthful, pure, prompt in action, of powerful memory, abhorring the wicked, not carping [309],

Righteous, without a bad habit, talented, brave, skilled in concealing a secret, a concealer of his assailable points, skilled in the knowledge of self, polity [310],

20 Agriculture and trade, and the three (Rich, Yajush and Sáma Vedas). He should appoint talented, nobly descended, steady and blameless ministers.² [311.]

312—313. In administering the kingdom, he should first consult them, then the Bráhmaṇa,³ then himself. He should appoint a Purohita (family priest) who knows astrology, who is possessed of learning⁴ [312],

And who is skilled in polity, and the Atharva-Ángirasa (hymns of the Atharva Veda). He should without fail select Īitvijs for the performance of the Vedic and Smṛiti rites.⁵ [313.]

30 314. He should perform, according to the ritual, sacrifices with large presents. He should bestow on Bráhmaṇas comforts and various objects of wealth.

315—316. That which is given to the Bráhmaṇas is an inexhaustible treasure of kings.⁶ Being without a flow, without destruction, and untainted with expiations [315], ¹ So Vij. The Amarakośa gives स्थूलदय as a synonyme of वदान्य (a generous man).

² Compare Manu ch. vii., v. 54.

³ Vij. says the family priest is here meant.

⁴ Manu ch. vii., vv. 78, 79.

⁶ Ib. ch. vii., v. 82.

An oblation to a Bráhmaṇa is declared in this world to be superior to a sacrifice in fire. One should seek by fair means what is not obtained, and should preserve with care what is obtained.¹ [316.]

317. [He] should increase by honest means what is preserved, and should bestow what is increased on deserving recipients. A king having given land or a corody should commit it to writing.

318—320. For the information of future blessed kings, the king having recorded on a piece of cloth or copper-plate marked with his seal on its face [318],

His ancestors and himself, and the measurement of the gift (land) 10 and a description of its boundaries [319],

Should issue a perpetual edict bearing his hand and date.² He should settle in a country which is pleasant, favourable to beasts, affording means of subsistence, and containing jungles. [320.]

321—322. In such a country he should erect forts for the protection of his subjects' property and for his own safety.³ In every department he should employ clever, competent and blameless officers [321],

Well up in matters of receipts and disbursements. There is no higher duty for kings than earning in battles.⁴ [322.]

323—324. He should give that wealth to Bráhmaṇas and constant 20 security to his subjects. They who without turning their back [on their enemies] are killed in battles for the sake of land [323],

Go to heaven, if they do not use treacherous weapons, as do the Yogins (ascetics).⁵ Every step [that is taken in advance] when [one's fellow soldiers] are broken down and are retreating, is equal to [the performance of] a sacrifice. [324.]

325—326. The king obtains the merit of all those who die while retreating.⁶ Him who says 'I am thine,' who is impotent, who is without a weapon, who is [fighting] at the instigation of another [325],

Who has turned away [from the battlefield], or who is a spectator of 80 fighting, he should never kill.⁷ Protecting himself and his subjects, he should after rising personally inspect receipts and disbursements [326].

327. Then having attended to State business, he should after bathing eat at his pleasure. He should deposit into his coffers the gold brought by his agents.⁸

328. Then in council, he should see the spies, and send away his agents. Afterwards he should enjoy as he may like, or be in the company of his ministers.

³ Id. ch. vii., vv. 87—90.

⁷ Id. ch. vii., vv. 91—93.

⁵ Compare Manu ch. vii., v. 135.

⁶ Id. ch. vii., vv. 60—62, 81.

⁸ Id. ch. vii., vv. 94, 95.

⁸ Id. ch. vii., v. 80.

329. Then having reviewed the army, he should hold an interview with the commander. Having offered his evening prayers, he should listen to the secret converse of the spies.

330. Then he should take his meals with music and dancing, and study the Veda. He should go to sleep with the sound of musical instrument and awake with the same.

331. Having arisen, he should apply himself to the [study of] śāstras and his other duties. He should then despatch the spies after honouring them to his own feudatories and to other kings.

- 10 332—338. Then after being gladdened by the Ritvij (sacrificer), the Purohita (family priest), and the A'charya (preceptor), with benedictions, and having seen astrologers and physicians, he should present them, as also the *Śrotriya*s, with cows, gold, lands [332], Marriage gifts and houses. [The king] should be forbearing to the Brāhmaṇas, candid to his friends, angry towards his enemies [333].

And a father to his servants and subjects. Protecting his subjects with justice, he receives one-sixth of their merit [334];

- For, protection of the subjects is superior to all gifts. He should protect his subjects from the oppression of cheats, thieves, vagabonds, 20 depredators [335],

And particularly the Kāyasthas (scribes). If being unprotected the subjects commit any sin [336],

The king shares half of it; for he takes taxes [from the subjects]. Having learnt from the spies the conduct of his officers [337],

He should honour the good and punish the wicked. Those who receive bribes, he should deprive of their wealth, and banish [338].

339—344. He should always entertain the *Śrotriya*s with gifts, honour, and hospitality. That king who enriches his exchequer by wronging his subjects [339],

- 30 Soon loses his fortune, and goes to ruin with his family. The fire produced from the heat [i. e. anguish] of the subjects caused by their oppression [340],

Does not cease until it has burnt the fortune, family, and life of the king. All that very duty of the king [which he pursues] in protecting his own kingdom [341],

Devolves on him when becoming master of another kingdom. Customs, laws, and family usages which obtain in a country [342]

- Should be preserved when that country has been acquired. Since deliberations are the foundation of sovereignty, they should be kept 40 secret [343],

So that none shall know any regal acts until their accomplishment.

He should regularly consider as inimical, friendly, and neutral the neighbouring sovereign, the one next, and the one next to that [respectively] [314].

345. He should practise conciliation and the other [modes of diplomacy] towards the neighbouring kings in their order.¹ The means of success are negotiation, bribery, sowing dissension, and open attack.²

346—348. These being properly used cannot but succeed. As for open attack, it should only be resorted to in the absence of any other. To peace, war, march, halt, recourse to a mightier king [346],

And stratagem,³ he should have recourse as time may need. He 10 should invade an enemy's kingdom when it is full of corn and other provision [347],

And when the enemy is destitute [of army], and when himself possesses spirited animals and men.⁴ The accomplishment of an object is divided between fate and exertion [348].

349. Of these, the fate is the manifestation of one's acts in former life. Some expect success from fate, some from accident, some from the lapse of time, and some from effort.

350—351. Men of genius believe in the efficacy of the combination [of all these]. As a chariot cannot be put into motion with a single 20 wheel [350],

So does fate not succeed without exertion.⁵ The acquisition of friends is superior to the gain of gold and land.⁶ [351.]

352—353. Hence he should endeavour to get them; he should scrupulously maintain truth. The king, the minister, the subjects, a fortress, the treasury, the army [352],

And friends;—these elements are declared to be the seven constituents of a kingdom. Therefore having obtained a kingdom, the king should inflict punishment on the wicked. [353.]

354. Righteousness was formerly created by Brahmá in the form 30 of punishment. To inflict that [punishment] with justice is impossible for one who is covetous and fickle-minded.

355—356. [That is possible only] for him, who is truthful, blameless, properly aided, and talented. That [punishment] inflicted according to law, cannot but please the world, together with gods, demons and men [355];

If imposed otherwise, it must anger the world. Unlawful punishment by the king is the cause of his loss of heaven, fame, and subjects. [356].

¹ Vñ. says in the order of the directions commencing with the last.

² See Manu ch. vii., vv. 158, 159, and 198.

⁵ Compare Manu ch. vii., v. 205.

⁶ In ch vii v one

357—361. Proper punishment procures him heaven, fame, and success. Even a brother, a son, an ecclesiastic, the father-in-law, or the mother's brother [357],

Failing in his duty, is liable to punishment by the king. That king who shall punish offenders, and execute those deserving capital punishment [358],

Shall obtain the benefit of sacrifices consummated with large gifts. Having thus duly thought of the [reward of] sacrificial merit [359],

The king should attend personally to judicial proceedings in company 10 of worthy persons in the order of the classes. The families, castes, the Śreṇis, the Gaṇas, and the Jānapālas [360],

Who swerve from their duty should be chastised and maintained in their respective duties. A particle occupying the space of a ray of the sun passing through an aperture is declared to be a trasarenu. [361.]

362—363. Eight of them make a likṣhā. Three likṣhās make a Rājasarshapa. Three of them make a Gaura (sarshapa) ; six Gauras make a yava (a barley corn) of the middle size ; three yavas [362]

Make a Krishṇala ; five Krishṇalas make a māsha ; sixteen māshas 20 make a Suvarṇa ; four Suvarṇas make a Pala [363].

364. Two Krishṇalas make a silver māsha ; sixteen of them make a Dharaṇa. A Śatamānapala is indeed made by ten Dharaṇas.

365. Four suvarṇas make a Nishka. A Kārshika is a paṇa of copper. The uttamasāhasu (the highest) fine is one thousand and eighty paṇas.

366—368. Their half is declared the Madhyama (the middle) ; its half again is recorded to be the alkama (the least). Reprimand, severe language, a fine of money, and death—[366]

All these, or one, or more [of these punishments] should be inflicted 30 according to the nature of the offence. Consideration being had of the offence, place, time, health [367],

Age, the act, and the wealth, punishment should be inflicted. [368.]

End of Chapter I.

VYAVAHÁRÁDHYÁYA.

CHAPTER [II.]—CIVIL JUDICATURE.

1. The king, divested of anger and avarice, should attend to administer justice, along with learned Bráhmaṇas,¹ [and] conformably to the precepts of law.

2. Those should be made assessors by the king who have studied the Vedás and Sástrás, who know the law, who speak the truth, and who look to friends and foes with the same feelings.²

3. A king who, from press of other work, cannot attend to administer justice, should appoint [in his own place] a Bráhmaṇa learned 10 in all laws, to work along with the assessors.³

4. Respectable men,⁴ who through partiality or avarice or fear act in a manner opposed to the Smritis, should be separately punished with a fine double of the sum in dispute.

5. If one, aggrieved by others in a way contrary to the Smritis and the established usage, complain to the king, that subject is one of the titles of Vyavahára or a judicial proceeding.⁵

6. That which the plaintiff relates should be recorded in the presence of the defendant, [and] marked, with the year, the month, the fortnight, the day, the name, the caste, and the like.⁶

7. The answer of the defendant who has heard the plaint, should be taken down in writing in the presence of the complainant.⁷ Next, the plaintiff should immediately have evidence written down in support of the matter in dispute.⁸ 20

8. If it succeed, he wins; if it do not prevail, he fails. This legal procedure is declared to be of a fourfold character in litigation.⁹

9. Until the complaint is disposed of, no counter-claim should be allowed to be brought against the complainant, nor should any other

be allowed to charge a person already labouring under a charge; nor should the original declaration be allowed to be changed.¹

10. But in assaults and offences [like theft], a counter charge is allowable. A substantial surety from each party should be taken for the satisfaction of the judgment.²

11. Where a claim is [first] denied [by the defendant, but subsequently] proved, he should pay [to the plaintiff] the [sum of] money [claimed], [and] to the king a sum equal to that [claimed by the plaintiff]. He who advances a false claim [against another] should 10 pay [to the king] a sum of money double of that [falsely] claimed [by himself].

12. In [accusations of] felony, theft, defamation, assault, injury to a cow, or [the commission of] a sin, [and in accusations] against a woman [of unchastity or absconding], [the judge] must instantly call upon [the defendant] to refute [the charge]. In cases other [than these], the time [for answering the charge] depends upon the will [of one of the parties to the suit, or the sublyti (respectable men), or the judge.]

13—15. He who shifts from place to place, licks his lips, whose 20 forehead perspires, whose countenance changes colour³ [13],

Who with a dry tongue and stumbling speech talks much and incoherently, who does not heed the speech or sight [of another], who bites his lips [14],

Who by mental, vocal and bodily acts falls into the sickly state, is considered a tainted person whether [he be] a complainant or a witness.⁴ [15]

16. He, who depending on his personal [knowledge of the case], attempts to substantiate a doubtful claim; he who absconds, and, when summoned, does not say anything—[such persons] are said to be false 30 [plaintiffs], and deserve punishment.

17. When there are witnesses on both sides, witnesses of the first party [are to be examined]. If the first side be invalidated, witnesses of the other side should be examined.⁵

18. In the case of a suit accompanied with a stipulation, the defeated party should be compelled to pay [to the king] a fine and also the sum stipulated for by him, and to the [successful] creditor, the money [in dispute].⁶

19. Having discarded that which has [only] an appearance of reality, a king should decide suits in conformity to the nature of things; for even an honest claim, if not properly pleaded, is [liable to be] defeated by [the adverse party merely satisfying] the legal formalities.

20. [Where the defendant] does not admit several [of the particulars] written [in a plaint], which is afterwards proved in part, he should be compelled by the king to give the whole claim. [The plaintiff] should not be allowed to recover [from the defendant] what had not been mentioned [in the plaint].

21. When two Smritis disagree, that which follows equity, [as guided 10 by] the practice of the old should prevail.¹ But the rule is that law is stronger than equity.²

22. Evidence is laid down to be writing, possession, and witnesses. In the absence of any one of these, a form of an ordeal is prescribed.³

23. In all money disputes, evidence [about the plea] preponderates. In the case of pledges, gifts, and sales, evidence with regard to the claim preponderates.

24. To him who sees another enjoy his land for twenty, or his money for ten years, loss [of that thing] occurs.⁴

25—26. With the exception of pledges, boundaries, open deposits, 20 wealth belonging to persons insane or under age, and likewise sealed deposits, and wealth belonging to sovereigns, women, or learned Bráhmaṇas; [25]

The tribunal should compel him, who encroaches upon pledges and the like, to restore the property [in dispute] to the owner, and to pay a fine equal in value to the king, or as much as he is able to pay. [26]

27. Title preponderates over possession, unless the latter be hereditary. There can be no strength in any title, if it be not accompanied at least by a brief enjoyment. 30

28. He who has acquired a title, must, when the title is impugned, prove it; neither his son, nor his [son's] son [is required to prove it]; for [in their case] possession carries greater weight.⁵

29. If a person whose title is impugned should die, his heir should establish it; in such a case, enjoyment without title is no proof.⁶

² Such as, says Vj., that of Uśanas, &c. but even then it should be conformable to law. See Vīr. l. 6, p. 1.

30. Officers appointed by the king, the Pūgas, the Srenis, and the Kūlas, should be respected, in the order in which they are mentioned, in matters of legal proceedings between men.¹

31. Transactions done through force or fraud shall be deemed to be void; so also those done by women, at night, in the middle of the house, outside [the village], and by enemies.

32. A transaction entered into by a person intoxicated, insane, afflicted with disease, in difficulties, or by a minor, or one threatened, or the like, does not hold good; as also that which is improper.²

10 33. Wealth lost and recovered by the king should be restored to the owner [after due identification]; if [the owner] fail to supply the necessary details [of the article alleged to be lost], he shall deserve a fine equal [thereto].

34. The king having found treasure-trove, should give half to the twice-born; but a learned Brāhmaṇa finding [treasure-trove,] may keep the whole, for he is the lord of all.³

35. The king should give a sixth part of treasure-trove found by any other person. In case where information is not given by the finder, he [the finder] must be made to pay a fine⁴ [in addition to the king's share].

20 36. The king should pay wealth robbed by thieves to his country's people; if he do not, he incurs the sin⁵ of the robbed.

RECOVERY OF DEBTS.

37. An eightieth part [of the principal] is the monthly interest, when a pledge has been delivered; otherwise it may be in the direct order of the classes, two, three, four, or five⁶ [per cent].

38. [Borrowers] who travel through forests [should pay] ten, and those who traverse the ocean twenty, in the hundred; or all should pay what they agree to among all classes.

39. The utmost [increase a creditor can lawfully exact from his 30 debtor consists], in the case of female beasts of their progeny; in the case of fluids, of their eight-fold; in the case of cloth, corn, and gold, of their four-fold, three-fold, and two-fold [respectively].

⁵ Manu (ch. viii., v. 40) says the sin of the robbers, and this seems more reasonable.

40. [A creditor] recovering an acknowledged debt will not be liable to the blame of the king; [and] if the debtor should complain to the king, he should be fined and made to pay the debt.¹

41. A debtor shall be made to pay his creditors in the order of loans, after discharging [those of] a Brāhmaṇa, and afterwards of the king.²

42. The king shall make the debtor pay to him ten in the hundred of the awarded [claim], and the successful creditor to pay five in the hundred.³

43. A disabled [debtor] of an inferior class⁴ should be made to work for [the payment of] his debts; a disabled Brāhmaṇa,⁵ however, 10 should be made to pay gradually, according to his ability.⁶

44. When a creditor does not receive back a loan tendered, it will from that time carry no interest if deposited with a third person.⁷

45. When the head of a family is either dead or gone to a remote country, his heirs should pay that debt which may have been incurred for the family by undivided members.

46. A woman need not pay the debts of her husband or son; nor the father, those of his son; nor the husband, those of his wife; unless contracted on account of the family.⁸

47. The son shall not pay the paternal [debts] contracted for 20 wines, lust, and gambling, or due on account of the unpaid [portion] of a fine or a toll, or [on account of] an idle promise.⁹

48. Among herdsmen, vintners, dancers, washermen, and hunters, the husband shall pay the debts of his wife; because his livelihood depends upon her.¹⁰

49. A woman shall pay the debts agreed to by her, or contracted by her jointly with the husband or by herself alone; she shall pay no other debts.¹¹

50. When the father is abroad, dead, or immersed in difficulties, his debt, proved by witnesses, if disputed, should be paid by the son 30 and grandson.¹²

51. He who has received the estate or the wife [of the deceased] should be made to pay his debts, or failing either, the son who has not received an inheritance.¹ In the case of a sonless [deceased] those who take the heritage [should be made to pay].

52. It is declared that among brothers, husband and wife, and father and son, there can be no relations of suretyship, lending, or being witnesses for each other, before partition.²

53. Suretyship is ordained for appearance, for trust, and for payment.³ Sureties [alone] are in the first two cases to be held responsible 10 in [the event of] a default; and in the last case, their sons also.⁴

54. Where a man standing as a surety for the appearance or honesty of another, dies, the sons of the former may not answer [his liabilities] in the case of a surety for repayment [of a debt]; the sons shall pay.

55. When there are more sureties than one, they shall pay the debt proportionately. But when they are bound severally, the payment shall be made [by any one of them], as the creditor pleases.⁵

56. When a surety has been made to pay publicly a debt to the creditor, the debtor shall be forced to repay double the sum to the surety.⁶

20 57. Progeny in the case of female beasts; three-fold in the case of corn; four-fold in the case of cloth; and eight-fold in the case of liquids [are allowed to a surety who has paid the debt on account of the principal debtor.]

58. A pledge not redeemed until the principal is doubled, is forfeited. That with a term of redemption fixed is lost on the expiry of that term; [but] a usufructuary pledge is never forfeited.⁷

59. There shall be no interest if a pledge for custody be used, or a pledge for use be damaged. [A pledge] spoiled, or destroyed, unless by the act of God or the king, shall be made good [by the creditor].⁸

30 ¹ 'Ananyāśrita dravya':—this is explained by Vij. to mean he who has not got the ananyāśrita dravya (wealth in the possession of another such as the father, the mother, &c.); in other words, a son who has not received any assets from his indebted father. For further comment see above p. 147, l. 30, and p. 113, l. 13; and Vir. l. 106, p. 2.

⁵ See above p. 108, l. 17; Vir. l. 101, p. 1; Kam. and Vya. M. Vij. adds on the authority of Kātyāyana that a joint and several liability of suretyship is converted into a joint liability on the death of the surety, so as to make the son of that surety liable 40 to the extent of his father's share in the debt.

⁸ Vij. says the pledge is to be restored by means of an equivalent in money. See above, p. 105, lines 10 and 17; Vir. l. 95, p. 1; and Kam.

60. Acceptance of the pledge is [requisite] for the completion of the contract [of pawn]. If it be lost (even) when carefully kept, another must be substituted, or the creditor must receive the amount due to him.¹

61. A debtor shall be compelled to pay with interest a debt contracted on a charitra (friendly) pledge; and to pay twofold a debt contracted on a chattel delivered as an earnest.²

62—63. The pledge shall be restored to the debtor offering to redeem it, on pain of the creditor not doing so being deemed a thief. In the absence of the creditor, the debtor may pay the debt to his kinsmen, and take back his pledge [62], 10

Or appraising it at its value at the time, may let it remain with the creditor, without interest.³ [On the other hand], when the debtor is not at hand, [the creditor] may sell the pledge in the presence of witnesses. [63.]

64. Whenever a debt under mortgage has become doubled by interest, then the pledge shall be returned, after double the principal has been received out of the produce.⁴

DEPOSIT.

65. That wealth is [said to constitute] a sealed deposit, which kept in a box is delivered into the hand of another, without being described. 20 It is to be returned in the very condition [in which it was entrusted].

66. That which has been removed by [an act of] the king, or God, or thieves, shall not be caused to be restored. [Where] the loss [of a deposit occurs] after [it is] asked [to be returned], and [it is] not returned, [the depository] should be compelled to make good [to the depositor the loss], and should be fined [a sum of money] equal to [the price of] the deposit.⁵

67. [The bailee] making his living without authority [by the use of the deposit] shall be punished, and made to pay it with interest.⁶ With regard to [things] borrowed, or entrusted [by the borrower 30 to another person to be returned to the owner, or handed over to a dependent without the master's knowledge, or deposited [with the owner personally], the same law obtains.

² Vij. explains the word charitra-bandhaka and satyankāra in two ways. Charitra-bandhaka is either a transaction of pledge upon honor, where the pledgee or the pledger advances or borrows respectively more than the value of the pledge, or a transaction where the religious merit of the pledger is the security pledged. Similarly satyankāra is either a condition whereby the forfeiture of the pledge is expressly saved under all circumstances; or earnest money. This verse mentions those cases where a pledge is not forfeited even when the furthest limit of interest is reached. See above p. 106, l. 25; Vir. l. 98, p. 1; Kam.

WITNESSES.

68—69. Men devoted to religious austerities, charitable men, men sprung from high families, truthful men, men devoted to religious observances, men straightforward, men blessed with sons, and men possessed of great wealth, [68]

[Are competent] witnesses, provided they are not less than three, and are devoted to the performance of rites prescribed in the Vedas and Smritis, of the same caste, of the same class; [failing these], all witnesses of any caste or class are mentioned for any other caste or class.¹ [69.]

70—71. A woman, an infant, an old man, a gambler, an intoxicated person, a person possessed by an evil spirit, an infamous person, a performer on the stage, an infidel, a forger, a deformed person, [70]

One degraded from caste, a friend, one interested in the subject matter of a suit, a partner, an enemy, a thief, a ferocious person, one known to be a liar, an outcaste, and the like are inadmissible witnesses.² [71.]

72. With the consent of both parties, even one person becomes [sufficient as] a witness, if he be proficient in the duties laid down in the Śrutis and Smritis.³ In adultery, theft, assaults and a Sāhasa (a heinous offence), any person may be a witness.⁴

73. The witnesses should be informed, in the presence of the plaintiff and the defendant, of the worlds to which makers of sins and great sins are destined.

74. He who gives false evidence shall [after death] go to all those regions to which incendiaries and the murderers of women and children are destined.

75. Know that the merit of all your actions in hundreds of previous existences will all belong to him whom you will falsely defeat.

76. A person not giving evidence should be made to pay, by the king, the whole debt, together with a tenth⁵ added thereto, on the forty-sixth day.⁶

77. That basest of human beings, who, though acquainted [with the case], does not offer himself as a witness, is, in point of sin and [liability to] punishment, equal to false witnesses.

40 ⁵ According to Vij., this goes to the king; the rest to the creditor.

78. If the evidence be contradictory, the testimony of the majority prevails; if the witnesses be equally divided, the testimony of the virtuous; and if the virtuous are [equally] divided, the testimony of the most virtuous is to be admitted.¹

79. He, whose witnesses depose to the truth of the plaint, must succeed. Sure defeat will be his, whose witnesses contradict his plaint.

80. Even after evidence has been given by witnesses, if more trustworthy witnesses, or double the number of witnesses first examined, depose contrary to what they have done, the first witnesses become false.²

81. The suborner as well the [false] witnesses should be separately 10 fined double the amount in dispute. It is said that a Bráhmāya [under similar circumstances] ought to be banished.

82. He who having been called upon to bear testimony, conceals it under the influence of passion, should be fined eight-fold; if a Bráhmāya, he should be expelled.³

83. Where men of the four classes would be liable to suffer capital punishment, [if truth were spoken], there indeed a witness may speak untruth. For the purification from that offence, an oblation of rice should be presented to goddess Sarasvatī by the twice-born.⁴

84—85. Whatever contract is entered into by mutual consent, there should be a writing [made about it] attested by witnesses, headed with the name of the creditor, [84]

And giving the year, the month, the fortnight, the day [of the month], the names, tribes, and families of the parties, their scholastic titles, the names of their fathers, &c.⁵ [85.]

86. When the terms of a contract are written down, the debtor should sign his name with his own hand, adding 'what is written above has the assent of me, son of such a one.'⁶

87. The witnesses should sign, with their fathers' names before 30 [their own] thus:—'Here I, so and so, am a witness.' These witnesses should be even.⁷

88. Then, at the end, the person who wrote the document should write 'at the request of both parties, this is written by me so and s., son of such and such.'⁸

89. A writing in one's own hand, though without witnesses, is declared to be evidence, provided it be not caused by force or fraud.¹

90. A debt evidenced by a writing is binding only on three generations. A pledge can be enjoyed as long as the debt is not returned.

91. If a document is in another country, if it is unintelligible, if it is lost, effaced or stolen; likewise if it is torn, burnt, or cut asunder, [the king] should cause another to be made.²

92. The correctness of a disputed or doubtful writing may be established by [comparing it with] something written [by the party writing] 10 with his own hand and the like; [also] by presumption, by confrontation [of parties], by direct proof, by marks, by previous connection, by a [probability of] title, and by inference.³

93. The debtor shall write the sums paid by him [at several times] on the back of the document; or the creditor shall give an acknowledgment in his own hand.⁴

94. Having paid the debt, the writing should be caused to be torn, or another should be made for acquittance.⁵ The debt which has witnesses [for its security] should be returned in the presence of the witnesses.

ORDEALS.

95. Here the ordeals for clearance [from an accusation] are the balance, the fire, water, poison, and the kośa (drinking the water in which an idol has been washed). [These are to be resorted to] in the case of important disputes, and when the plaintiff has agreed to abide [by the result of the ordeal in respect of the relief or the fine].

96. Or, if both the parties like, the other [i.e., the plaintiff] may undergo an ordeal; while the defendant should submit to the penalty [in case the cause of the plaintiff be proved to be just]. In a case of high treason, and in the case of a sin [of the first degree], a party should 30 [be allowed to] perform an ordeal, even though the other party be not willing to submit to the penalty, [if his cause be proved unjust].

97. Having summoned [the party willing to undergo an ordeal] who has bathed with his clothes on, and has fasted [on the day previous]; the chief justice should at sunrise cause him to undergo [any one of] the ordeals, in the presence of the king and Brāhmanas.

98. [An ordeal by means of] a balance is [to be resorted to in the case] of women, children, the old, the blind, the lame, Brāhmanas, and the diseased. [An ordeal by means of] fire or water is [to be resorted in the case of Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas respectively]. In the case of a Śūdra, [an ordeal by means of] poison weighing seven barley corns is to be resorted to.

99. Neither [an ordeal by means of] a plough, nor [one by means of] poison, nor [one by means of] a balance, should be resorted to, where the subject matter of the suit is valued at less than a thousand panas. But at all times, in the case of offences affecting the king, and in the case of sins of the first degree, [the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be] should undergo an ordeal, [with his mind and body] pure. 10

100—102. When men, versed in holding a balance, have seated the defendant therein, weighed him against an equal weight, marked a line, and caused him to descend, [100]

He should invoke the balance thus : ‘oh balance, thou whom gods created in former times, art the abode of truth. Therefore, oh auspicious [balance], speak the truth. Free me from suspicion. [101.]

‘Oh mother, if I have committed a sin, then carry me down. If I am pure, carry me upwards.’ [102.]

103. When the party submitting himself to an ordeal has rubbed his hands with barley corns, they should be marked; and then 20 seven leaves of *Āśvattha*¹ should be placed on them; and then they should be tied with as many rounds [viz., seven] of thread [for each leaf].

104. Oh purifying fire, thou pervadest the innermost parts of all things; in my hand, tell thou the truth, like a witness who has marked whether there is virtue or sin in me.

105. After he has said so, a smooth red-hot lump of iron, weighing fifty Palas, should be placed in both of his hands.

106. Having taken that, he should walk slowly seven Maṇḍalas without swerving [from the line marking the Maṇḍalas]. A Maṇḍala 30 should be known to be a circle with a diameter of sixteen fingers. The same should be the distance between each Maṇḍala.

107. After he has thrown away the fire, and rubbed [his hands] with rice, if he is [found] unburnt, he should be acquitted. If the ball falls down [in the course of his walking over the Maṇḍalas], or if a doubt arises, he should carry the ball again.

108. Having invoked water with the couplet, Satyena mābhiraakshu tvam Varuna (oh thou Varuna, protect me for justice’s sake), the accused should enter the water, catching hold of the thighs of a man standing in water navel-deep.

109. Then forthwith, after the arrival of the [first runner stationed at the starting point], the other runner will run [towards the starting point] with the arrow; and if [when he has reached the place], he sees [the accused] under water, then the accused will be considered pure.¹

110. 'Oh poison, thou art a son of Brahmá. Thou art appointed to ascertain just causes. Protect me from this charge. If my cause be just, be nectar to me.'

111. Having said so, he should swallow the poison called Śáringa produced on the Himálaya mountains. He who can digest it without 10 [feeling] convulsions, should be declared pure.

112. Having worshipped the stern deities, he should collect the water in which they were bathed. The chief justice having cited [Toya tvam právidám právas (oh water, thou art the life of all beings)] should make [the accused] drink three handfuls of that water.

113. There is no doubt but that he is pure on whom no frightful calamity by the act of God or of the king falls within fourteen days (from the time of his taking oath).²

PARTITION OF HERITAGE.

114. If the father makes a partition, he may separate his sons [from 20 himself] at his pleasure, giving the eldest the best share; or all may be equal shares³ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. ii., 1].

115. If he make the allotments equal,⁴ his wives,⁵ to whom no

⁴ The language of the text, as well as the opening words of Vij.'s gloss, seem to shew that a share was allowed to the mother, only in the case of equal distribution; and Aparárka and Vāchaspatimítra (p. 127) have actually so interpreted this verse. But 40 this is in a measure modified by Vij. stating further on, that even in the case of an unequal distribution among sons, the father's wives do get a share. The Vīr. in summing up Vij.'s gloss says that under no circumstances is there to be an unequal distribution among the father's wives (l. 173, p. 1). The Mayúka agrees with Vij. (see above p. 43, l. 17).

⁵ Bālabhāṭṭa includes among the term wives even childless wives; because the term used is in the plural—patnyah.

Stridhana has been given by the husband or the father-in-law,¹ must be made partakers of equal portions² [Colebrooke, c. i., s. ii., 8].

116. The separation of one able [to earn wealth], and not desiring [a share]³ may be effected by giving him a trifle.⁴ A partition made by the father among sons separated with greater or smaller shares, if just, is pronounced valid⁵ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. ii., 11, 13].

² "Partakers of equal portions":—Colebrooke translates the word samāśikā by partakers of life portions. Colebrooke's rendering seems inaccurate, and would indicate that, according to his reading, the father's wife comes in, not as a sharer, but as one whose maintenance should be provided for at the time of partition. And indeed this view is maintained by Śrīkara (referred to by Vij. at ch. ii., l. 58, p. 2), and the Smṛitichandrika, 20 who say that a mother takes a share when the property is small, and maintenance only when it is large. Vij. (ch. ii., l. 53, p. 2) and Kamalākara distinctly oppose this view, and maintain her position as a sharer.

Bālabhāṭya adds that this text does not authorize the allotment of a separate share to the wife by the father during his lifetime, that being opposed to the Hārīta's text—अपत्यविभागो न विद्यते (there shall be no division between a husband and wife). The Vir. considers that there is no objection to such an allotment, as it is to be considered in the light of prītidāna (an affectionate gift) (see l. 174, p. 1).

Vāchaspathiśāstra says that this text refers to self-acquired property, and Vij. and others agree with this by implication (see above p. 43, l. 17). 30

⁴ "A trifle" :—Vij. says the trifle is to be given to preclude the descendants of the so separated co-parcener from impugning the division (see above p. 43, l. 8, and p. 44, l. 4).

Aparārka on the strength of a text of Manu (ch. ix., v. 207) observes, that separation with the gift of a trifle here spoken of holds in the case of wealth earned by brothers when united, and does not relate to the wealth of the father, which must in all cases be equally divided.

⁵ Śūlapāṇi, and to some extent Aparārka, give the latter hemistich a somewhat 40 literal construction, and say that sons can in no case dispute a division effected by the father, however inequitable it may be.

Jīm. specifies the circumstances under which an unequal division might be permitted, and holds that where these do not exist, the division is void (see pp. 89 and 90).

Vij. observes that unequal division shall stand only if it is conformable to the precepts of law; but if otherwise, it shall be set aside. The Vir. (l. 173, p. 1) and the Mayūkha (see above p. 43, l. 10) agree with Vij., the former adding that this text is directory only.

It must be noted that this unequal division is possible only in the case of the father's self-acquired property. Mādhava and Jīm. lay this down distinctly in connexion with this text, and the same conclusion follows from the statements of the other authors made 50

117. After the death of the parents,¹ the sons should divide equally their wealth and debt. The daughters share the residue of their mother's property after [the payment of her] debts,² and the issue³ succeed in their default [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. iii., 1, 8, and 12].

118. Whatever else is self-acquired, apart from and without detriment to the parental estate,⁴ as a friendly or a nuptial present, does not belong to the co-heirs [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. iv., 1].

elsewhere. The Vir. (l. 174, p. 2). Kamalākara and Madhava quote the following text of Apastamba (अपस्तम्बो दायं विभजेत्सम्भूतः; Translation:—The heritage should be equally 10 divided among living sons.) which holds that unequal division is prohibited. Vij. says the same thing in connection with the next verse (No. 117), which relates to partition after the father's death.

² "After [the payment of her] debts":—Vij. says that daughters succeed to the wealth of their mother, but have no responsibility for her debts. So, where the mother's property falls short of, or is equal to her debts, it goes to the sons who have to pay 20 the debts (ch. ii, l. 49, p. 2).

³ "The issue":—Vij. says the issue here meant is the issue of the mother. Kamalākara has concluded from this statement of Vij. that he gives the sons the right to succeed to their mother in the absence of daughters, to the exclusion of the daughters' daughters and daughters' sons. But in so doing, Kamalākara has evidently overlooked Vij.'s gloss on v. 145, where the sons are postponed to daughters' daughters and daughters' sons.

Aparārka makes the term 'issue' to be 'issue of the daughter'; but this difference is immaterial, inasmuch as he and Vij. ultimately agree in respect to the order of succession.

30 Jim. (p. 131) and Vāch. (p. 143) apply this latter hemistich to Yantaka (nuptial gift).

⁴ "Without detriment to the parental estate":—Vij. considers this clause as qualifying the four kinds of gains declared impartible in the latter hemistich of this verse and in the following verse. The result is that Vij. considers the above enumeration of the ways of acquiring self-acquired property as exhaustive, so as to make all other gains not covered by this and the following verses as partible, although they may have been acquired without detriment to the parental wealth. He gives as an example the gains by pratigraha (acceptance).

Aparārka opposes this construction, and holds the first hemistich to stand as a com-40 prehensive and independent class of impartible properties, distinct from the four classes that follow in the latter part of this and the whole of the following verse.

Jimātavāhana considers these and all the other texts of Smṛiti-writers on this subject as only explanatory of the general rule contained in the first hemistich, and concludes that whatever is gained without detriment to the family property is impartible (see p. 181).

The Vir. (l. 220, p. 2) and the Mayūkha (see above p. 67, l. 5) agree with Vij.

119. [Similarly] he, who recovers hereditary property¹ once taken away, may not give [to or share it with] his co-heir; as also what has been gained by learning [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. iv., 1].

120. In cases where the common stock undergoes an increase,² an equal division is ordained.³ Among sons by different fathers,⁴ the allotment of shares is according to the fathers [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. iv., 30, and s. v., 1].

121. The ownership of both father and son is the same in land, a corody,⁵ or wealth⁶ received from the grandfather⁷ [Colebrooke ch. i., s. v., 3].

² "Where the common stock undergoes an increase":—Vij. gives agriculture and trade as instances.

Vij. observes that this text is intended to be an exception to the text of Vasishtha, which allows two shares to the acquirer, and which is cited in the Mayūkha (see above p. 68, l. 28).

⁴ "Among sons by different fathers":—The Vīr. (l. 177, p. 1) and Bālabhaṭṭa adopt the reading pramutapitrikūṇim (of those whose fathers are dead)

⁵ "A corody":—Vij. explains nibandha (corody) as meaning allowances of a certain quantity or number of things such as betel-leaves or betel. The Vīr. (l. 175, p. 2) and Śūlapāṇi follow Vij.

According to Aparārka, it means money allowances.

⁶ "Wealth":—The original word is dravya, which is explained by Vij. to be gold, 30 silver, &c. Mādhava understands the term in its literal sense, and would apply it to all moveable as well as immoveable property. It is not quite clear why a word of such general import as dravya (matter) should have been here used co-ordinately with its species.

Jīmūtvāhana (p. 52) understands the term in the sense of dvipadas (bipeds), because of the companionship of immoveables and bipeds in a certain text of Nārāda, which is quoted in the Mayūkha at p. 34, l. 7.

The Subodhinī says that this text applies in the case of a grandson whose father was united with the grandfather, and is dead.

The Vīr. (l. 175, p. 2) observes that the equal ownership of the father and the son is specifically declared by this text, to show that in wealth of the kinds herein mentioned, the son is not dependent on the will of the father for partition; and that the father, when effecting a division of his own accord, cannot reserve two shares for himself, as he can in the case of self-acquired property (see above p. 42, l. 16).

The Mayūkha takes the word 'grandfather' as illustrative of the great-grandfather as well (see above p. 33, l. 4).

122. When [after the sons, &c.] have become separated, a son is born of a wife of the same class,¹ he becomes a partaker of a share;² or his allotment should be made out of the visible³ estate, corrected by [the necessary adjustment of] profit or loss⁴ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. vi., 1, 8].

123. The wealth which is given to one by parents, belongs to him alone.⁵ When sons divide after the death of the father, the

² "Partaker of a share":—Vij. makes this clear by saying that the son born after partition succeeds to the father's wealth, to the exclusion of the separated brothers. He splits up this verse into two parts, and applies the first hemistich to a son born after partition while his father is alive; and the latter to a son who was conceived but not born at the time of the partition, which took place after the death of the father.

Aparārka agrees with Vij.

Śūlapāṇi, Kamalākara, and Vāchaspatimīśra (p. 146) regard the whole text as applicable to the latter of the two cases stated by Vij.

Jīm. is opposed to this construction [see pp. 205, 206]. He considers this text 20 applicable to the ancestral property in the hands of separated brothers.

³ "Visible estate":—Vij. explains the term dṛiṣya (visible) as meaning the wealth received by the brothers at the time of partition.

Vāch., following Hāḷayudha, holds that, owing to the use of the word rd (or) the share of the son born after partition is to be made up out of the property in the hands of the separated brothers, both visible and concealed, according as the subsequently born brother is worthy or unworthy respectively (see p. 146).

The Vīr. (l. 183, p. 1) refutes this construction, and upholds that of Vij.

Jīm., as explained by his commentator Śrīkrishṇa, says that the term 'visible' is used to exclude that portion of the property which may have been already expended 30 (pp. 205 and 206).

⁴ "Profit or loss":—The words used are Āya and Vyaya, which are explained to be accretion to the heritage and expenditure on account of the payment of the father's debts respectively.

The Vīr. (l. 181, p. 1) limits the expenditure to legitimate charges on the family inheritance, such as the payment of ancestral debts, the initiation of the uninitiated brothers, and the marriages of the unmarried daughters.

The Subodhinī considers that a deduction of the expenditure incurred by a separated brother on account of the maintenance of his family should also be made. This does not seem to be satisfactory.

40 Vij. adds that the same rule holds with regard to a son conceived before but born after partition to the wife of a brother, in the case of a partition amongst brothers.

⁵ "Belongs to him alone":—The Vīr. amplifies this by saying that any gift within due bounds made by the father to his separated sons out of affection is not to be disputed by the son born after partition; and that the same rule applies in the case of affectionate gifts by the father to his sons before partition. These gifts are to be considered as the peculiar property of sons, and, as such, impartible (l. 221, p. 1).

mother¹ should also receive an equal share² [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. vi., 13, and s. vii., 1].

124. Uninitiated³ sisters should have their ceremonies performed by those brothers who have already been initiated, giving them a quarter⁴ of one's own share⁵ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. vii., 3, 5].

¹ "The mother".—Vij. considers the term pitṛbhāryā standing for father's wives generally; so as intended by to include a step-mother in the list of sisters.

Malatī, Mātavya, Vyākṛāṇa, Śūlapāzi and Balaubhārta consider the term mātṛ as inclusive of both those who come in as sharees under a text of Vyāsa—

‘अनुतास्तु
दत्तः पत्युः समदंशः पत्न्यैः । दत्तमदंशं सर्वं स्यात् नानुत्तरं । प्रहर्षितः ॥ Translation:— 10
‘The sonless wives of the father are declared equal sharees, and so are all paternal grandmothers declared equal to the mother.’ (See above Mayūkha, p. 44, l. 22.)

The Vir. completely differs from the above interpretation of Vij. and holds that though the distinction between childless and child-bearing wives is not to be made in the case of a partition by the father during his lifetime, yet when the division takes place after the father's death, it is the janmā child-bearing mother alone who is entitled to a share, while the barren step-mother obtains maintenance only (see l. 179, pp. 1, 2). It further states that its exposition as above given is in conformity with the usage of the learned.

Jīm. (p. 170) and Kamalākara agree with the Vir. The Mayūkha (see above p. 44, 20 l. 14) seems to disapprove of the wide interpretation put upon the word mātṛ, though he in the end agrees with Vij. in giving to the step-mother a share on the strength of the above-quoted text of Vyāsa.

³ "Uninitiated".—The initiation of females now consists in their marriage in accordance with usage, and Manu ch. ii. v. 67. But it appears that at one time apnanyant as distinct from marriage was allowed to females.

⁴ A quarter of the share which she would have got if she had been a son.—Vij-Bhāṣavara.

Vāch. (p. 134), mentioning the Ratnākara as approving of his interpretation, holds on the authority of the following text of Vishnu—“अनुयायै तु कन्यायां स्ववैवाहिक-पेण संस्कारं कुर्यात्.” Translation:—“The [marriage] ceremony of the unmarried daughters should be performed according to his wealth;” that the word quarter is here used not in its plain sense, but simply to enjoin the allowance of as much as will suffice for the marriages of sisters. 41

Śūlapāzi, the Suriti-Chandrikā, Bhāruchi, a commentator on Manu (Mit. ch. ii. l. 53, p. 1) and Jīm. (p. 114) agree with Vāch.

Vij. (ch. ii. l. 52, p. 2) and the Vir. (l. 179, p. 2) notice this interpretation, and reject it.

The Mayūkha (see above p. 44, l. 4) and Kam. follow Vij.
Aparārka and Medhātithi in his comment on a similar verse of Manu (ch. ix., v. 118), also observe to the same effect.

⁵ "Own share".—Vij. says the use of the word anśa shows that the daughter is a sharer as a matter of right in a partition after the death of the father. The Vir. (l. 180, p. 2) as usual follows Vij. here.

Jīm. considers this text as intended only to declare the obligation of brothers to 5 set their sisters married; so that it gives no right to the sisters to enforce a gift of

125. The sons of a Bráhmaṇa [by a Bráhmaṇī, Kshatriya, Vaiśya, or Sudra wife,] get four, three, two, or one shares respectively; those born to a Kshatriya, three shares, two, or one respectively; and those born to a Vaiśya [of a Vaiśya or Súdra wife,] two shares or one respectively¹ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. viii., 1].

126. The settled rule is, that co-heirs should again divide,² in equal shares,³ that wealth which being concealed by one (co-heir) from another is discovered after partition [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. ix., 1].

127. A son, begotten by a sonless man, having permission to that effect, on the wife of another, will be the rightful heir [to the properties] of, and the giver of the funeral cake to, both [the real and the reputed father]⁴ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. x., 1].

128. [1] The Aurasu son is he who is procreated on the lawfully wedded wife;⁵ [2] equal to him is the son of an appointed daughter, or the that share (p. 114). Aparārka is led to the same conclusion by the following Vedic text cited by Baudhāyana, viz., तस्मात्स्त्रियो निरिन्द्रिया अदायाराः (Taittirīya Samhitā, kṛpā vi., adhyāya v., and Anuvāka viii., see p. 667, vol. I. Taittirīya Samhitā of the Black Yajur Veda). Śāyana's comment on the text is "तस्मात्त्रयोऽस्त्रियोः सामर्थ्यरहितौ अत्यल्पं दाय-भाजौ न भवन्ति." The above text would accordingly be rendered thus :—Therefore women being weak, are unfit for heritage.

This Vedic text is noticed by the Vīr. under his heading of stridhana (l. 220, p. 1), where he says the general proposition enunciated thereby is limited by the express mention of certain females as sharers. The same reasoning would apply in the present case.

² Vij. adds that the rule herein laid down does not apply to land acquired by prati-graha (acceptance) [ch. ii., l. 51, pp. 1, 2].

Comp. Manu ch. ix., vv. 151—153. Marriages with women of a dissimilar class have been prohibited in this Kali age (see the Nirṇayasindhu, parichekhheda iii., first part, l. 62, p. 1, where the following text from Brhat Nārada is cited :—विजानामसवर्णासु कन्यासु-पयमस्तथा which means 'so also the marriage of a drīya (twice-born) with a maiden of a dissimilar class [is prohibited]).⁶ This text of Yājñiavalkya has therefore no application now. See Mayūkhā above p. 46, l. 17.

³ "Divide":—By the use of the plural verb vibhajeran (they should divide), says Vij. it is meant that the detected common property should be divided among all the co-heirs, and not only among those who concealed and those who detected it.

⁶ Vij. says the aurasa must be the son of a wife of the same class. Vāch. observes to the same effect (p. 149). Bālabhaṭṭa and Śūlapāṇi agreeing with Vij. support this interpretation by the following text of Baudhāyana:—सवर्णायां संस्क्रतायां स्वयमुत्पादितौ रसं विवात्. Translation :—He who is begotten on the properly wedded wife of an equal class should be known as aurasa. But the Vīr. (l. 184, p. 2) does not subscribe to this statement of Vij., and points out its inconsistency with Vij.'s inclusion of Murdhāvāsika among the aurasa (note on sec. ch. ii., l. 57, p. 1).

appointed daughter herself;¹ [3] Kshetrāja (the son of the wife) is one begotten on a wife by a Sagotra (kinsman) of her husband or by another [Colebrooke, c. i., s. xi., 1].

129. [4] One, secretly produced in the house, is declared a son of hidden origin; [5] a damsel's child is one born of an unmarried daughter; he is considered a son of his maternal grandfate² [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. xi., 1].

130. [6] A child, begotten on a woman whose [first] marriage has or has not been consummated, is called the son of a Punarbhū (a twice-married woman). [7] He, whom his father or mother³ give (in adoption), is Dattaka (a son given) [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. xi., 1].

131. [8] A son bought is one sold by them [his parents]; [9] a kṛtrima or self-made son is one adopted by the man himself; [10] one who gives himself is a Sanyadatta or self-given son; [11] a son produced in the womb (before marriage) is a Sukhoḥaja (son of a woman who was pregnant at marriage)⁴ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. xi., 1].

132. [12] He who, having been fore-aken by his parents, is taken for adoption, is Aparidhū (a deserted son)⁵ [Colebrooke ch. i., s. xi., 1].

Of these sons, each, in the absence of the preceding, is a giver of the funeral cake [to], and the inheritor of a share [of the property of the father].⁶

133. This law is propounded by me in regard to sons equal by class.⁷ A son begotten on a *śūdrā*⁸ by a Sūdra becomes even the par-

⁶ [As none but the aurasa and the adopted sons are allowed in this age (see above p. 50, l. 7), I have not thought it necessary to give full explanations of the remaining ten kinds of sons defined above.]

Vij. (ch. ii. l. 56, p. 1) notices the discrepancy between Yājñavalkya on the one hand, and Manu and Vāśiṣṭha on the other, the latter dividing the twelve kinds of sons into two classes of six each, and declaring one of those classes as disqualified to inherit. Vij. gets rid of this difference by stating that those texts apply only when the deceased is other than the father, such as a sapinda or a śamanodaka of the deceased. Mādhava agrees with Vij.

⁷ The Mayūkha on the strength of this hemistich says the adopted son should always be one from the same class (see above p. 51, l. 19).

⁸ As to what a śūdrā is see the texts cited in the case of Rakī v. Govind v. valat Teja—I. L. k. I. Bow., p. 17.

take of a share by [the father's] choice. [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. xi., 1] and s. xii., 1].

134. After the death of the father, the brothers should make him a half-harer. An illegitimate son of a Śūdra, if brotherless, can take the whole, unless there is a son to [any of] the daughters [of the Śūdra]¹ [Colebrooke, ch. i., s. xii., 1].

135—136. The wife,² daughters,³ both parents,⁴ brothers,⁵ and

The last quarter is literally rendered in the above translation. But inasmuch as a daughter precedes her son, Vij. says a Śūdra's son by a Dāsī is postponed to a daughter as well as a daughter's son. Mādhava and the Vīr. (l. 192, p. 2) agree.

Vij. infers from a share being allowed here to the son of a Dāsī in the case of a Śūdra alone, that such a son in the case of the twice-born will under no circumstances be entitled to a share.

² It should be premised that Vij., the Vīr. (l. 109, p. 2), the Mayūkhā (see above p. 70, l. 35), Mādhava, Kamalākara, and in some respects Vācha-putimśra (p. 152) hold the reverse applicable to the succession of a divided, not reunited and sonless male who may be deceased, or degraded, or have entered into the fourth order. Jīm (pp. 239, 241). Aparārka and Śūlapāṇi give the texts their plain meaning, and hold that whether the deceased be divided or undivided, his next heir is his widow if he leave no male issue.

The wife should be chaste before she is entitled to a share (see Vij. ch. ii., l. 74, p. 1, and the Mayūkhā p. 77, l. 7 above). As the word used is patnī 'a lawfully wedded wife', the Vīr. says wives married according to any of the four last forms are excluded by those married according to any of the approved forms (see l. 193, p. 1).

Another question that frequently arises in connection with the succession of the widow is as to who succeed on her death, whether her heirs or the heirs of the husband. The Vīr. (l. 194, p. 1) quoting Kātyāyana's text:—अपुत्रा वयनं भर्तुः पालयन्ती गृहं शिक्ता भुञ्जीतामपान्द्रव्यं दायदा दक्षिणामुयुः|| which means "the sonless [widow] preserving the bed of her husband, staying with elders, should enjoy [her husband's property] up to death; afterwards the heirs should get [the property]."⁷ and explaining the term dāyidās to be the heirs of the husband in an undivided family, holds that succession to a widow's property inherited from her husband takes place in reference to her deceased husband and not to her.

The only restriction on a widow's enjoyment of her husband's property seems to lie in respect of gifts to actors, dancers, and the like (Vīr. l. 195, p. 1).

Dharmśvara holds that in the case of a widow, the right of succession arises from her and in continuing the line; so that a widow without issue is entitled to maintenance only. This is refuted by Vij., (ch. ii. l. 57, p. 2), the Vīr. (l. 196, p. 1), Aparārka, and Mādhava.

As to the question whether subsequent incontinuity will operate to divest an estate already vested, the Vīr., when speaking of disqualifications for inheritance, says (see l. 221, p. 2) that after an estate is once vested in an individual, no subsequent disability will divest it; and that this rule applies as well to females as to males.

Jīm.'s order of succession among daughters is first the unmarried, then daughters with sons, then a married daughter who may have issue. Barren and widowed daughters are thus excluded (p. 271).

Dharmśvara, Devaśrāmīn and Devaśāta, quoted in the Vīr. at l. 204, p. 2, hold that likewise their sons,¹ gotrajas^a (gentiles); bandhus^a (cognates); a pupil and a fellow student—[185]

the mention of the daughter in this text is merely declaratory of her right to succeed, and not indicative of her rank in succession; so that she succeeds in preference to her mother owing to her being ranked among sons. Vij. (ch. ii. l. 59, p. 2) and the Vir. (l. 204, p. 2) refute this view, holding that the daughter or the daughter's son, who is included in the category of sons, is not any daughter and any daughter's son, but only such daughter or such daughter's son has been appointed by an agreement.

After the word dahitaraḥ (daughters) in the above text occurs the particles chaiva (also), to give some sense to which Vij. introduces here the daughter's son in conformity 10 with a text of Vishnu:—अपुत्रपौत्रसन्ताने दौहित्रा धनमापयुः । पूर्वेषां तु स्वभाकारे पौत्रा दौहित्रका यताः ॥ Translation:—"The wealth of him who has neither sons nor grandsons, goes to daughter's sons; for the daughter's sons are reckoned as son's sons in regard to the performance of their śrāddhas." Compare Manu ch. ix., v. 136.

Aparārka, Śūlapāṇi and Vāchaspatimiśra do not give the daughter's son a place here.

* Vij. places the mother before the father in succession.

Vāch. (p. 153) and Kamalākara agree with Vij. Jīm. (p. 285), Aparārka and the Mayūkha (see above p. 80, l. 1) differ, and place the father before the mother.

The Vir. notes the approval of the latter view by the Smṛiti-Chandrikā, Madanaratna, 20 Kalpataru, Ratnākara and Pārijāta (see l. 206 p. 2). It may be noted here that Vishṇu's text, which the Mayūkha relies on for refuting Vij., is quoted by Vāch. (see p. 151) as placing the mother before the father. The commentator of Jīm., however, notes this reading as adopted by the Ratnākara, a work often quoted by Vāchaspatimiśra, and pronounces it to be incorrect (p. 288); so also does the Vir. (l. 206, p. 2).

The Vir. quotes Śrīkara's opinion that the parents succeed together, and refutes it (l. 206, p. 1). The Vir., seeing the consensus of authority against the preference given to the mother, and yet unwilling to abandon Vij., strikes a middle course, and says that the father or the mother will have preference according to their individual merits or their service to the deceased son (l. 207, p. 1).

Śūlapāṇi says that the parents precede the brother only if the wealth of the deceased was inherited by him from the father, grandfather, or the like, but that in respect of self-acquired property, the brother sets the parents aside according to the following text of Devala:—ततो दायमपुत्रस्य विभजेरन् सहोदराः । तुल्या इदितरो वापि त्रियमाणः पितापि वा ॥

. Translation:—Afterwards, the heritage of the sonless will be partaken by the uterine brothers. The daughters are also equally entitled; and if the father is alive, he also. See Vāch. quoting the Ratnākara to the same effect (p. 155).

* Vij. says the uterine brothers come in before half-brothers.

The Mayūkha (see above p. 80) and Aparārka do not hold the half-brothers to be on a par with uterine brothers; the former relegating them to the class of Gotraja 40 *Sapinda*s, where they share equally with the grandfather.

^a The pitāmahi (the father's mother) heads the list of gotrajas according to Vij. Vāch. (p. 153) would bring her in at the end of gotrajas.

The Mayūkha (p. 81, l. 25 above) then brings in the sister, and Bālabhāṭṭa the daughter-in-law after the grandmother.

* Aparārka takes by the term Bandhus only those who are termed Atmabandhus, and excludes the Pūribandhus and Mātribandhus. Vij. and the rest consider them as technical Bandhus, who succeed in the order mentioned by Baudhāyana.

Of these, on failure of the preceding, the next following in order is heir to the estate of one who has departed for heaven, leaving no putra.¹ This rule extends to all [males whether belonging or not to the four]² classes. [136.] [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. i., 2.]

137. [The heirs] who take the wealth of a Vānaprastha (a hermit), of a Yati (an ascetic), and a Brahmachārin (a student), are in their order,³ the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and one who is a supposed brother and belonging to the same order [Colebrooke, c. ii., s. viii., 1].

138. A reunited co-heir* [takes the wealth] of a reunited co-heir 10 [and] a uterine brother [that] of a uterine brother. [The reunited brother] shall give up the wealth of the deceased to one born [of his body], or [failing one such] shall retain it. [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. ix., 1.]

Between the Bandhus and the pupil, the Vir. (l. 209, p. 2) introduces the mother's brother and the like, holding the term Bandhus not to be restricted to the technical Bandhus.

¹ The word putra in this verse stands for son, son's son, son's son's son (see Vir. l. 198 p. 2 line 7 and Bālabhāṭṭa).

The Vir. (l. 210, p. 1) and the Mayūkhā (p. 83, l. 36 above), and Kamalākara are neutral, and only notice the conflicting interpretations.

Aparārka has given an entirely different construction which would imply that to any one of those mentioned in the first hemistich dying, those mentioned in the latter succeed, in the order stated therein.

⁴ Vij. defines a reunited co-heir to be one who having been separated is again united; and in virtue of a text of Bṛihaspati holds this reunion to be possible only in 30 the case of a father, brother or a father's brother. The text is as follows:—विभक्तो यः पुनः पित्रा भ्रात्रा वैकच संस्थितः। पितृव्येणाथवा प्रीत्या स तत्सदृष्ट उच्यते ॥ Translation:—He who being once separated, dwells again through affection with his father, brother, or paternal uncle, is said to be reunited with him. (See above p. 84, l. 24.)

Jīm. (p. 343), Aparārka, and Sūlapāni lay down the law to the same effect.

Vāchaspatimīra (p. 157), quoting this opinion as that of the Prakāsa, refutes it, holding that reunion is possible with any one from whom division is possible.

Jīm. (p. 313) and Aparārka and Vāch. (p. 157) do not consider this text as an exception 40 to vv. 135, 136, as Vij. (ch. ii. l. 61, p. 1), the Mayūkhā (p. 85, l. 36), the Vir. (l. 210, p. 2), Kam. and Mādhava do: holding that this applies in the case of the brother's succession. The result of this difference is that according to Jīm. and Aparārka the wife, the daughter, and the father are not excluded by even a reunited brother; while Vij. and the rest would give preference to a brother over the widow in a reunited family as in an undivided one.

The Mayūkhā (p. 86, l. 11 above) differs from Vij. only in considering that this text does not refer to a sonless deceased as vv. 135 and 136 do. Its object in so doing is to provide for the case where some sons are reunited and others are not.

139. One born of a different mother, if reunited, may take the wealth; but one born of a different mother and not reunited [cannot take]; but a uterine brother, even if not reunited, should obtain the wealth, and one born of a different mother, even if reunited, shall not take alone¹ [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. ix., 7].

140. An impotent person, an outcaste and his issue, one lame, a mad man, an idiot, a blind man, and [a person] afflicted with an incurable disease are [persons] not entitled to a share; and are to be maintained² [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. x., 1].

141. But their blameless sons, whether legitimate, or *īshetraja*³ 10 (the offspring by a kinsman) are entitled to inherit. Their daughters should be maintained until they are provided with husbands [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. x., 9, 12].

142. Their childless wives conducting themselves aright, should also be supported; but if they are unchaste, they should be expelled, and similarly those who are perverso⁴ [Colebrooke ch. ii., s. x., 14].

143. What was given [to a woman] by the father, the mother, the husband, or a brother,⁵ or received [by her] at the nuptial fire, or

¹ Vij. says that the relationship of a uterine brother and reversion are equally potent grounds to support the claim to succession in the case of a reunited deceased. 211

Sūlapāni notices another reading in the second quarter, which unlike Vij would give preference to a un-re-united uterine brother over even a re-united half-brother. The Vir. notices this reading with disapproval (l. 212. p. 2).

For the interpretation of the Mayūkhā see above, p. 87, l. 17.

² Vij. (ch. ii. l. 61, p. 2) adds to the list given here one who has entered into the third or fourth order, an enemy of his father, one who has committed a secondary sin, a deaf, or a dumb person, and one with a defective limb.

He further says (ch. ii. l. 62, p. 1) that the above disabilities operate as disqualifications, only if they exist prior to the division. If one so excluded should happen to be cured of the defects after partition, he would be entitled to his proper share in the same manner as a son born after partition. 30

Sūlapāni explains the term jaḥḥa to be one who is indifferent to religious observances; and andha (blind) to be one born blind. For Nīlakaṇṭha's view, see above p. 99, l. 18.

³ Vij. says the aurasa and kshetraja sons are specifically mentioned to exclude the other kinds of sons.

As to the opinion of the Mayūkhā, see above p. 102, lines 4 to 15.

presented on her supersession (Ālhyāvahanika), and the like¹ is denominated woman's property [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xi., 1].

144. That which is given [to the bride] by her *bandhus*² (kinsman), Śulka (the money taken as price by the parents of the bride), anvādheyaka (that which is conferred on the bride by the family of the bridegroom after the marriage ceremony),—these her kinsmen (bāndhus)³ take if she die without issue [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xi, 6, 8].

145. The property of a childless woman married in the Brāhma or any other [of the four approved forms of] marriage⁴ goes to her husband; in the remaining [four forms of marriage], it goes to her parents.⁵ But if she leave issue,⁶ it will go to her daughters⁷ [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. ii., 10].

The Mayūkha (p. 97, l. 11 above) differs, holding that property gained by a woman from the stated individuals only, and in the specified manner, is strīdhana, which is thus used in a technical sense.

20 Colebrooke renders the word ādya into "any other [separate] acquisition," for which there seems to be no authority; indeed, her separate acquisition in some instances, i. e. property gained by exercising mechanical arts, is expressly declared to be subject to the husband's power (see above p. 93, l. 20).

² Vij. understands by the term Bandhu here the technical Bandhus (ch. ii. l. 62, p. 2), Aparārka understands it in the general sense of a relation, such as the father's brother, &c.

Jīm. (p. 148) says it stands for the parents.

³ Vij. says that the *Bāndhava*s here noted are those that are mentioned in the next verse. Aparārka coincides with Vij.

30 Jīm. (p. 148) takes the word to be synonymous with brothers. Kamalākara agrees with Jīm.

⁴ The Vir. (l. 219, p. 1) interprets the words *Brāhmādikā*s as an atadgūṇasamvijnāna Bahuvrīhi, so as to make the succession mentioned in this hemistich applicable to five forms of marriage, including the Gāndharva.—This is done in conformity with a text of Manu (ch ix., v. 196):—आसद्देवार्णवैवापत्येय यदनम् । अजयामतीतार्णव भर्तुरेव तदिच्छते ॥ Jīm. (p. 145) agrees with this, but applies this text to wealth got by a woman at the time of marriage on the authority of Viśvarupa. Kamalākara notices the above text of Manu, and explains the difference by stating that a gift by the father alone at the Gāndharva marriage follows the rule relating to the approved forms. Aparārka holding Manu and Yāj. as here irreconcilable, makes the succession in the case of the approved forms optionally applicable to the Gāndharva marriage.

⁵ "Her parents":—The word is pitṛigāmi, and all agree in holding that the mother has precedence over the father in this case. See Mayūkha above p. 97, l. 34.

⁶ "Issue":—This refers to marriages of all forms alike. So say Vij. and Aparārka.

⁷ "Daughters":—The word is duhitṛiṇām, which Vij. construes into daughter's daughters; for, says he, the case of daughters is already provided for by v. 117.

Jīm. (p. 139) is opposed to this interpretation, as he considers that it is the sons who succeed in the absence of the daughters, and not the daughters' progeny.

50 Aparārka agrees with Jīm., while the Vir. sides with Vij. (l. 219, p. 2).

146. If a man, after having given his daughter, takes her [back],¹ he should be punished and compelled to pay the expenses, together with interest. If she die [after betrothal], the gifts may be taken [back] by the bridegroom, after the expenses on both sides have been deducted [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xi., 26, 29].

147. A husband² is not liable, unless he be willing³, to make good the property of his wife taken [by him] in a famine or for the performance of religious duties, or during illness, or while under restraint⁵ [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xi., 31].

148. To a superseded wife, [the husband] should give a sum equal 10 [to the expenses of the marriage]¹ by which she has been superseded, provided no stṛilhan (woman's property) had been bestowed on her; but if [any has been] assigned, *ardham*⁵ (half) [only] should be allotted [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xi., 34].

149. On denial of partition, the fact of the division may be established by [the testimony of] kinsmen,⁶ relatives,⁷ witnesses, documents, and houses or fields separately held [Colebrooke, ch. ii., s. xii., 1].

BOUNDARY DISPUTES.

150—151. In a dispute about the boundary of a field, all the neighbours, old men, and others, all the herdsmen, neighbouring cultivators, 20 and foresters [150],

² "A husband" :—Vij. says that any one other than a husband appropriating a woman's property under any circumstances shall be compelled to restore it. See Mayūkha above p. 94, l. 35.

³ "Under restraint" :—The word is sampratirodhake, which Vij., the Vīr (l. 216, p. 1) and Aparārka join in explaining as restraint put upon a person by the king Śālapāni considers the restraint to be one put upon a person by his creditor. 30

Vāch. (p. 141) construes the word as an adjective qualifying vyadha (in disease), so as to mean a disease that confines a man to his house or bed.

⁴ Vij. says the superseded wife should obtain as much as is bestowed on the second wife.

⁵ Vij. takes the word ardham here not as meaning exactly one half, but as a fraction generally.

See Mayūkha above p. 92, l. 26.

⁶ "Kinsmen" :—The word is jāti, which means, according to Jīm. (p. 359), the *sapinda*s, and according to Bālabhāṭṭa an unconnected person of the same caste.

⁷ "Relatives" :—The word is Bandhu. Vij. says it means the technical Bandhus 40 According to Bālabhāṭṭa it means the brothers in addition to the other Bandhus.

Jīm. (p. 359) considers that the order of eligible witnesses is here indicated. See Mayūkha p. 73, l. 10.

Should determine the boundary by observing the following marks, such as rising of the ground, charcoals, corn-husks, trees, water embankments, ant-hills, slopes, bones or heaps of stones.¹ [151].

152. Sūmantas (men of the neighbouring villages), or of that in which the disputed ground is situated, equal in number [from each village], being either four, eight, or ten, having put on a garland of red flowers and a red dress, and taking some earth [on their heads] shall point out the true boundary.²

153. If they tell lies, the king ought to punish each of them with the 10 middling penalty. In default of persons knowing, or of the aforesaid marks [of a boundary], the king should determine the boundary.³

154. It should be known that this procedure will apply, in the case of a garden, a warehouse,⁴ a village, a watering place, a pleasure garden, a house, a gutter [between two houses for] carrying rain-water, and the like.

155. For destroying boundary marks [of lands], for encroaching beyond the boundaries of lands, and for usurping lands, the fine is the lowest, the highest, and the middling [respectively].⁵

156. An embankment producing benefit should not be prohibited 20 [by the owner of the field] where the inconvenience is slight, and [similarly] a well which occupies but little space, and supplies abundance of water.⁶

157. If a man, without giving notice to the owner, set up an embankment round his [the owner's] field, the enjoyment of its profits is [the right] of the owner, or on failure of him, that of the king.⁷

158. He who [having undertaken to cultivate a field] does not do so himself, or through another, after having broken it by a ploughshare, should be compelled to pay [an equivalent of] the produce [obtainable] from the cultivation of the land; and the land should be allowed to be 30 cultivated by another.⁸

⁸ Manu ch. viii., vv. 245—266, corresponds with the present heading of boundary disputes.

THE MASTER AND THE HERDSMAN.

159. [The owner of] a she-buffalo doing damage to corn shall be fined eight *māshas*¹ [for each animal]; that of a cow, half of that; and that of a goat or sheep, a half of that [again].

160. [Again] for cattle eating and lying down in the field, the fine is double the [one] mentioned [above]. The fine is equal in the case of lands where grass or fuel is stored; and the fine for an ass or a camel is the same as that for a she-buffalo.²

161. As much corn as may be destroyed, shall be paid to the owner of the field; the herdsman shall be scourged, but the owner of 10 the cattle incurs the fine already declared.³

162. A herdsman is not guilty of an offence [if the cattle under his care], without any intention [on his part], [browse the crop standing] in a field [situated] by the side of a road, or a village pasture ground. [But] if the cattle be wilfully allowed to trespass, he should be punished as a thief.⁴

163. A seed-bull, beasts let loose [with a brand, in honour of the dead], beasts just delivered, straggling beasts and others, beasts which have no herdsman, beasts distressed by [the acts of] God or king—all these should be released 20

164. In the evening, a herdsman should return the beasts [to their respective owners] in the same condition in which they were entrusted to him]. A paid [herdsman] should be compelled to make good the beasts lost or killed by his negligence.

165. When injury is done [to animals] by the fault of the herdsman, the fine ordained for him is twelve paṇas and a half, and he should restore the thing [i. e. the animal] to the owner.⁵

166. [A piece of land can be set apart as a] pasture-ground, either by the will of the villagers or by the authority of the king. A twice-born can take grass, fuel, or flowers from any place as if they were his own. 30

167. A space should be left between one village and another village [measuring] one hundred Dhanush [or 400 cubits] in extent; measuring two hundred Dhanush around a country town, and four hundred Dhanush about a city.⁶

⁴ This refers to an unfenced field or pasture.

SALE WITHOUT OWNERSHIP.

168. A man can obtain [the possession of] his property sold by another. The buyer would be blameworthy if he bought it secretly. [He would be treated as a thief] if he bought it from a suspicious character, or in secret, or for an inadequate price, or at an unusual hour.

169. Having come by a thing lost or stolen, the owner should get the purchaser apprehended. In cases of inconvenience, owing to the distance [of officers] or [the want] of time, he shall apprehend [the purchaser] himself, and make him over [to the proper authorities].¹

10 170. When the seller [of a stolen thing] is pointed out, [the buyer] should be discharged. The owner will obtain his thing, the king his fine, and the buyer his price, from him who sold it.

171. Proof of a thing lost [or stolen] must be made [by the owner] by evidence of title or by possession; otherwise on failure of proof, he should pay the king a fine equal to a fifth part.²

172. He, who receives from the hand of another a thing stolen or lost, should be fined ninety-six panas, unless he has previously informed the king of it.

173. The owner of a thing lost or stolen which had been found by 20 customs officers or watchmen, shall take it [if claimed] within one year, after which the king shall retain it.³

174. The owner of stray animals must pay four panas, if the animal be of a species with single hoofs; five panas for human beings, two for every buffalo, camel, cow, or animal with cloven hoofs, but only a fourth for every goat or sheep.⁴

RESUMPTION OF GIFT.

175. Without causing detriment to the family property [everything] may be given except a wife and son. When a man has descendants

¹ Vij. notices and rejects another interpretation of this verse by Śāikara; which says 30 a purchaser being made aware that his purchase was the lost or stolen property of another, should get the vendor apprehended. If that is impossible owing to the vendors having fled to a distant country, or having been dead, he should make over the purchased commodity to the owner.

he should not give away the whole of his property ; nor [should he give away] a thing to one different from him to whom the promise was made.¹

176. An acceptance should be [made] openly ; particularly that of immovable property. That which is promised should be given without fail.² And that which is given should not be resumed.

RESCISSION OF PURCHASE.

177. The time allowed [to the vendee] for the examination of seeds, iron, beasts of burden, jewels, females, and milch beasts, is ten days, one day, five days, seven days, one month, three days, and a 10 fortnight respectively.

178. Gold is not reduced by fire ; silver loses two palas in the hundred ; tin and lead eight ; copper, five ; iron, ten.³

179. In the case of woollen and cotton yarns, the increase is ten palas in the hundred ; [so] in [cloth of] middling quality five, and in [cloth of] fine quality three [palas].⁴

180. A reduction of a thirtieth part is allowed in embroidered cloths and cloths made of hair. There is neither an increase nor a decrease in the case of silken cloths or barks.⁵

181. Where [a thing has] deteriorated, [the artizan] should certainly 20 be compelled to give [compensation] which [men], versed [in the nature] of those objects, may declare [proper] upon ascertaining the [nature of] the place and the time, the use [of the disputed object] and [its] durability or non-durability.⁶

BREACH OF A SERVICE-CONTRACT.

182. One enslaved by force, and also one sold by robbers, are released [from slavery].⁷ [A slave] who has saved the life of his master [deserves to be liberated]. [A slave can regain his liberty] by paying the expenses of maintenance or by paying him a ransom.⁸

⁶ See the corresponding verses in Manu ch. viii., vv. 222, 223.

⁸ Vij. says this applies in the case of a slave purchased, and there the amount of the ransom is the price originally paid with interest.

183. He who having become a Sannyāsīn (an ascetic) falls from that order, shall become the slave of the king for life.¹ Slavery is [lawful when the slave] is of an inferior class; not when he is of a higher class.

184. An apprentice, even when he has finished his mechanical education, should remain in his master's house for the stipulated period, receiving his maintenance from the master, and giving him the proceeds of his skilled labour.²

TRANSGRESSION OF A COMPACT.

185. A king, having built a house in his capital, and having lodged there an assemblage of Bráhmaṇas versed in the three Vedas, and furnished with means of livelihood, should say to them—'Protect virtue.'

186. Customary law, as well as usage established by kings, should be carefully upheld, if not inconsistent with [the revealed] law.³

187. Him who embezzles the property of the Gaṇa (a guild or a body), and him who violates their [established] usage, the king should banish from the realm after confiscating all his effects.⁴

188. The command of such members of a community as give out orders for the benefit of the [whole] body, should be obeyed by all. A member of that community who acts contrary [to the aforesaid command] should be compelled to pay the lowest fine.

189. A king should dismiss those who come to him for public business when they have done their work, after having worshipped them with gifts and honours.

190. What one obtains when sent on the business of a community, he should make over [to the community]. If he does not give it of his own accord, he should be compelled to pay it eleven-fold.

191. Men, versed in law, irreproachable, free from avarice, should be appointed to consider the business of a public body. What they say ought to be executed, when they issue commands for the benefit of the body.

192. The same law prevails in the case of Śrenis, Naiṣamās, Pāṇḍitins and Gaṇas. A king should preserve their peculiarities and conserve their practices.⁵

⁵ See the corresponding verses in Manu ch. viii., vv. 218—221.

NON-PAYMENT OF WAGES.

193. He, who, having received his wages, abandons the [undertaken] work, shall pay twice as much [to his master]; when no [wages are] received, [he] shall be made to pay [equal to the stipulated wages]. Servants should take care of the implements [of their work].

194. He, who, without settling the wages, employs another to work, should be compelled by the king to pay him a tenth part of the [profit arising from] trade, beasts, or grain.¹

195. He, who, by disregarding the time or the place, or in any other way, brings inadequate profits [to the master, shall be remunerated] 10 according to the pleasure of the master. When more [than a fair return to the master is] secured, something over and above [the stipulated wages] should be given.

196. When [an undertaken work] cannot be accomplished by both,² the wages shall be in proportion to the work done. Where it is accomplished, the stipulated [amount shall be paid].³

197. A utensil⁴ destroyed by [a servant] bearing it, shall be made good, save in cases of [destruction by an act] of God or the king. He who raises obstacles at the auspicious moment of starting shall forfeit twice the amount of his wages.⁵ 20)

198. If he raises obstacles after setting out, [he shall forfeit] the seventh part of his wages; and the fourth part if he desert on the way.⁶ [One abandoning his master] when only half way, shall be made to repay the whole [wages]; so also [that master] who causes [the servant] to give up work.⁷

GAMBLING AND PRIZE-FIGHTING.

199. The keeper of a gambling-house shall take from a gambler five per cent. when the wager is a hundred [panas or upwards], and ten per cent. in other cases.

200. Being well protected [by the king], he shall give the pro-30 mised share [of his gains] to the king; he shall recover the wager, and pay it to the winner, [and] being ever patient, [shall speak] the truth.⁸

² The word उभयौ; (of both) is used as illustrative of two or more than two : Vij.

³ This text applies where work has been undertaken by contract. Aparārka adds that it is immaterial to inquire how many labourers were employed.

⁸ Vij. says veracity is here enjoined to inspire confidence into the minds of gamblers. 40

201. [Payment of] that which has been won publicly in an assembly of gamblers in the presence of the master of a gaming house, and when the king's share has been paid, shall be enforced, but not otherwise.¹

202. The superintendents and witnesses in [gaming] transactions [should be] gamblers themselves. A man who plays with false dice, or by deceit, shall be branded and banished by the king.²

203. Gaming should be allowed under one supervision, as being a means³ of detecting thieves.

This very law should be understood to apply in the case of *Samāh-
10 vaya* [prize-fighting].⁴

ABUSE.

204. He, who, by true, untrue, or ironical [statements] ridicules persons wanting a limb, or an organ of sense, and the diseased, shall be fined twelve and a half panas.⁵

205. Any one abusing another thus—'I shall have criminal connexion with thy sister or thy mother,' shall be made by the king to pay a fine of twenty-five [panas].⁶

206. [The fine for abuse] of inferior' [people] is half [of the next preceding fine, viz., 25 panas]; and for abuse of others' wives or superiors, two-fold.⁸ [In all other cases, the amount of] fine is to be determined according to the superior or inferior varṇa (class) or jāti (caste)⁹ [of the abuser and the abused].

207. In cases of the abuse of one of a superior class, the fine is two-fold and three-fold [respectively], and of one of a lower class it is to be reduced in the ratio of one-half [according to the class of the abused].¹⁰

⁷ In character or qualifications.

⁸ That is, fifty panas.

⁹ Vij. and Śūlapāṇi say that varṇa means the four classes, such as Brāhmaṇas, &c.; and jāti means a caste such as a mādhā vasikta, &c.

¹⁰ Vij., interpreting this verse (which by itself is obscure) by the light of Manu's texts, says the first hemistich refers only to the case of a Brāhmaṇa abused by a Kshatriya or Vaiśya. The fine in the case of a Kshatriya being abused by a Vaiśya or a Śūdra, or in the case of a Vaiśya by a Śūdra, is to be determined by analogy. The substance of the whole comment on this verse is:—A Kshatriya, a Vaiśya, or a Śūdra abusing a Brāhmaṇa will be punished with a fine of 100 and 150 panas, and beating or mutilation respectively. A Vaiśya or a Śūdra abusing a Kshatriya is fined 100 and 150 panas respectively. A Śūdra abusing a Vaiśya is fined 100 panas. A Brāhmaṇa abusing a Kshatriya, a Vaiśya or a Śūdra shall be fined 50, 25, and 12½ panas respectively. A Kshatriya abusing a Vaiśya or a Śūdra is fined 50 and 25 panas respectively. Lastly, a Vaiśya abusing a Śūdra is fined 50 panas.

208. Let a fine to the amount of a hundred paṇas be inflicted for abuse, threatening injury to the arm, neck, eyes, or thigh; and the half of it for like abuse to the foot, nose, ears, the hand, or the like.¹

209. If this [imprecatory threat] were uttered by a feeble person, he should be fined ten paṇas, but if by one able [to carry the threat into execution], he should be also required to give security for the safety of the person [threatened].²

210. In the case of abuse [involving] degradation from caste, the fine is [that for a] middle sāhasa (offence); [in the case of abuse involving an accusation of] a secondary sin, [the abuser] shall be m. dc 10 to pay the fine for the lowest sāhasa.

211. The highest fine shall be for him who abuses a Brāhmaṇa learned in the three Vedās, the king, or the gods.³ [In the case of abuse] of the caste or the Pāga (community), [the fine] is [that for] the middle sāhasa; and [in the case of that] of the village or the district, [the fine] is [that for] the lowest sāhasa.⁴

ASSAULT.

212. In the case of a beating to which there are no witnesses, the determination should be made by marks, circumstantial inferences,⁵ popular report, and the like⁶; lest the marks should be [entirely] 20 counterfeited.

213. A fine of ten paṇas is recorded [as] the punishment for throwing ashes, mud, or dust on a person; double that sum, for throwing at him filth, the heel or the spittle.⁷

214. This [holds, if an offence be committed] against one of the same [class]. But [if the offence be committed] against the wife of another or against one of a higher class, [the fine shall be] doubled; if against one of an inferior class, half the fine; if committed through aberration of the intellect, drunkenness, or the like, no fine shall be inflicted.⁸

215. The limb with which any one not himself a Brāhmaṇa, gives 30 pain to a Brāhmaṇa, shall be cut off. The lowest amercement is laid down, [if the limb or weapon is only] raised: and half of it, if the Brāhmaṇa is touched with the weapons.⁹

216. For holding up [threateningly] a hand or a foot, the punishment shall be ten and twenty [pañās] [respectively]. The middle scale of punishment is declared for all classes for mutual pointing of weapons.¹

217. The [fine] of ten pañās [shall be inflicted] for violent pulling of the foot, the hair, the clothes, or the hand [of another]; a hundred, for violently pulling a man caused to be tied in his clothes, and trampling him under foot.²

218. The man who causes pain [to another] with a stick or the like, without shedding blood, shall be fined thirty-two pañās; double that 10 sum, if blood be shed.³

219. The middle fine [shall be imposed] for breaking a hand, a foot, or a tooth; for tearing the ears or the nose; for laying open a sore, and likewise for beating one till he is almost dead.⁴

220. In the case of restraint in respect of motion, feeding or speaking; and of injury to the eye and the like, and fracture of the neck, the arm, or the thigh, [the fine is that for] the middle sāhasa.

221. When several assault a single person, their fine [shall be] double [the fines] already mentioned.⁵ That which was taken during the scuffle shall be restored; and a fine [of] twice [the amount shall 20 be paid in addition].

222. He who [in an assault] inflicts a [bodily] injury, shall pay the expenses of cure, as well as the fine that is laid down for the assault [committed].

223. He who strikes, perforates, breaks or demolishes a wall shall be made to pay five, ten, twenty pañās, and [all these together⁶ with] the expenses [of reconstruction respectively].

224. One throwing into the house [of another] a thing [likely to produce] bodily injury⁷ should be made to pay sixteen pañās; and one similarly [throwing] a thing dangerous to life⁸ is fined [in the] middle 30 amercement.

225. For giving pain, drawing blood, cutting off the branches [as horns, &c.] or a limb, the fine shall be from two pañās upwards, in the case of minor quadrupeds.⁹

³ This fine will be for each assaulter separately, see Vīr. l. 146, p. 2.

⁴ Aparārka says in the case of the demolition of a wall there is no punishment, but only compensation to the owner. Śūlapani lays down that in addition to the compensation there is to be a fine of 20 pañās. The Vīr. (l. 142, p. 2) agrees with Vīj. in 40 making the fine to be 35 pañās.

⁹ Such as poison, a venomous snake, &c.

226. For cutting off their organs of generation, and causing death, the middle amercement shall be paid [in addition to] their value. A double punishment shall be imposed in the case of [similar injury to] superior animals.¹

227. In the case of 'njury to the branches, or the trunk, or the uprooting of trees which throw down branches,² or which are the means of livelihood,³ the fine is twenty, and twofold [of the preceding fine for the offence next in order].⁴

228. In the case of [injury] to trees growing in a sacrificial place, a cemetery, a boundary, a sacred place, or a temple, and trees well 10 known,⁵ the fine is twofold.

229. In the case of injury in the aforementioned parts to gulma, guchhha, kshupa, latā (a creeper), pratāna (a creeper without offshoots or knots), oshadhi (small plants bearing fruit like paddy), and virudh (plants which grow again after being cut), the fine is half of that before mentioned.⁶

SÁHASA (HEINOUS OFFENCES).

230. When common [as well as another's] property is forcibly carried away, that [act] is called sáhasa (a heinous offence). The fine [in such a case] is [ordinarily] twice the value [of the thing taken away], 20 but fourfold when the offence is [denied].⁷

231. He who causes the commission of a sáhasa (a heinous offence), shall be made to pay a double fine; and he who does the same by saying—'I will give [such a reward]' shall be made to pay quadruple the amount.⁸

232—233. For him who abuses or disobeys the venerable, who beats his brother's wife, who does not give what is promised, who breaks open a house sealed, [232]

Or who does an injury to his neighbour, or his blood relations, or the like,⁹ the fine is fifty panas. This is the invariable rule. [233.] 30

² Such as the Banyan tree.

³ Such as mango trees and the like.

⁴ That is to say the fine is twenty, forty, and eighty respectively.

⁵ Such as Ficus Indica and Ficus Religiosa, which are worshipped by Hindus.

⁶ For the distinctions between the various kinds of plants here mentioned see Mit. ch. ii., l. 81, p. 1; and Vir. l. 148, p. 1.

⁹ Vij. includes the co-villagers and fellow-countrymen.

234—237. He who wantonly¹ consorts with a widow, who does not run upon [hearing] a halloo [for succour], who needlessly halloos [for aid], he who being a Chāṇḍāla, touches men of the higher [classes], [234]:

Who feeds a Śūdra ascetic² [of the fourth order] on religious or obsequial [occasions], who pronounces an improper oath, who [although] disqualified performs religious rites; [235]

Who destroys the virility of bullocks³ or inferior quadrupeds,⁴ who conceals common [property], who destroys the foetus of a female slave, 10 [236]

[Or] whoever being the father, and the son, the sister and the brother, the husband and the wife, and the preceptor and the pupil abandon each other when not degraded shall be fined a hundred [paṇas]. [237.]

238. A washerman wearing the garments of another shall be fined three paṇas; and in cases of a sale, hiring out, pledge, or a loan on request, ten paṇas.⁵

239. For witnesses in a feud between the father and the son, the fine is three paṇas; [and] for him who engages himself therein,⁶ the 20 fine is eight-fold [i.e. 24 paṇas].⁷

240. He who issues false balances, false royal mandates, false measures, and false coin, as well as he who adopts them [knowing them to be false,], shall be [liable] to the highest fine.

241. That a payer of coin who pronounces a genuine [coin] false, and a false one genuine, shall be made to pay the highest fine.

242. A quack, falsely [setting himself up as a physician] treats the lower animals, [ordinary] people, or officers of the king, shall be amerced in the lowest, the middling, and the highest fine [respectively].⁸

¹ By the use of the word wantonly, the cases where such intercourse is sanctioned 30 by the practice of niyoga are excluded.

² Vij. reads बृहस्पतिना, so as to mean 'a Śūdra feeds an ascetic,' &c.; but Aparārka adopts the interpretation given above, which agrees with the text in most of the copies consulted.

³ Vij. here notices a reading of वृक्ष (tree) instead of वृक (a bull), and says that in the case of a tree, the injection of assafœtida and such substances brings about the barrenness of that tree. This reading is adopted by Śūlapāṇi.

⁴ Such as goats.

⁶ "antarā-cha" &c.—As by being a surety or fomenting the quarrel: Vij.

40 ⁷ Vijñāneśvara adds that those who similarly dabble into and encourage disputes between the husband and the wife, and the master and the pupil, should be similarly punished.

⁸ Vijñāneśvara adds that just as the punishment varies according to the rank of the men treated, so should there be a similar distinction among the lower animals treated according to their value or the rank of their master.

243. He who restrains one not deserving to be restrained, or lets off [who was specially] called up, before the purpose [for which he was called] is accomplished,¹ shall be made to pay the highest fine.

244. He who abstracts one-eighth share [of an article sold] by a [false] measure or balance, shall be fined two hundred [paṇas]; where a greater or a lower [share is abstracted], a proportionately [higher or lower fine should be imposed].

245. He who adulterates with inferior [articles], vendible medicines, oils, salt, perfumes, corn, coarse sugar and the like, shall be made to pay sixteen paṇas. 10

246. When [by some operation] inferior earth, hide, gem, yarn, iron, wood, bark, or cloth is made [to appear to be of] a superior kind, the fine is eight-fold of the [commodity] to be sold.

247. He who pledges or sells a sealed casket [fraudulently] substituted [for a superior casket shewn], or the counterfeit of a natural vessel,² shall be fined [in the following manner].

248. [When the value of the thing palmed on the buyer, or a pledge is] less than a paṇa, the fine is fifty [paṇas]; [when] a paṇa, one hundred [paṇas]; [when] two paṇas, two hundred [paṇas]; when the value is higher, [the fine is] higher. 20

249. For those who knowing whether [the price set by them] is higher or lower [than the maximum rates fixed by the king] unite in fixing a price too heavy for Kārus (workmen) and Silpīnāḥ (artisans), the fine is the highest.

250. For those traders who conspire to obstruct [the sale of a commodity by demanding it], or selling it at an improper price, the highest fine is laid down.

251. The sale or purchase [of articles] should every day be made at the rates fixed by the king; the profit derived in this manner is declared [to be] propitious for traders. 30

252. A trader shall make five per cent as profit on commodities of the same country, and ten [per cent] on the foreign, if the purchase

¹ Aparārka does not make apṛāptavyavākara an adjective of Banddhya, but makes up the sense by adding vādinam (plaintiff) after the word, so that according to him there are three offences here mentioned, and not two as Vij. would have it.

² Such as the bag or skin of the musk-deer containing the musk : Vij.

³ Vij. gives a washerman as an instance of a kāru and a painter as an instance of a silpīn. Kullūka gives a cook as an instance of a kāru, so that the difference between a kāru and a silpīn seems to be that the latter by his labour gives the material he works on a value quite disproportionate to the original value of the thing; while the workmanship of the former is not so valuable. See also the gloss on v. 5, varga 10, kāṇḍa ii., Amarakoṣa, where the difference is and sale take place immediately, [i. e. on the same day as that of the purchase].¹

253. The rates should be so fixed [by the king] as to be advantageous both to the buyer and the seller after adding to the [cost] value of the commodity, the expenses incurred.²

254. He who having received the price of a vendible thing, does not deliver it to the buyer, shall be caused to deliver it together with udaya [i. e. either profit or interest], and if [the purchaser] be one come from a foreign country, also the profit which would have accrued 10 to him in that foreign country.³

255. A commodity once sold may be sold again, if the purchaser should not desire to take it; when the first purchaser not having received it [when offered] it is [afterwards] destroyed,⁴ that loss [being] due to a default [on the part] of the purchaser, shall be [borne] by the purchaser.

256. If a commodity, which [though sold] was not delivered on demand, [and if it] be injured by an act of God or the king, the loss shall fall on the vendor.⁵

257. Where [one] sells [a thing] previously sold to another, [or sells a thing] with blemishes, as [one] without a blemish, the fine is 20 twice the value [of the article].⁶

258. No trader shall recede from a sale, unless he has grounds to complain of ignorance [that his bargain has been] too cheap or too dear. He who does [so recede without such ground] shall be liable to a fine of one-sixth of the value of the article].⁷

¹ Vij. says this text affords a clue as to how maximum rates should be fixed by a king in respect of indigenous commodities. The rates of profit here laid down are to be adopted only if a purchased commodity does not lie on the hands of a trader for any length of time; in which case the profits may rise according to the rate of interest. Aparārka agrees with this view.

30 ² Vij. refers this verse to foreign commodities, and says that their rates are to be so fixed as to leave a profit of ten per cent to the trader on the price of the article, added to the expenses of going to and returning from the foreign country, paying tolls, &c.

* Vij. adds 'by an act of God or the sovereign'

⁷ Vij. says that the grounds justifying a rescission of sale are three, viz. —I., ignorance of the vendor in selling a thing too cheap; II., ignorance of the purchaser in offering to pay an exorbitant price; and III., the discovery of some blemish in the article purchased. Save in these cases a contract of sale once made cannot be rescinded; see also Vir. l. 134, p. 2; see the corresponding verses in Manu ch. viii., vv. 278—301.

CONCERNS AMONG PARTNERS.

259. Among traders¹ who work for profit in partnership, the profit and the loss [are adjusted] according to [their shares in the entire] capital; or according to the agreement.

260. If a partner does what the others forbid or disapprove, or if he injures common property by his negligence, he should make good the damages; but he who preserves it from [robbers or other] misfortune, should receive a tenth part of it [as his reward].²

261. The king shall take as a tax a twentieth share of the price [of a commodity] fixed [by him]. [A thing specially ordered to be] reserved 10 by or worthy of a king, shall, if sold [to a stranger], belong to the king.³

262. He who falsely declares the quantity [of the articles of sale],⁴ who withdraws himself from the place of [collecting] a tax, and he who purchases or sells fraudulently,⁵ shall be made to pay eight times [the value of the commodity].

263. A marine officer, levying a land cess, shall be made to pay ten paṇas. The same [fine shall be levied], in the case of the non-invitation of Brāhmaṇas and prātireśyas (people born in one's neighbourhood).

264. The wealth of a [trader] dying abroad shall be taken by his heirs,⁶ Bāndhavas,⁷ kinsmen, or [his copartners] who may have come; 20 and failing these by the king.

265. A man of crooked ways should be expelled [by the other partners] without profit; a partner unable to act may appoint another man to act for him.⁸ In this manner is laid down the law for sacrificers, agriculturists, and artisans.⁹

THEFT.

266. A thief is apprehended by detectives, [either as one in possession of] the lost article, or [as one to whom the theft has been] traced,

³ Meaning that the king may take it without paying for it.

⁴ With a view to evade the full payment of his share of taxation.

⁵ The word is savyāja which Vij. says refers to the sale of a commodity of disputed ownership.

Aparārka and Śūlapāni say that a sale effected furtively, or at an improper hour in order to deceive the tax-gatherer, is here meant.

or [as one] notorious for previous offences, or as one who lives in unknown¹ places.

267—268. Others should [similarly] be apprehended on suspicion, [such as] those who conceal their caste or names, who are addicted to gambling, treachery, or drinking, whose [face] loses colour and voice falters, [267]

Who make [idle] enquiries about another's wealth and houses, who live unobserved, who spend much without having [any means of] livelihood, and who sell lost articles. [268.]

- 10 269. If [he who has been] apprehended on suspicion do not clear himself [from that suspicion], he shall be made² to give the stolen article,³ and shall be liable to the punishment of a thief.

270. Having caused restitution of the stolen property, the king shall cause the thief to be punished by different modes of corporeal punishment. A Bráhmaṇa [guilty of theft] should be branded and banished from the kingdom.⁵

271. The blame attaches to the village officer in the case of a murder or theft in his village until some trace [of the offence] is found; to the owner of the pasture ground, [for offences in his pasturage]; to 20 the detectives of thieves, [in case of offences] on a highway, or [in places] other than pastures.

272. A village shall pay when [the theft takes place] within its limits, or that village to which the trace is carried. If [the theft be committed] beyond one krośa (two miles) [from any village], [the communities of] five surrounding villages or even of ten villages [shall pay].⁴

273. [The king] shall cause to be impaled on a stake Bandigráha (sacriligious house-breakers), likewise those who steal horses and elephants and also violent murderers.⁵

274. The tongs [i. e. the forefinger and index] of the hands of 30 pickpockets and cut-purses should be cut off [for the first offence]; for the second offence, they should be deprived of a hand or a foot.⁶

275. In the case of the theft of inferior, middling and superior articles, the fine shall be according to the value [of the article stolen]. In passing sentence, the place, the time, and the age and the ability [of the offender] shall be considered.

276. To him who knowingly supplies food, place, fire, water, council, appurtenances, and [loans for] expenditure, to a thief or a murderer, the fine shall be the highest.

² Where the stolen article is not forthcoming, its restoration will be by valuation.

277. The fine for a blow with a weapon, and for causing abortion,¹ [is] the highest. In the case of the killing of a man or a woman, the fine shall be the highest or the lowest [according to the circumstances and character of the offender].

278. A woman who is superlatively wicked, who destroys² males, who breaks reservoirs, shall, if not pregnant, be plunged into the water after being tied to a stone.

279. A woman who poisons [people] or burns [villages or houses], or kills her husband, preceptor or children, shall be deprived of her ears, hands, nose, and lips, and be killed by bullocks.³ 10

280. When [one] is killed by an undetected [person], enquiry as to the enmity [of the deceased] should be made of his sons and relations, as also of adulterous women in his house separately.

281. [It should be enquired] whether [the deceased] was a lover of women, wealth, or vritti (allowances); and with whom he went abroad. [So also should] enquiry [be] slowly [prosecuted] of people⁴ in the vicinity of the place of murder.

282. Those who set fire to a field,⁵ a house, a forest, a village, a pasture ground, a threshing floor; and those who carnally know the wives of the king, should be burnt in a fire of grass.⁶ 20

ADULTERY.

283. A man should be caught in the very act of adultery; or while holding each other's hairs, or by other signs of excitement, or by the admissions of both.⁷

284. He who touches the knot of the lower garment, the breasts, the upper garment, the thighs, and the hair [of a woman]; who holds conversation with her at an improper place and time; or who closets with her [should be apprehended].

285. A woman [erring after] being forbidden should be fined one hundred [panas], and a man [under similar circumstances] two hun- 30

² The reading here adopted by Aparārka includes the woman who procures abortion.

dred; where the prohibition [has been laid] on both, their punishment is the same as [that] for adultery.¹

286. [For intercourse with one] of an equal class, the highest fine may be imposed; [with a woman] of a lower class, the middling [fine]; and [with one] of a higher class, death [in the case] of the man, and the lopping of ears or other [limbs] in the case of the woman.²

287. He who kidnaps a maiden of the same class shall be fined in the highest amercement if the maiden be adorned,³ and in the lowest, in other cases. Death is laid down [for this offence] towards a superior class.

- 10 288. In the case of willing maidens of inferior classes, there is no offence, but, if otherwise, there will be a fine.⁴ He who defiles [a maiden] shall have his hand cut; and [he shall lose] his life if she be of a higher class.

289. He who utters a [true] slander against an [unmarried] woman shall pay a hundred [paṇas]; but for a false accusation [he shall pay] two hundred. For connexion with a beast he shall be made to pay a hundred, and the middling fine for connexion with a distressed woman or a cow.⁵

290. A man [having intercourse] with an avaruddhā (protected female 20 slave) and Bhujishyā [another's mistress] shall be required to pay a fine of fifty paṇas, even though intercourse with them be [in other respects] permissible.⁶

291. For forcible connexion with a Dāsī,⁷ the fine is declared to be ten paṇas; when several [have a forcible connexion] with an unwilling Dāsī, the fine for each is twenty-four paṇas.

292. A prostitute who has received her wages, shall, if unwilling, be made to pay twice as much. Similarly if the man [after payment of the wages] be unwilling, he shall forfeit [his advance].

293. If a man have intercourse with a woman in an improper part, 30 or make water, or void excretion,⁸ he shall be fined twenty-four paṇas; so also he who has connexion with a female devotee.⁹

294. If a man have connexion with an Antyā woman, he should be branded with an obscene mark, and banished. If a Sūdra [act in such a manner], he is similarly liable to be branded. But if an Antyā have connexion with an Ārya woman,¹⁰ he shall be put to death.

MISCELLANEOUS.

295. He who either omits or adds anything in writing to the king's edicts, or he who allows an adulterer or a thief to escape, [shall suffer] the highest amercement.¹

296. He who defiles a Bráhmaṇa, a Kshatriya, a Vaiśya, or a Śúdra by feeding him with things not fit to be eaten, shall be [respectively] amerced with fine for the highest, the middling, and the lowest Sáhasa and half [of the last].²

297. He who deals in false gold [as pure], and he who sells unclean meat, should be maimed and compelled to pay the fine for the 10 highest Sáhasa.³

298. There shall be no offence in any injury caused by means of a quadruped, [a log of] wood, [a clod of] earth, a stone, an arm, or a yoked beast [if the user or driver thereof] was crying aloud 'Be away.'⁴

299. In the case of a death [caused] by a conveyance, owing to the nose-string [of the animals] having given way, or the yoke and the like having been broken, or [the animals] backing, the owner shall not [be deemed to] be at fault.

300. The master of any animals, whether possessed of teeth or horns, who, having the power, still fails to relieve [any one in pain from it 20 when attacked], shall be fined in the lowest amercement, and in double [that amount] if the sufferer likewise cry out [for help] beforehand.⁵

301. He who charges a gallant as a thief, shall be made to pay five hundred [paṇas] as a punishment. For him who taking money [from him] lets him go, eight times its amount is ordained [as the fine].⁶

302. The king should banish after cutting out his tongue that man who imprecates evil against him, who calumniates him, or who divulges his secret counsels.⁷

303. The punishment of him who sells what was on a dead body, and likewise of him who strikes his preceptor, and of him who seats 30 himself in the king's carriage or throne, is the highest amercement.⁸

304. The punishment of him who puts out both eyes [of another], who performs acts forbidden by the king, or who being a Śúdra lives as a Bráhmaṇa, shall be eight hundred [paṇas].⁹

PRĀYAS'CHITTĀDHYĀYA.

CHAPTER [III.]—ON PENANCES.

IMPURITIES.

1. A [deceased child] less than two years old, should be interred. No water should be offered. Any other deceased should be followed to the funeral ground by his kinsmen.

2. He should be burnt with ordinary fire [by the followers] muttering hymns, [metrical as well as prose, and [sacred to] Yama. If initiated, he should be burnt like one who keeps the domestic fires, as far as possible. 10

3. Before the seventh or the tenth day, the kinsmen should go to a stream, citing the hymn commencing with apa nah śośuchat agham, (away our glaring sin, &c.) and facing the south.

4. Similarly water should be offered to the deceased mother, father and the religious preceptor. To offer water to a deceased friend, married [daughter or sister], son of a sister, father-in-law, and a sacrificial priest, is optional.

5. [Pronouncing] the name and the gotra [of the deceased], [but] uttering nothing [else], the kinsmen, except Brahmachārins and outcasts, should [each] offer water-libation once [to the departed]. 20

6. Men should neither observe impurity on account of the death of, nor offer libations of water to such [of their kinsmen] as are heretics; or have not embraced any of the [four] orders; or are thieves or females who have murdered their husbands, or prostitutes and the like, addicted to drinking; or have committed suicide.

7. When [the kinsmen of the deceased] have finished offering libations, bathed, emerged [from the stream], and taken their seats on a soft grass plot, [the old] should argue them out of grief, by means of narrations of bygone times.

8. He, who seeks for anything eternal in [this] human life, which 30 is as feeble as the stem of a plantain-tree, and as [evanescent] as a bubble of water, is under a delusion.

9. What ground is there for lamenting, if a body, created out of the five elements by reason of actions performed in a former life, is restored to the five elements.

10. [Even] the earth, the sea, and the gods are to go to destruction. How, then, can the world of mortals, which is [transitory] like foam, not go to destruction.

11. As the departed soul is compelled to swallow the phlegm and tears cast by his kinsmen, they should not lament, but perform obsequial ceremonies according to their power.

12—18. Having listened to these consoling arguments, they should go home, the children walking before. At the door of the house, restraining their grief, eating the leaves of Nimba, [12]

Sipping water, touching fire, water, cow-dung, white mustard-seed, and the like, and placing a foot on a stone, they should slowly enter the house. [18.]

10 14. Performance of the obsequial ceremonies, such as entrance into the house, is incumbent even upon strangers who have touched a dead body. If desirous of instantaneous purity, they can have it, by performing ablutions and Prāṇāyāma (suppression of breath).

15. A Brahmacārin, even after having carried [the corpse of] his religious preceptor, parents or family priest, has his sanctity inviolate. He should not partake of the food prepared by his impure kinsmen ; nor should he live with them.

16. [The kinsmen of the deceased] should subsist, during impurity, on provisions bought, or supplied ; and sleep on the ground apart 20 from each other. For three days they should offer food to the departed in the manner prescribed for the performance of Piṇḍayajña (offering rice-balls).

17 On the first day, water and milk should be suspended in the air, [each] in a [separate] earthen pot. Ceremonies sacred to the sacrificial and domestic fires should be performed as directed by the Vedas.

18. Impurity on account of the death [of a kindred] is desired to extend either over three or ten days ; and [that on the death of a child] less than two years old [affects] the parents only, even as the impurity arising from the birth of a child [affects] the mother alone.

30 19. Impurity on account of birth affects the parents only. In the case of the mother, [however,] such impurity lasts long, until the cessation of the flow of blood. The day [of the birth of a child] must not be looked upon as unholy ; for [it is a day on which one of the] forefathers is again brought into existence.

20. When birth or death takes place during [a similar impurity already commenced], [the man] will be purified at the end of the remaining period of the first impurity. Impurity arising to the mother from miscarriage, terminates after the lapse of as many nights as the months [of pregnancy].¹

10 ¹ According to Vij. and Śūlapāṇi, this rule applies if the miscarriage is before the seventh month of pregnancy.

21. That impurity is transitory which attaches to a man on account of the death of such of his Sapiṇḍas as are killed by their sovereign, or a cow,¹ or a Brāhmaṇa,² or as have committed suicide. In the case of a [Sapiṇḍa] gone on a travel [and dying abroad], impurity lasts for the remaining portion [of the usual period of ten days]. After the full [period], [a twice-born shall be] purified by offering libations of water [to the deceased].

22. On account of the birth or death [of a Sapiṇḍa], a Kṣatriya should observe impurity for twelve days, a Vaiśya for fifteen days, a Śūdra for thirty days; but a Śūdra, leading a pious life, for fifteen days. 10

23. Impurity on account of a Sapiṇḍa child dying before teething is ordained to be momentary; that on account of a Sapiṇḍa child dying after teething and before tonsure, one night; and after tonsure, and before Upanyana, three nights; and in all other cases the impurity lasts for ten days.

24. Impurity lasts for one day on account of the death of an unmarried daughter, or an infant child, or a religious preceptor, or a pupil, or an Anūchāna (the reciter of the Veda with its anṣa), or a maternal uncle,³ or a Śrotriya.⁴

25. Impurity on account of the death of sons other than a legitimate 20 one of unchaste wives or of the sovereign of the place of residence lasts for one day.

26. A Brāhmaṇa should in no case follow [the dead body of] a twice-born,⁵ or of a Śūdra; if he does follow, he becomes pure by bathing in a stream, touching fire, and swallowing clarified butter.

27—28. Sovereigns are exempt from impurity. Impurity never arises from the death of one killed by lightning, or in a battle for the sake of Brāhmaṇas and cows, or to a man indispensably needed by the sovereign; [27]

So also to sacrificers, and the host of the sacrifice as being engaged 30 in a sacrificial ceremony, to those who give food to travellers,⁶ to those who have commenced any rites, to Brāhmacharins, to those who give in charity, and to those of the fourth order. [28.]

29. Impurity is momentary [on occasions of a pre-arranged] charity, or a marriage ceremony, or a sacrificial ceremony, or a battle, or when one's country is overwhelmed by a calamity, or himself plunged in a great difficulty.

⁶ The keepers of Anasatras: Vij.

30. Touched by a woman when in her monthly course, or by impure persons, a man should bathe, or sip water, reciting the mantras (Vedic formulas) sacred to water, and once muttering the Gáyatri.

31. Time, fire, religious ceremonies, earth, wind, mind, knowledge, religious austerities, water, repentance, and fasts—all these are causes of purity.

32. Charity is the purifier of those who do prohibited actions; velocity that of a river; earth and water those of unclean things, and Sannyása (entrance into the fourth order) that of the twice-born.

10 33. The recitation of the Veda is the purifier of those who know the Vedas; forgiveness that of the learned; water that of the body; muttering [of Vedic verses], that of those whose sins are concealed; and truth that of the mind.

34. Religious austerities and self-knowledge are the purifiers of the soul; knowledge that of the intellect; knowledge of God is deemed to be the pre-eminent purifier of the soul.¹

DUTIES UNDER DISTRESS.

35. Under distressed circumstances, a Bráhmaṇa may maintain himself by following the military or the mercantile callings. Having 20 surmounted [the distress], he should get purified and resume his proper occupation.²

36—39. Fruits, [precious] stones, linen cloth, the soma-plant, a human being, sweetmeat, creepers, sesamum seed, cooked rice, juices, salts, curds, milk, clarified butter, water, [36]

Weapons, liquors, wax, honey, lákshá (sealing-wax), and kúśa-grass, earth, hides, flowers, blankets, hair, buttermilk, poisons, land, [37]

Silken cloth, indigo, salt, flesh, single-hoofed animals, lead, vegetables, green medicinal plants, oil-cake, [wild] beasts, and also perfumes—[38]

30 These [a Bráhmaṇa] though living by the calling of a Vaiśya, shall never sell. For religious purposes a man may barter sesamum seed for an equal quantity of grain. [39.]

40 The sale of lákshá (sealing-wax), salt or flesh is a ground for being outcast, and that of milk, curds, or liquors, degrades the class.³

² Vij. says the rule here laid down is general, and permits any man under difficulties to follow the occupation of a class lower than his own.

³ i. e. A twice-born becomes a Śúdra.

41. A Bráhmaṇa reduced to want does not incur sin by accepting gifts from, or partaking of food prepared by, any man whatsoever; for he resembles¹ the fire and the sun.

42. Agriculture, manual arts, service, tuition, usury, [letting] carriages, [selling grass and fuel fetched from] mountains, winning the favour [of the rich], cultivation of marshy land, [asking support of] the king, and begging alms, are means of livelihood for a man in distress.

43. A man should suffer starvation for three days, and pay than rob anybody, except a Bráhmaṇa, of grain. Having so taken it away, 10 he should, when asked, honestly confess it.

44. Having made an inquiry as to the conduct, pedigree, character, proficiency in the Śástrás and the Vedas, religious austerities and the family of such a man, the king should enable him to live by honest means of livelihood.²

THE DUTIES OF A VÁNAPRASTHIA (A HERMIT).

45. Desirous of leading the life of a hermit, a twice-born, having entrusted his wife to the care of his son, or been followed by her, should go to a forest, taking along with him the sacrificial and the domestic fires, [and] abstaining from all sexual intercourse. 20

46. There, allowing hair to grow on his face, head, and other parts of his body, and keeping under control his desires and affections, he should gratify the fires, the manes, the gods, guests and servants, by [grain] not produced in a ploughed field.

47. There he should accumulate [only such a store of] food as would suffice [for him] for a day, a month, six months, or a year. Any accumulation [in excess of the above] should be spent in the month of Áśvina.

48. He should restrain his passions, bathe thrice every day, abstain from accepting gifts, study the Vedas, practise charity, and seek the 30 welfare of all creatures.

49. He should use his teeth instead of a mortar [for unhusking edible grains]; subsist on things ripening in their [due] season; use stone slabs [for pounding]; and use oil extracted from fruits in performing [religious rites ordained by] the Śrutis and the Smritis and for secular purposes.

² See the corresponding verses in Manu ch. x., vv. 81—131.

50. He should perpetually observe chândrâyanas or Krichchhras;¹ and should eat once a fortnight, or once a month, or every day after sunset.

51. At night, with a pure heart, he should sleep on the ground. He should pass the day, either by walking about, or by now standing, now sitting, and now roaming, or by the practice of yoga (meditation).

52. In the hot season he should sit in the midst of sacred fires. In the rainy season he should sleep on an [unprotected] piece of ground. In the cold season he should wear wet garments; or [when 10 unable to do these], he should perform religious austerities according to his power.

53. He should be equally disposed towards him who torments him with thorns, and towards him who anoints him with sandal-powder, by not manifesting anger or good will respectively.

54. Or having put the sacred fires within himself, he should seek shelter under a tree, subsist on a measured quantity of food, and beg alms at the dwellings of hermits, enough to maintain life.

55. Or fetching eight morsels of food from a village, he may eat them silently; or subsisting on the air, may go on travelling towards the 20 north-east, until his body is destroyed.²

DUTIES OF A YATI (AN ASCETIC).

56—57. [After completing the term] either of a householder, or a hermit, performing a sacrifice to Prajâpati, wherein the whole property is given away as Dakshinâ (present), and resting the fires within himself, [56]

An² not otherwise, shall he who has studied the Vedas, has muttered recitations, has begotten sons, has fed [people], and has worshipped the fires, turn his mind towards the emancipation of the soul. [57.]

58. Indifferent to all beings, composed, carrying three sticks, with 30 a wooden pot, and keeping no company, he should betake himself to a village, only to beg alms.

59. Keeping his senses under control, unmarked, and paying no regard to [the gratification of] the palate, he should in the evening beg alms enough to sustain life, in a village destitute of mendicants.

60. Pots [prescribed for the use] of an ascetic, should consist of earth, bamboo, wood or gourd. These are cleansed by water, and scoured with the hair of cows.

¹ For descriptions of these, see further on, vv. 313—323 of this chapter.

² See the corresponding verses in Manu ch. vi., vv. 1—31.

61. By keeping his senses under restraint, abandoning love and hatred, and ceasing to be a source of terror to all creatures, he [i. e. his soul] is emancipated.

62. An ascetic should especially effect the purification of his heart, as that is the means to the attainment of knowledge¹ and freedom from obstacles.²

63—64. He should meditate on the abodes of embryos in the womb, the various consequences of [evil] actions, mental and bodily pains,³ afflictions, decrepitude, deformities; [63]

Births among thousands of species of animals, and vicissitudes of 10 fortunes and misfortunes. With his mind concentrated and restrained [from worldly objects], he should carefully view his soul as identical with the soul [of the universe]. [64.]

65. Asceticism does not consist in wearing its badges; for that [i. e. the final purpose of asceticism] is attained even otherwise. [The ascetic] should therefore never practise towards other men anything which is disagreeable to himself.

66. Speaking the truth, abstinence from theft and anger, modesty, cleanliness, discrimination, equanimity, sobriety, temperance, and self-knowledge—these are declared [to constitute] the duties [of the order]. 20

67. Souls spring from the Universal soul, in the same manner as sparks do from a red-hot ball of iron.

68. There the soul performs certain actions consciously, whether meritorious or sinful; others instinctively; and others still on account of previous association.

69. That Being who is the primary cause, imperishable, the doer [of actions], the knower [of everything], the essence [of the universe] the abode of attributes, independent and eternal, is [yet] said [in common parlance] to be born, when he assumes a body.

70. As he created, at the beginning of the creation, the space, air, 30 fire, water and earth—each possessing one property over and above [those possessed by the preceding element]; so does he assume them, when he becomes incarnate.

71. Oblations [offered during the performance of sacrifices] gratify the sun; the sun causes rain; rain produces herbs; when eaten, the herbs, [being successively transformed into] different juices, [ultimately] acquire seminality.

² In his spiritual meditations : Vij.

³ See Patanjali's yoga Sūtra, p. 18 (pāda ii., sūtra 3).

72. When a carnal union takes place between a man and a woman, and when the semen of the one and the uterine blood of the other are pure, the universal soul, himself the sixth element, simultaneously grasps the five [other] elements.

73—74. Limbs and senses, the mind, vitality, understanding, life, happiness, equanimity, discrimination, memory, activity, misery, desire, and also egotism, [73]

Action, form, colour, voice, hatred, affluence and poverty—all these belong to that Universal Spirit without a beginning, by virtue of a cause 10 existing within himself, whenever he desires beginning. [74.]

75. Mixed up with the [five] elements, the soul remains in the condition of a fluid during the first month. In the second month it becomes a slightly hard lump of flesh. In the third month it gets limbs and organs of sense.

76—78. Agility, fine perceptivity, articulation, the sense of hearing, strength and other qualities, from the ether; the sense of touch, motion, the power of dilating the limbs, and roughness, from wind; [76]

Sight, power of digestion, heat, colour, luminosity [from the fire]; [the sense of] taste, coolness, unctuousness, moisture and softness, from 20 the water; [77]

Smell, [the sense of] smelling, weight and shape, from the earth—all these the eternal soul obtains during the third month, and then begins to move about. [78.]

79. If a pregnant lady is not provided with the objects she longs for, the foetus contracts defects or deformity, or even dies. Therefore her wishes should be attended to.

80. In the fourth month, the limbs of the foetus acquire steadiness; in the fifth blood is produced; in the sixth, strength, colour, nails and hair are produced.

30 81. In the seventh month it is invested with mind, consciousness, arteries, sinews and blood-vessels, and in the eighth month it is invested with skin, flesh and memory.

82. The principle of vitality, in the eighth month, rapidly shifts now to the mother and now to the foetus. Hence a child born in the eighth month dies.

83. In the ninth or the tenth month, troubled in the narrow cavity [of the womb], the foetus is forced out, like an arrow, by violent delivery winds.

84. The body passes through six transformations, has a coating of 40 six membranes, and consists of six parts and three hundred and sixty bones.

85. The teeth, together with the bones at their roots, number sixty-four. The nails number twenty. The straight bones, in arms and legs, are also twenty in number. These (nails and straight bones) are distributed in four (different) places.

86. There are sixty bones in fingers, two in the two heels, four in ankles, four in arms, and as many in legs.

87. It should be remarked that the knees, the cheeks, the flat thighs, the shoulders, the temples, the palate and the flat buttocks have each two bones.

88. The secret part has one bone ; the back has forty-five ; the neck 10 has fifteen ; the parts between the neck and the shoulders have each two ; and the chin has one.

89. There are two bones at the root of the chin. The forehead, the eyes, and the temples have, each, two bones. The nose has got one called ghana. The bones in the sides, together with those at the roots of the teeth, and those called Arbudas, amount to seventy-two.

90. There are two Sankhas (bones between the forehead and the ear). The head has four. The breast has seventeen. This is the collection of bones in the body of a man.

91. Odour, colour, taste, touch and sound are called the objects of 20 senses. The nose, the eyes, the tongue, the skin, and the ear are called the organs of senses.

92. The organs of action, it should be known, are five, viz., the hands, the anus, the organ of generation, the tongue, and the feet. The mind partakes of the nature of both [i. e., the organs of action and the organs of perception].

93. The navel, energy, the anus, the semen, the uterine blood and the temples ; the head, the shoulders, the throat, and the breast, are the abodes of the vital principle.

94—95. [So are] the omentum, the brain, the lungs, the navel, the 30 bladder, the liver, the spleen, the small cavity of the heart, the kidneys, lower belly, the rectum, [94]

The stomach, the heart, the larger intestine near the anus, the organ of excretion, the belly, and the intestines in the abdomen :—this is a statement at length [of the seats of vitality]. [95.]

96—99. The pupils of the eyes ; the eye-corners, the orifices of the ears, the tragus, the ears, the two temporal bones, the eyebrows, the gums, the two lips, the two cavities of the loins, [96]

The groins, the testicles, the kidneys, the breasts, the epiglottis, the buttocks, the shoulders, the fleshy parts of the lower parts of the 40 legs and of the thighs, [97]

[The following] parts of this body [viz.] the palate, the belly, the lower belly, the head, the chin, the glands on the neck, the depressed parts of the body, [98]

The four eyes and ears [together], the feet, the hands, and the heart; and the nine orifices:—these are the seats of the vital principle. [99.]

100. There are seven hundred veins, nine hundred sinews, two hundred arteries, and five hundred muscles.

101. The tubular vessels in the body, called variously veins, arteries, 10 are known to be two millions nine hundred thousand nine hundred and fifty-six.

102. There are three hundred thousand of hairs in the beards of men. In the human body there are one hundred and seven vital parts, and two hundred joints.

103. The hair on the body, together with the passages of perspiration, amount to five hundred and forty-six millions, seven hundred and fifty thousand.

104. These are counted by the separated atoms of wind. Whoever knows the above economy [of the body] is the head [of learned men].

20 105—106. The human body, it should be known, contains nine scotticefuls of juices, [and] ten of water. There are, it is said, in the human body only seven scotticefuls of excrement, eight of blood, [105]

So six of phlegm, five of bile, and four of urine, three of the flesh-oil, two of the flesh-juice, and one of the marrow of the bones. The head contains half a scotticeful of marrow [106].

107. The essence of phlegm and semen are contained in the same quantity. The human body thus described is transitory. He is great, who uses it as a means to the attainment of the final emancipation of the soul.

30 108—109. From the heart rise seventy-two thousand tubular organs, some called benign and others unbenign. In the midst of these tubular organs, there is a disk, resplendent like the moon [108],

In the midst of which is seated the soul, like a steady light. Man should know him. By knowing the soul, man will, certainly, never be born again in this world. [109.]

110. He who wishes to obtain a knowledge of the yoga [system of philosophy], should master the Āraṇyaka which I received from the sun, and the science of yoga taught by me.

40 111. A man should meditate upon the soul, seated in the heart like a light, after having withdrawn his mind, intellect, memory and senses from all other objects.

112. If one were to chant verses from the Sâma-Veda, conformably to the prescribed rules, regularly and attentively, he would attain, by this practice, knowledge of the grand Brahma.

113—114. Aparântaka, Ullopya, Madraka, Prakari, Auvenaka, Sarobindu, and utara, [118]

Riggáthá, Pañika, Dakshavihita, Brahmagítiká—these songs are called mokshas (final emancipators), because their study is a means to [the final emancipation of the soul.] [114.]

115. He who is versed in the principles of playing on a lyre, who thoroughly understands the Śrutis and the Jātis in music; or is versed 10 in Tālas (keeping time)—these easily obtain the road to the final emancipation.

116. If a man versed in music does not obtain the highest object of human desire, and in spite of his concentration, he becomes a follower of Śiva [after death], and delights in his company.

117. "It has been said that the soul is without a beginning, that it gets a beginning by [the acceptance of] a body; that the whole universe has sprung from the soul; and that the soul owes her beginning to the universe.

118. We are at a loss," [said the sages to Yājñavalkya,] "to understand this. Tell us whence came this universe, with its gods, demons and men; and how was the soul created." 20

119—120. The being who, in this world, is cognizable on throwing away the cloud of delusion as possessed of a thousand hands, a thousand feet and a thousand eyes, resplendent like the sun, and with one thousand [heads], [119]

Is the universal soul. He is [the presiding deity of] sacrifices; is all-pervading; is the creator; is the Virāja; and under the form of food, becomes the sacrifice himself. [120.]

121—122. The juice, into which the things offered as oblations to 30 gods, are transformed, after having gratified the gods, and conferred upon the sacrificer his desired object, [121]

Is carried by the wind to the moon, and thence by the solar rays to the regions of the sun, which are identical with the Rich, Yajush and Sáman [Vedas], [122]

123. The sun, from his own regions, sends down excellent nectar, which is the source of the existence of all things, organic and inorganic.

124. This food is offered in sacrifices, [which produce] food, [which food again is offered in] sacrifices. Thus revolves this unbeginning and endless wheel.

125. The soul is without a beginning. The individual soul has no beginning. The association of that soul [with the body] is the result of delusion, desires, hatred and actions.

126. The four classes sprang respectively from the mouth, arms, thighs and feet [respectively] of that Being who pervades thousands upon thousands of bodies, who is the Primo Lord, and of whom I have [already] spoken to you.

127—128. The earth sprang from his feet; the heaven from his head; the vital winds from his nose; the quarters from his ears; the wind from his touch; the fire from his mouth; [127]

The moon from his mind; the sun from his eye; the sky and the rest [of the universe], together with its movable and immoveable 10 objects, from his hip. [128.]

129. "Oh philosopher, if this be the case, how does the universal soul take birth among inferior animals; Almighty [as he is], how does he entertain low desires.

130. Endowed as he is with senses, how does he not retain the knowledge of former existences. Pervading all things, as he does, how does he not know what all creatures feel" [asked the sages].

131. It is in consequence of the sins proceeding from the actions of the mind, the speech and the body, that the soul comes into existence as an Antya (a low caste-man), or a bird, or an immoveable object; and 20 takes birth among hundreds of species of animals.

132. As there exist in the bodies of animals innumerable desires and affections; so there exist animals, among all species, with various forms.

133. The consequences of certain actions are brought about after the death of the doer; of certain actions, here (while the doer is alive); and of certain actions, both here and hereafter. Here the nature [of actions performed] is the cause [of those results].

134. He who thinks of taking away the wealth of others; he who contemplates evil to others; and he who ever believes illusions to be realities;—these are born among low castes.

30 135. A liar, a slanderous man, and he who speaks harshly—these are born among quadrupeds and birds.

136. He, who is addicted to stealing; who keeps illegal intercourse with the wives of others; who kills animals in a manner other than prescribed;—these come into existence as immoveable objects.

137. He who, having the quality of goodness predominant in him, is possessed of self-knowledge, and purity, preserves his mind tranquil, practises religious austerities, holds his passions under control, performs his religious duties, and is versed in the Vedas, is born among celestial beings.

40 138. He who, having the quality of passion predominant in him, takes delight in reproachable actions, is prone to distraction, is always dabbling in various matters, and is a sensualist ; such a man [when dead] is born among men.

139. He, who, having the quality of ignorance predominant in him, too much indulges in sleep, does cruel actions, is avaricious, is an atheist, lives by begging, is imprudent, [and] inconsistent in his actions : —such a man is born among animals.

140. Thus influenced by passion and ignorance, roving here and there, and harassed by troublesome passions, the soul comes into worldly existence.

141. The individual soul, with its imperfect senses, is incapable of 10 knowledge, even as a dusty mirror is incapable of reflecting the face.

142. Recollection [of a past life] is not to be found in an individual soul with its senses made imperfect,¹ in the same manner as sweetness is not to be found in a raw bitter cucumber, though such sweetness exists in that fruit.

143. A man feels, within his own person, what all other beings feel. On the other hand, a sage, freed from the influence of egotism, feels what all other beings feel, by means of his identification with the Universal soul.

144. The soul, single as it is, seems divided, in the same manner as 20 the sky, one as it is, seems divided in reference to pots and other things, or as the sun [when reflected] in [different] reservoirs of water.

145. The spirit, the sky, wind, fire, water, and the earth are called Dhatus (the ultimate constituents of all bodies). These [i. e., the five last] are sensible elements ; and the spirit is a spiritual element. From [a combination of] these proceed all the moveable and immoveable objects.

146—148. Just as a potter creates an earthen jar by use of the earth, the stick and the wheel ; or as a house-builder builds a house by means of grass, the earth and wood ; [146] 30

Or as a goldsmith makes an ornament by simply using gold ; or as a silk-worm makes a cocoon by means of his own saliva ; [147]

So does the [Universal] soul combine the five elements with the senses, and produce himself in the form of different existences. [148.]

149—151. The soul is a reality, just as the elements are ; or else who could have perceived by one organ of sense such as touch a thing, apprehended by another such as sight ; [149]

Who could have recognized a voice, once heard, upon hearing it again ; who could have had recollection of past things ; what could have caused a dream ; [150] 40

¹ By anger and the like : Vij.

Who, defining himself by his extraction, beauty, age, character, acquirements and the like, could run after the objects of the senses such as sound and the like, by means of acts, mind and speech. [151.]

152—153. The soul, sunk in ignorance, entertains a doubt whether actions are productive of results or not; deems himself perfect, though far from perfection; [152]

Believes under a delusion that wives, sons and ministers are his and he theirs; and with regard to objects, beneficial or otherwise, entertains incorrect notions. [153.]

- 10 154. [That soul] which cannot discriminate between itself, its own essential nature, and its accidental condition, attempts to fast till death, leap into a fire, or plunge into water.

155. Thus acting, devoid of self-restraint, and going after improper ends, the soul is imprisoned [in a mortal body] by his actions, hatred, delusion and desires.

156—159. Assiduous attendance upon his religious preceptor; meditations on the meaning of the Vedas and the Śāstras; performance of the religious rites prescribed by them; association with the righteous; gentle language; [156]

- 20 Abstaining from looking at and touching women; feeling for all creatures in the same manner in which he would feel for himself; abandoning his family; putting on worn-out red garments; [157]

Restraining the senses from their respective objects; shunning slumber and laziness; forming a correct judgment of the [weakness of the] body; bewareing of every transgression in all his movements; [158]

Freedom from ignorance and passion; purity of the heart; indifference; tranquillity of the mind—purified by these means and with the quality of goodness predominant in him, a man becomes exempt from death [159].¹

- 30 160. The union [of the Individual with the Universal soul] is brought about by remembrance of the Universal soul, self-meditation, by means of the quality of sattva (goodness), by the destruction of all motives of actions [as the seeds of mortal existences], and by association with the righteous.

161. When, at the time of the dissolution of his body, the mind is, with due calmness, fixed on God, and the heart is freed from the cloud of ignorance, the recollections of all previous existences are revived in him.

162. The soul animates bodies of various forms in virtue of its 40 actions, even as an actor, when acting various parts, paints his body with various colours.

163. Deformities, such as destitution of a limb, seen in some children from their birth, are due to the time [of their birth], their actions [in former lives], defects in the seed, and in the mother.

164. The soul never becomes free until it is clogged with egotism, the mind, repeated births, consequences of actions, and the body.

165. As lights which subsist on the wick, the stand and the oil are [sometimes simultaneously and prematurely] extinguished, so are human lives.¹

166. The individual soul, who is seated in the heart like a steady light, has innumerable rays; some white, some dark, some variegated, 10 some reddish, and some purple.

167. Of these rays one running upwards, passes through the solar sphere, and rises higher than the regions of Brahmá. By its means the soul obtains final beatitude.

168. The individual soul attains resplendent divine bodies, along with their habitations, by means of a hundred of these rays, which also extend upwards.

169. There are other rays of different colours and gentle splendour, extending downwards, through which the soul is compelled to be born in this world, in order to enjoy the fruits of his actions. 20

170—173. The Vedas, the Sástras, self-knowledge, birth and death, affections, movements to and fro, truth and falsehood, [170]

The attainment of desired objects, happiness and misery, good and bad actions, effects from portents, verified prophetic declarations, and the conjunctions of planets, [171]

Movements of the planets and the stars, the waking and the dreaming states of the man, the sky, the air, fire, water, the earth and darkness, [172]

The revolution [of cycles] such as manvantaras, the yugas, the results of charms, and [of the applications of] particular herbs—from all these, 30 know that the soul exists, and is the cause of the universe. [173]

174—176. Self-consciousness, memory, intellect, hatred, perception, pleasure, courage, perception [of one thing] by the different senses, desires, the animate state of the body, life, [174]

Heaven, dreams, activity of the organs of sense, activity of the mind, winking of the eyes, the efforts of consciousness, and the combination with the five elements;—[175]

All these are indications of the prime spirit; and therefore there does exist a soul apart from the body such as pervades and rules everything. [176.] 40

¹ Vj. explains this by saying that bodies, like everything else, are subject to dissolution from causes certain, as well as accidental.

177—178. The organs of perception, together with their respective objects, the mind and the organs of action, self-consciousness, intellect, the five elements beginning with the earth, [177]

And the primary germ of nature—these constitute this kshetra (body), and the soul hereof is called kshetrajña. That soul pervades all things, and is both existent and non-existent. [178.]

179. From the prime germ of nature, sprang the intellect; from the intellect, self-consciousness; from self-consciousness, the five subtler elements, [and the five grosser elements,] each of which has 10 one property more than that which precedes it.

180. Sound, tangibility, colour, flavour, and odour are the five properties [of the grosser elements]. Each of these will be absorbed [in the end] in that from which it sprang.

181. I have already described to you how the soul, all-powerful as he is, creates himself, in consequence of the three kinds of actions.

182. The qualities of goodness, passion and ignorance belong to the same Almighty Being, who rolls like a wheel, under the influence of passion and ignorance.

183. The same Most Pre-eminent Being, who has no beginning and 20 who has a beginning, appears under various forms, and is then said to be one whose real nature is to be known by means of the aforesaid marks and by the organs of sense.

184. The space between the path of the Immortals and the sage Agastī, constitutes the path of the Manes. Those *Agnihotrin*s, who are desirous of heaven, go to it by that path.

185. Those who are sincerely devoted to charitable actions, those who are possessed of the eight qualities, and those who are devoted to the observance of truth also [go] by the same path [to heaven].

186. There live eighty thousand sages leading the life of house- 30 holders, who are subject to continued existence, who are the source [of the system of religion], and who promulgate it [at each beginning of the creation].

187. In the world of the Immortals, in the space between the sphere of the Seven Sages and the path of the Elephant of the quarters, there live as many sages unconcerned with all pursuits.

188. In virtue of their religious austerities, perpetual celibacy, freedom from all improper intercourse and their intellectual pursuits, they continue to reside there until the final annihilation of the universe.

189. From these [two sets of sages] proceeded the Vedas, the 40 Purāṇas, the philosophical Upanishads, metrical writings, the Sūtras, the commentaries, and all other writings which may be existing.

190. Recitation of the Vedas, sacrifices, perpetual celibacy, religious austerities, self-restraint, piety, fasts, independence ;—these are the sources of the knowledge of the soul.

191. Certainly, the knowledge of that soul should be sought after in all the āśramas (orders). The twice-born should hear [its nature expounded by the Upaniṣads], should meditate [over it], and [finally] have a perception of it.

192. Those twice-borns who, possessed of pre-eminent piety, betake themselves to the forest, and [there] meditate upon truth, know it.

193. [Having thus known the soul] they are successively transformed 10 into fire, the day, the bright fortnight, the summer solstice, the world of the Immortals, the sun, and lightning.

194. Then the Great Spiritual Being comes forth to receive them, and makes them inhabitants of the world of Brahmā. After this they are no longer subject to be born in this world.

195—196. Those men, who have attained the heaven by means of sacrifices, religious austerities, [and] charities, successively become transformed into mists, nights, dark fortnights, the winter solstice, [195]

The region of the manes, the moon, air, showers, water, earth ; and 20 are again subjected to mundane existence.¹ [196.]

197. He, who, having reason, does not understand these two ways,² becomes a serpent, a butterfly, an insect, or a worm.

198—200. With the feet, with their soles turned upwards and placed on his thighs, the right hand with its palm turned upwards and placed on the left, the face a little lifted up, and breast stiffly held [198],

With the eyes closed, the mind calm, preventing contact between the upper and the lower rows of teeth, with [the tip of] the tongue placed steadily on the palate, the mouth shut, without moving, [199]

Having restrained the senses, seated neither very high nor very low, 30 a man should perform Prāṇāyāma (suppression of breath) twice or thrice [200].

201. Having done this, he should meditate on that Almighty Being who is seated in the heart like a light, and reflect on the soul by performing dhāraṇā (suppression of breath for the period of three Prāṇāyāmas).

202—203. Capability of becoming invisible, remembrance [of things seen in a former life], amiableness, perception [of distant objects], capacity of hearing [sounds produced at a great distance], capacity of leaving one's own body and entering into that of another, [202] 40

² Of obtaining higher existence : Vij.

Capacity of creating objects at pleasure—these are signs of the attainment of Yoga. When a man dies after becoming accomplished in Yoga, he becomes entitled to immortality [203].

204. Or a man can obtain the highest object of human existence, by studying the Vedas, abstaining from all prohibited actions, dwelling in a forest, subsisting on unsolicited alms, and by feeding temperately.

205. Even a householder, who has acquired his fortune honestly, who diligently pursues the knowledge [of the Highest Principle], who is hospitable to guests, who worships his departed ancestors periodically, 10 and who speaks the truth, can obtain the final emancipation.¹

206. Great sinners come into existence in this world, after they have undergone [confinements into] frightful hells due to their great sins.

207. There is no doubt that the slayer of a Bráhmaṇa comes into existence, as a deer, a dog, a hog, and a camel; and that a drunkard is born as an ass, a Pulkasa (chāṇḍāla of the lowest tribe), or a Vena (one of a certain mixed caste).

208. A robber of gold comes into existence as a worm, an insect, and a butterfly; and one who violates the bed of his religious preceptor, comes into existence successively as grass, a bush, and a creeper.

209. One who slays a Bráhmaṇa shall become consumptive. A drunkard shall have discoloured teeth. One who steals gold shall have ugly nails. One who violates the bed of his religious preceptor shall have diseased skin.

210. He who lives with any of these sinners, shall contract the peculiar defects of the sinner [associated with]. One who steals cooked food shall suffer from indigestion. He who steals books shall become dumb.

211. He who adulterates corn shall have redundant limbs. A slanderer shall have a stinking nose. One who steals oil shall become a 30 worm called Tailapáyin; one who falsely accuses [the good] shall have a stinking mouth.

212. By seducing the wife of another, and by robbing a Bráhmaṇa of his wealth, a man shall become a Bráhmaṇical fiend and live in a forest, or in a region destitute of water.

213. He who steals another's jewels, shall become an animal of a low order. He who steals vegetables, consisting chiefly of leaves, shall become a peacock. He who steals fragrant substances, shall become a musk-rat.

214—215. The stealer of corn shall become a mouse; that of a 40 vehicle, a camel; that of fruits, a monkey; that of water, a duck; that of milk, a crow; that of articles of household use, a wasp; [214]

¹ Compare Mana ch. vi., vv. 32—96, and ch. xii., vv. 1—104, and 116—126.

That of honey [shall become] a firefly ; that of meat, a swan ; that of a cow, a lizard ; that of fire, a crane ; that of cloth, one affected with white leprosy ; that of a juice, a dog ; and that of salt, a chiriu (an insect that cries aloud). [215.]

216. This has been stated by me in respect of theft only as illustrations. Just as there are [various] kinds of objects [stolen], so there are [various] kinds of animals.¹

217. Having suffered the due consequences of their actions, and then having passed through the existences of lower animals, [the sinners] are then born as the most degraded of mankind, having defects and plunged 10 in wretchedness.

218. Afterwards freed from all sins, they are born in high families, where they enjoy pleasures, and become accomplished in arts and sciences, and possessed of wealth.

219. By omitting to do that which is ordained, by doing that which is prohibited, and by leaving the senses unrestrained, man incurs his fall.

220. Therefore he should here perform penance for the sake of purity. By this means, his conscience as well as the people become satisfied. 20

221—224. Those men who do not perform expiatory acts, who take delight in sinful actions, and are destitute of repentance, go to harrowing frightful hells, [viz.,] [221]

Támisa (the hell of deep gloom), Lokaśaṅku (the hell full of piercing iron pikes), Mahāniwaya (the great hell), Sālmali (the hell where sinners are tormented with the thorns of silk-cotton trees), Baurava (the dreadful hell), Kuḍmala, Pūti-mṛitika (the hell full of bad-smelling dust), Kālasutraka [222]

Saṅghāta (the hell full of mucus), Lohitoda (the hell full of blood), Saviṣa (the hell full of poison), Sampratāpana (the hell full of piercing rocks), Mahānaraka (the great infernal region), Kākola (the hell full of venomous snakes), Sanjivana, Mahāpathu, [223]

Avichi, Andhatāmiseru (the hell full of dark gloom), Kumbhīpaka (the hell where sinners are baked like earthen vessels), Asipatravana (the hell full of naked swords), and Tāpana (the hell full of scorching heat). [224.]

225. Degraded men, who labouring under the consequences of the primary and the secondary sins, do not perform expiatory rites, go to [these hells].

¹ The meaning is that according to the nature of the object stolen, the thief is born 40 in different orders of beings.

226. The sin which a man happens to commit through ignorance can be destroyed by means of expiatory acts. The man, who commits sins knowingly, is [by expiation] allowed only to mix with the people in virtue of certain texts.

227. The slayer of a Bráhmaṇa, a drunkard, a thief, and also he who violates the bed of his religious preceptor ;—these are [said to be] great sinners. So is he who lives with them.

228. Talking very disrespectfully of one's own religious preceptors, blaspheming the Vedas, murdering a friend, and forgetting that 10 which one has once learned—these are to be known as [sins] tantamount to the slaying of a Bráhmaṇa.

229. Eating forbidden things, fraud, lying for a [temporal] advantage, kissing the mouth of a menstruous female ;—these are equivalent to drinking intoxicating liquors.

230. Unlawful appropriation of a horse, a jewel, a man, a woman, land, a cow, a deposit—all these are equivalent to stealing gold.

231. [Illicit intercourse] with friends' wives, respectable maidens, one's own sisters, low-caste females, females of the same Gotra (family) and daughters-in-law ;—[these are] said to be equivalent to violating 20 the bed of one's own religious preceptor.

232—233. He who keeps illicit intercourse with the sister of his father, the sister of his mother, the wife of his mother's brother, his daughter-in-law, his step-mother, his sister, the daughter of his family priest, [232]

The wife of his preceptor, or his own daughter, is [like] the violator of his religious preceptor's bed. In spite of the willingness on the part of these women, his organ of generation should be cut off, and he should be beheaded [233].

234—242. Killing a cow, non-initiation with the Veda at proper
30 time, theft, non-repayment of debts, omission to keep the sacred fires, sale of forbidden articles, the marriage of a younger brother before the elder, [234]

Learning the Vedas from a paid tutor, teaching the Vedas for payment, adultery, the non-marriage of the elder brother while the younger brother is married, usury, making salt, [235]

Killing a woman, or a Súdra, or a Vaiśya, or a Kshatriya, subsisting on condemned wealth, disbelief in the existence of God, violation of celibacy [by a student], as well as selling one's own sons, [236]

Theft of corn, lead, beasts, sacrificing for those who are not entitled 40 to perform a sacrifice, abandoning the father or the mother or sons, selling a tank or a garden, [237]

Polluting a virgin, sacrificing for one who is married before his elder brother, giving one's daughter in marriage to the younger before the elder brother is married, fraud, violating the vows, [238]

An act [viz., cooking food] for one's self, intercourse with one's own wife addicted to drinking, giving up the study of the Vedas and the worship of the sacred fire, abandoning one's own sons and kinsmen, [239]

Cutting down trees¹ for fuel, subsisting by subjecting one's wife to prostitution or by butchery or by using herbs as charms, manufacturing instruments intended to kill animals, addiction to vices, selling one's self, [240]

Serving a Sūdra, friendship with a sordid fellow, serving a man sprung from degraded parents, living outside [any of the four] orders, fattening on food charitably supplied by others, [241]

Studying the treatises composed by atheists, superintendence over mines, selling one's own wife;—every one of these is a secondary sin. [242]

243. The slayer of a Brāhmaṇa is purified by carrying the human skull² as a flag, subsisting on alms, proclaiming his guilt, and by mortification in eating for twelve years. 20

244. Or he can attain purity by saving one Brāhmaṇa or twelve cows, or by [partaking in] the ablution-ceremony at the end of the horse sacrifice.

245. He, who has killed a Brāhmaṇa, can become purified by relieving a Brāhmaṇa or a cow seen on the road, as affected with a chronic and troublesome disease.

246. Or he becomes purified by recovering the stolen property of a Brāhmaṇa, or by being killed or wounded by weapons, though not to death, in that attempt.

247. Or for the sake of purity, he may make a sacrifice of [every 30 part of] his body, beginning with the hair and ending with the marrow; citing in order the hymn [beginning with] Ṭomabhyah svāhā and others that immediately follow.

248. Or he can become purified by dying in the midst of a battle, after being hit at [by arrows, &c.]; or tormented with wounds, although not actually killed.

249. Or he can become purified, if he lives in a forest, practising temperance with regard to eating, and there thrice reads in low voice the texts of the Vedas; or if he travels round the river Sarasvatī and every branch of it, living abstemiously during the travel. 40

¹ A green tree is not to be cut simply for firewood : Vij.

² On the top of a stick : Vij.

250. Or he can attain purity by conferring, as a charity, a sufficient sum of money, on a deserving Bráhmaṇa. The receiver of such a gift should, for the sake of his own purification, offer a sacrifice to god Vaiśvānara.

251. He, who has killed a Kshatriya or a Vaiśya engaged in a sacrificial ceremony, should perform those expiatory acts which are prescribed for the slayer of a Bráhmaṇa. He, who has destroyed an embryo, ought to perform penance according to the caste [of the embryo]. The slayer of a woman in her courses should perform penance 10 in a similar manner.

252. A man ought to perform penance, even for a murder unsuccessfully attempted. The penance for [murdering] a Bráhmaṇa performing sacrifice is double [of that ordained for the murder of a Bráhmaṇa generally].¹

DRINKING.

253. The drunkard attains purity by death, caused by drinking red-hot wine, water, clarified butter, urine of a cow, or milk.

254. Clad in clothes made of hair, and wearing matted hair, a drunkard may perform that penance which is ordained in the case of 20 the murder of a Bráhmaṇa; or for three years, he may subsist, at night, on oil-cake or fragments of grain.

255. Having drunk, through ignorance, wine, semen, excrements or urine, a man of any of the three orders of the twice-born, ought again to undergo the ceremonies.

256. A Bráhmaṇa female who drinks liquor, shall not go to that celestial region of her husband; but she will be born again as a bitch, a female vulture, or a sow.²

THEFT OF GOLD.

257. A Bráhmaṇa, who has stolen gold, should confess his crime to 30 the king and offer him a club. When beaten [with the club] or discharged by the king, he will be purified.

258. He may be purified without confessing [his crime] to the king by performing the penance ordained for a drunkard, or distributing in charity as much gold as will weigh against himself, or will satisfy a Bráhmaṇa.³

VIOLATION OF THE PRECEPTOR'S BED.

259. He, who has violated the bed of his religious preceptor, should [for the sake of purification] lie on a hot bed made of iron, with the iron image of a woman ; or should sever his testicles, take them in hand, and cast his body in the south-west ;

260. Or for three years should practise Kṛichchhra sacred to god Prajapati ; or for three months should practise chándráyana, and read the texts of the Vedas.¹

PENANCE FOR INTERCOURSE WITH A SINNER.

261. If one were to live with [any of] these [sinners] for one year, he would become like them. One may marry a daughter of [any one of] these sinners, only when she has observed fasts [for purification], and is destitute of anything [derived from her parents]. 10

262. Having killed any Avakṛishṭa (one of low birth), a man should practise Ohándráyana. Even a Śúdra will thus be purified in time, unauthorised as he is [to perform penances by sacred rites].²

SECONDARY SINS.

263—264. The killer of a cow shall be purified ; if he lives, for one month, on the five products of the cow, abstains from sexual intercourse, sleeps in a cow-pen, follows a cow, and [at the end of the month] gives a cow (in charity) ; [263]

Or if he diligently practises a Kṛichchhra, or an Atikrichchhra ; or having fasted three days gives ten cows and one bull in charity. [264.] 20

265. Purification from secondary sins is attainable in this manner, or by means of a Ohándráyana, or by living on water for one month, or by a paráka (fasting for 12 days).

266. In the case of the murder of a Kshatriya, the [guilty] man should give [in charity] one thousand cows and one bull ; or should perform penance, as ordained in the case of the murder of a Bráhmaṇa, for three years.

267. The slayer of a Vaiśya should perform such a penance for one year, or give one hundred cows. The slayer of a Śúdra should perform such a penance for six months, or give ten cows. 30

268. Having killed misbehaving women belonging to the Bráhmaṇa, Vaiśya, Kshatriya or Śúdra classes, a man should, for the sake of purification, give [in charity] a leather bag, a cow, a goat, or a sheep respectively.

269. Having killed a woman not greatly misbehaving, a man should perform penance as prescribed in the case of the murder of a Śúdra.

Having killed one thousand animals [of inferior kind], having bones, or as many boneless animals as would fill a cart, a man should perform similar penance.

270. Having killed a cat, a lizard, an ichneumon, a frog, or a bird, a man should live for three days on milk, or perform one-fourth of the [Prājāpatya] kṛichchhira penance.

271. In the case of the slaying of an elephant, five blue bulls should be given in charity. In the case of the slaying of a parrot, a calf, two years old, should be given. In the case of the slaying of an ass, a goat, or a sheep, one bull should be given. In the case of the slaying of a Kṛauñcha, a calf three years old should be given.

272. Having killed a flamingo, a vulture, a monkey, a tiger, an aquatic bird, a land-bird, a peacock, or a cock, a man should give one cow. Having killed a herbivorous creature, a man should give a calf.

273. In the case of the killing of snakes, an iron stick should be given; of an eunuch, tin and lead should be given; of a wild boar, a jar filled with clarified butter; of a camel, Gūñja fruits; and of a horse, a [piece of] cloth.

274. In the case of the killing of a Tittira bird, one Drona 20 [measure] of sesamum seed should be given; and of animals such as elephants, he may perform a Kṛichchhira penance for each [animal killed], if unable to give the [proper] gifts.

275. In the case of the killing of a creature found in fruits, flowers, food and juices, the guilty person should eat clarified butter. In the case of the killing of [the lowest species of] animals with bones, something of small value should be given in charity. In the case of the killing of boneless animals, Prāṇyāma (suppression of breath) [will suffice as a purificatory means].

276. If a man has cut a tree, a thicket, a creeper or a shrub, he 30 should mutter a hundred Richs (lines of the Vedas). If a man is guilty of having wantonly cut a medicinal plant, he should one day subsist on milk, and follow a cow.

277. Bitten by a prostitute, a monkey, an ass, a dog, a camel or other beasts, or a crow, a man should perform Prāṇyāma, standing in water, and eat clarified butter, before he can be purified.

278. With the hymn [beginning with] Yanmedya retah (my semen which today, &c.) a man should consecrate his semen fallen [at a time other than that of a sexual intercourse]; and by means of his ring-finger, should touch the space between his breasts and the space 40 between his eye-brows.

279. Having seen one's own reflexion in water, [a man] should mutter repeatedly this hymn [beginning with] Mayitejah (in me light, &c.) Having seen an unclean thing, having committed indiscretion, or having told a lie, [a man should mutter repeatedly] the *sāvitrī*¹ hymn.

280. A celibate twice-born student by cohabiting with a woman, becomes guilty of incontinence. He will be purified by sacrificing an ass to the god Nairīti.

281. Having given up for seven nights begging and the worship of sacred fires, though in good health, he should offer two oblations, citing the two hymns, [beginning with] Kūmārikāṣṭaka, &c.

282. Then he should stand [near the sacred fires], citing the hymn 10) Samāsinchatu (may he sprinkle me, &c.) If he drink honey and eat meat, he should undergo a Kṛichchhṛa and perform other vows.

283. If one has displeased his religious preceptor, he will be purified by doing something to please the preceptor. A religious preceptor should perform three Kṛichchhṛas, if a student of his sent by him [on an errand] should die.

284. A man incurs no sin if, while doing good to a Bráhmaṇa, the latter dies; similarly if he causes pain to cows and bulls, while administering medicine to them or branding them.

285. He, who truly describes another's sins incurs equal sin; he 20 who falsely accuses another incurs twice the sin uttered and all the sins of the accused [in addition].

286. He, who falsely charges another with a primary or a secondary sin, should for a month subsist on water, perform low recitations, and restrain his senses.

287. A man, accused falsely, should perform a Kṛichchhṛa, or offer an oblation of boiled rice flour to the god Agni, or a sacrifice of a goat to god Váyu.

288. He, who, without being authorised, cohabits with his brother's wife, should perform a chándráyana. He, who cohabits with his wife 30 while in her monthly courses, is purified by drinking clarified butter at the end of three nights.

289. He, who has performed a sacrifice for a degraded twice-born, as well as he who has violated his marriage vow, should perform three Kṛichchhṛas. He who has polluted the Vedas, as well as he who has abandoned one seeking his shelter, should live for one year on barley.

290. A man is purified from sin arising from the acceptance of a gift from an unworthy man, if he, for one month, lives in a cowpen, [abstains from sexual intercourse], subsists on milk, [and] devotes himself to the muttering of the Gáyatrī.²

MISCELLANEOUS.

291. Having travelled in a carriage drawn by asses or camels, having bathed or eaten while naked, or having cohabited with one's wife in day time, [a man shall be purified] by bathing and performing Prāṇāyāma while standing in water.

292. Having braved and menaced one's religious preceptor, or having vanquished a Brāhmaṇa in a dispute, or having tied him with a cloth, a man should instantly beg pardon [of the injured party], and fast for one day.

- 10 293. In the case of the raising of a stick against a Brāhmaṇa, a Kṛichchhra, and of throwing down [a Brāhmaṇa], an Ati-Kṛichchhra [is ordained as a penance]. Where blood is drawn, one Kṛichchhra and one Ati-Kṛichchhra, and where blood has issued [but not fallen down] one Kṛichchhra [is ordained].

294. In a case, for which no expiatory rite is provided, a penance should be prescribed, after having diligently ascertained the place and the time,¹ the age and the capacity² and the sin.

 THE ABANDONMENT OF THE DEGRADED.

295. The kinsmen of [a man] degraded from his class, should carry 20 an earthen jar placed on the head of a female slave out of the town, and empty it there, and also treat him as an outcaste in all their transactions.

296. If after having undergone the [necessary] expiatory rites, he comes among them; they should empty a fresh earthen jar. Nor should they reproach him; but should by all means live with him.

297. This very ceremony is ordained in the case of degraded women. They should be given dwelling-room in the vicinity of the house, provided with food and clothing and be guarded.

298. Cohabiting with a man of a lower class, causing abortion, 30 killing the husband;—these are undoubtedly [among the] special causes of the degradation of women.

299. A man should never live with those [men] who have killed persons seeking their protection, or children, or women, and also with ungrateful men; even after they have undergone the [necessary] penance.

300. After the earthen jar is emptied [on restoration to his caste], a man in the midst of his kinsmen should present barley corn to cows. If the man is first respected by the cows, then he deserves respect [from his kinsmen].

301. He whose sin is known, should perform a penance approved of by an assembly.

SECRET EXPIATION.

He, whose sin is not known, should perform a penance in private.

302. The killer of a Bráhmaṇa shall be purified by fasting for three nights; by muttering repeatedly [the hymn called] Aghamarshaṇa, 10 while standing in water, and by giving in charity a cow yielding abundant milk.

303. Or [for the sake of purification], [the man], subsisting one day on the air and standing in water, may offer forty libations of clarified butter, citing the hymn [beginning with] Lomabhyah sváḥ.

304. [A drunkard will become] pure by fasting for three nights, and offering a sacrifice of clarified butter, citing the Kúshmāṇḍa Richs. A Bráhmaṇa, who has stolen gold, [shall be purified] if he mutters repeatedly [the collection of hymns called] Rudra standing in water.

305. He, who has violated the bed of his religious preceptor, is 20 purified by muttering repeatedly [the collection of hymns beginning with] Sahasra śirśá (thousand headed, &c.). [Each of] these [three sinners] should give separately at the end of the penance a cow yielding abundant milk.

306. For averting the consequences of secondary sins, for which no penance is provided, and of [all other] sins, a sinner ought to perform a Pránáyāma a hundred times.

307. Having swallowed semen, evacuations, or urine, an excellent Bráhmaṇa should drink the holy juice of soma consecrated by oṃkāras.

308. All the sins, that may have been committed, unconsciously, at 30 night or by day, shall be destroyed by performing the three sandhyas.

309. Muttering repeatedly the śukriyāranyaka, and especially the Gáyatrī hymn, and also reciting Rudra eleven times—these are surely calculated to destroy all sins.

310. Whenever a twice born-thinks himself affected [with a sin], he should sacrifice sesamum seed with the Gáyatrī, and bestow gifts.

311. In this world even those sins which result from the gravest crimes, do not touch him who is devoted to the study of the Vedas, who is forgiving, and who is absorbed in the performance of great sacrifices.

312. A man can be purified from all sins except that of killing a Bráhuṇa, by subsisting on the air, standing during the day, passing the night in water, staring at the sun, and muttering the gáyatrí a thousand times.¹

DEFINITIONS OF PENANCES.

313. Religious celibacy, compassion, forgiveness, charity, veracity, uprightness, abstaining from killing animals, abstaining from theft, sweet words, controlling the senses,—these are denominated to be yama (restraints).

- 10 314. Ablutions, religious silence, fasts, sacrifices, the study of the Vedas, controlling the passion of love, serving the religious preceptor, purity, abstaining from anger and vigilance,—these are termed the niyamas (observances).

315. When a man lives on the urine and dung of a cow, milk, curd, ghee, and water with kuśa grass steeped into it, and the next day observes a fast;—he is said to practise the austerity termed Sántapana.

316. When a man performs a Sántapana for six days, subsisting each day on one of the aforesaid articles, and fasting on the seventh 20 day: this austerity extending over seven days, is said to be a Mahá-sántapana.

317. A parṇakṛichchhra (leaf penance) is said to consist in drinking the decoction of the following in their order:—viz., the leaves of Palāś, Uḷumbura, lotus, Bilva, and kuśa grass.

318. A tapta kṛichchhra (hot penance) is said to consist in drinking every day one of these things, in their order, viz.:—hot milk, hot ghee and hot water, and fasting one night.

319. A pádaḥkṛichchhra (quarter penance) is said to consist either in eating once a day or once in the evening, or [living] without begging 30 or fasting.

320. This [quarter penance], in any manner repeated thrice, is said to constitute a Prájápatya penance. An Atikṛichchhra is this Prájápatya-penance, performed while living on a scanty portion of food.

321. A kṛichchhrátikṛichchhra is said to consist in subsisting on milk for twenty-one days. A Paráka is said to consist in fasting for twelve days.

322. A saumya-kṛichchhura (mild) penance is said to consist in eating every day one of these things in their order, viz., oilcake, the water of boiled rice, buttermilk, water, and barley-meal; and in [afterwards] fasting for one night.

323. A Tulāpurusha penance is to be known to consist in eating the above-mentioned articles each for three nights in their order, and extends over fifteen days.

324. That man is said to be practising a chāndráyana, who eats morsels of food as large as a peacock's egg, increasing the number of morsels by one each day during the bright fortnight, and similarly 10 decreasing them in the dark fortnight.

325. That a man should eat anyhow, [not more than] two hundred and forty morsels of food in one month, is another form of chāndráyana.

326. When a man has been practising a kṛichchhura as well as a chāndráyana, he should regularly bathe thrice a day, mutter holy hymns, and consecrate his morsels with the Gāyatri.

327. In the case of sins not noticed, purification is attainable by means of a chāndráyana. He, who practises it disinterestedly, will live [after death] in the same regions as the moon.

328. He, who, desiring greatness, performs a kṛichchhura, will obtain 20 great wealth. He who performs a kṛichchhura attentively, will obtain a fruit similar to that of a great sacrifice.

329. Having heard these duties taught by Yājñavalkya, the sages thus addressed that magnanimous pre-eminent philosopher of unbounded splendour :—

330. “Those, who will diligently study this Dharmaśāstra, will go to heaven after having acquired fame in this world.

331. “He who is desirous of learning, will acquire learning. He who is desirous of wealth will acquire wealth. In the same manner, he who is desirous of a long life will have long life. He who is desirous of glory will acquire great glory.

332. “There is no doubt that he, who will read at least three complets from this work at a śrāddha ceremony, will eternally gratify his manes.

333. “By studying this work a Brāhmaṇa will obtain respectability, a Kshatriya will become victorious, and a Vaiśya will become rich in corn and money.

334. "The learned man who, on the last day of every fortnight, reads it to the twice-born, will attain the merit derivable from [the performance of] a sacrifice. May your Holiness sanction this."

335. With his heart delighted at hearing the above said by the sages, Yājñavalkya also, bowing to the Self-existent Being, said "Be it so."

APPENDIX.

I.

ANALYSIS OF EIGHTEEN SMRITIS published by Jibānanda Vidyāsāgara, B.A. Calcutta : A.C. 1878.

In introducing this portion of the Appendix I must say a few words. In going over the field of Smṛiti literature, I have not been able to find any guides or land-marks. Many Smṛitis as they are now quoted by the authors of digests are apparently lost in a separate form. Others again are mere fragments from other works which it is not easy to identify. Some are extracts from larger works now lost. A few 10 seem to be clearly sectarian works of very late origin. On the number and age of the Smṛitis in general, enough has been said in the Introduction. In the present Appendix I have attempted a brief analysis of eighteen out of the twenty named in Yājñavalkya (I. 45), and from which that Smṛiti has drawn largely in its pages. The only two omitted are Manu and Yājñavalkya, and for obvious reasons. Manu has been already translated and commented upon. Some remarks on Manu occur in the Preface. To give my own analysis of Manu as made by the light of other Smṛitis and the Purāṇas would have increased the size of the work beyond the contemplated limits. Yājñavalkya 20 is translated in the body of this work, and an analysis of some of its principal topics with remarks has been given in the Introduction. For the analysis of the remaining eighteen Smṛitis, the Calcutta edition of Paṇḍita Jibānanda has been used ; but other collections have also been drawn upon, so far as these eighteen Smṛitis are concerned. These will be designated by the following marks :—

A—Calcutta collection above mentioned.

B—Benares collection lithographed in Samvat 1923.

C—Collection of Smṛitis in the Bombay University Library (MSS.)

D—My own private collection (MSS).

Atri.

Three works named Laghvatrisamhitā, Atrisamhitā, and Vṛiddhātrisamhitā appear under the name of Atri.

I. Laghvatrisamhitā or the smaller Atri (A) consists of 5 adhyāyas or chapters and 134 verses in the Anuṣṭubh metre ; refers to Āchāra (ritual) and Prāyaścitta (penance) alone, as is indeed indiated by the second verse,¹ the questions in which are addressed to Atri have elicited the present Smṛiti. It has two prose passages in the fourth chapter; and has two complets in the Indravajrā metre in the third chapter. It refers to Manu in the second and fifth chapters (pp. 3 and 8), has at its end a dialogue between Indra and Brihaspati, which appears properly to belong to the Smṛiti of Brihaspati (see p. 641), and ought to have no place here.

Remarks.—The absence of the usual Phalūṛutī verses, or verses which state the rewards for studying the work, would go to show that the 10 present piece is styled Laghvatri in the sense of an extract from Atri on a particular topic, and not in the sense of an abridgment of the entire law of Atri. A comparison of the subjects proposed to be discussed by this and the Atrisamhitā that follows (p. 1 vv. 2, 3 and p. 13 vv. 3—5) confirms this view.

II. Atrisamhitā (A, B) is wholly metrical; is not divided into chapters; has 308 verses; refers to ritual and penance alone; and alludes to Śātātapa (p. 35 vv. 261, 270), and Śaikhya (p. 35 v. 262; p. 36 v. 284). As there are several verses in Manu ending in इत्येवं मनुब्रवीत् (so said Manu); so there are some verses in this work ending in भगवानत्रिब्रवीत् (so said his holiness Atri), (see p. 21 v. 98; p. 26 v. 163; p. 27 v. 172; p. 42 vv. 350, 351).²

Some definitions of penances given here exactly agree with those of Yājñavalkya (see p. 23 v. 118 and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 316; p. 23 v. 126 and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 319; p. 23 v. 217, and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 321; and p. 24 v. 129, and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 323), and others are paraphrases with slight variations (see p. 22 v. 116, and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 317; p. 23 v. 117, and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 315; p. 23 v. 127, and Yāj. ch. iii. v. 322). The metre is mostly Anuṣṭubh, but there are some Upajāti verses (see pp. 15, 32, and 45). Quotations from ancient authors are prefaced by अन्नाभ्युदाह-80 रन्नि, which means 'In connection with this it is said,' (see pp. 26, 30).

The Atri Samhitā as it is found in C and D agrees with neither of the abovementioned works in Atri's name. It is divided into nine

² Prof. Monier Williams regards the circumstance of the author's name being mentioned in a work which professedly is his production, as indicative of the work being a compilation from more than one source. (See his note on p. 216 of Indian Wisdom, second edition.) I think that no such conclusion can be based upon the 40 said circumstance by itself. The mention of the author's name in certain verses appears to me to be made merely for the exigencies of metre, and therefore in no way significant. If, however, any inference is to be drawn from that fact, it can be no other than that the work was a compilation of the Institutes of Atri by a pupil or a descendant of Atri, and not by Atri himself.

chapters, and has several prose passages. Its first chapter has ten verses, the second has thirteen, the third has fifteen, the fourth is prose, the fifth has sixteen verses, the sixth, seventh and eighth are prose, and the ninth has seven verses. It refers to ritual and penance alone. The absence of an allusion to any previous author, as well as the style of mixed prose and verse, incline me to regard this as the genuine Atri Smṛiti, and its namesake that appears in the Calcutta compilation, as a much later production passed under Atri's name. My grounds for considering the Atri Smṛiti of Calcutta as a later work are:— I.—That it is confessedly a compilation (see p. 13 vv. 3 and 4), as is 10 confirmed by allusions to Satātapa and Sankha, and by quotations from nameless authors with the prefix of अज्ञातम्. II.—There are unacknowledged verses borrowed from Yājñavalkya as shown above. III.—It has occasionally metres other than Anuṣṭubh, which is the usual metre of all ancient works. IV.—There are indications to show that the Brāhmaṇa had at the time of that work descended to occupations like trading, agriculture, painting, the profession of bards, &c. (see p. 41 vv. 375, 376; p. 45 vv. 384, 385). V.—Allusion is made to the Bhāgavata Saṃpradāya (see p. 15 v. 381). VI.—Certain Sūtras are declared as unfit to touch (see p. 37 v. 295). Such a prohibition 20 does not occur either in Manu or Yājñavalkya.

All these passages, which to my mind indicate a later date of the production, do not occur in the Atri of the C and D collections.

III. Vṛiddhātri Samhitā (A) is almost the same as Laghu Atri. The opening verse in the two is different; and the dialogue between Indra and Bṛhaspati, which concludes the Laghu Atri, is omitted here. A few verses have been added, and some omitted, so that the number of verses is on the whole less by one than that in the Laghu Atri, viz., 133. A comparison of the two leaves no doubt that, though differently named, Vṛiddha Atri as printed is nothing more than Laghu Atri, with differences not more in number or importance than are frequently seen between two manuscripts of the same work from two different parts of the country.

General Remarks.

There is one Atri who is the reputed seer of the fifth Maṇḍala of the Rīg-veda. Probably he may be the same as the one who was the son of Brahmā, and is worshipped as one of the Saptarshi (seven sages). It is impossible to regard the present Smṛiti as a work of that individual; for, even in Vedic times, Atri is often mentioned as a very ancient sage. It is likely the production of some one who was either a descendant of Atri or a follower of his doctrines.

Atri is now worshipped as one of the seven sages with the recitation of Rīch 4, Sūkta 78, Maṇḍala V (Rīg-veda), and his wife Anasūyā is mentioned in the Parīśiṣṭa to Ashtaka viii. Adhyāya iii. (not found in Prof. Max Müller's edition of the Rig-veda). There are numerous allusions to Atri in the Rig-veda (see Prof. Max Müller's index to his Rig-veda in vol. V). Atri appears in the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra Parīśiṣṭa (p. 891) and also in his Gr̥hya Sūtra (p. 163) iii., iv., 2. In the Yajurveda he appears in the Taittirīya Samhitā Kāṇḍa vii. Adhyāya 1. Anuvāka 8.

In the Puranic history, Atri appears as one of the ten sons of Brahmā created out of the mind (see Bhāgavata skanda iii. ch. xii. 10 vv. 22—24). His wife's name was Anasūyā, and he was the father of Datta, Durvāsas and Soma. According to Matsya Purāṇa ch. 194, Atri along with the remaining nine Mānasaputras was destroyed by a curse of Mahādeva, and was again created in the present Manvantara. Here too his wife's name was Anasūyā, but his sons were four instead of three. Rāma in his exile visited the hermitage of Atri before entering the Daṇḍaka forest (see Rāmāyaṇa Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa chapters 117 to 119, and Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa ch. ix. v. 79). On the return of Rāma, Atri was one of those sages who repaired to Ayodhyā to congratulate Rāma on his restoration 20 to his throne (see Rāmāyaṇa Uttara Kāṇḍa ch. i. v. 3). There is another Atri in the Mahābhārata Vanaparva ch. 185, who went to a descendant of king Vena of the solar dynasty for requesting alms, and had a dispute with sage Gautama of that court. The Devibhāgavata states that Atri is the nineteenth Vyāsa or compiler and arranger of the Vedas in the present Manvantara (see Skanda i. ch. iv.).

Atri's son Datta, who has been mentioned before, is now worshipped as representing in one individual the present Hindu trinity of Viṣṇu, Śiva, and Brahmā.

Viṣṇu.

30 Three works appear in Viṣṇu's name, viz., Viṣṇu Smṛiti, Vaiṣṇava Dharmaśāstra, and Laghu Viṣṇu Smṛiti.

I. Viṣṇu Smṛiti (A) is evidently a poem that ought to have no place in the Smṛiti literature. It is what is well known by the name of Anusmṛiti, and forms a part of the Pancharatnī Gītā. Probably the occurrence of the word Smṛiti in the name of the work misled the publisher, and made him think it to be a Smṛiti work.

It is metrical; contains 114 verses, all in the Anuṣṭubh metre save a few at the end; and is a dialogue between the grandson of Dharmarāja and Śaunaka. An earlier enquiry on the same subject by 10 Dharmarāja of Bhīṣma, and a still earlier one by Nārada of Viṣṇu, are noticed. The whole piece is written in reply to the questions contained in the second and third verses.¹ As the nature of the enquiry shows, the work has nothing to do with either ritual, civil law, or penance.

Remarks.—This Anusmṛiti is not found in the Bombay edition of the Mahābhārata, although its inclusion in the Pañcharatnā Gītā would indicate that it was a part thereof. It is worthy of note that while the Mahābhārata makes no allusions to the juvenile exploits of Krishna before he joined the Pāṇḍavas, the Anusmṛiti refers to Krishna's killing of Kamsa and Chāpūra (see p. 13 vv. 39, 40). The vocatives द्विजेश्वर (oh best of the twice-born) and सुनिषीर (oh best of sages) are inexplicable as addressed to Dharmarāja by Bhishma, save by supposing that those verses belonging originally to another work have been adopted and fitted into the Anusmṛiti.

II. The Vaiṣṇava Dharmaśāstra (A) is divided into 100 Ahikāṇḍas. All chapters are mixed prose and verse, except the first and the last two, which are entirely metrical; a circumstance which raises a suspicion that the real Smṛiti work, consisting of the intermediate 97 chapters, is fitted up with an opening and a concluding chapter, which formed a part of some Purāṇic story.

The following is a brief analysis of the Smṛiti :—

- Ch. I.—The earth on being saved from dissolution by Vishṇu in 20 his incarnation of Varāha, found everything in confusion, and being anxious to know her future sought out Kuṣyapa, and enquired as to whose protection she should resort in that exigency. Being referred by him to Vishṇu, the protector of the universe, she goes to him, and asks what would constitute her safety. Vishṇu replies that she should look up for support to virtuous sages. The earth's next enquiry is as to what constitute virtue and good conduct, and this paves the way for the present disquisition on dharmaśāstra by Vishṇu.
- Ch. II.—Gives the four classes and their occupations. 30
- Ch. III.—On the duties of a king.
- Ch. IV.—On weights and scale of fines; it may be remarked that the latter differs from the one adopted by the Mayūkha (see above p. 156 l. 6).
- Ch. V.—On punishments for different offences.
- Ch. VI.—On recovery of debts; has a verse exactly similar to Yāj. ch. ii. v. 53; is a concise statement of the whole law on the subject in prose.
- Ch. VII.—On writings.

समस्तं किं अपञ्चय्य विबुधं किमुत्समरद् । मरणे यञ्जपञ्चय्यं यं च भावमुत्समरद् ॥ २ ॥ 40
यच्च ध्यात्वा द्विजेश्वरं पुरुषो मृत्युमागतः । परं पदमवाप्नोति तन्मे वद महाशुभे ॥ ३ ॥

- Ch. VIII.—On witnesses. It contains a verse exactly similar to Yāj. ch. ii. v. 79.
- Chs. IX. to XIV.—On different kinds of ordeals.
- Ch. XV.—Mentions the twelve kinds of sons, the verses in the chapter being exactly similar to Manu ch. ix. vv. 137—139.
- Ch. XVI.—On the different mixed classes. It mentions Chāṇḍāla among those who are subject to the Smṛiti law.
- Chs. XVII., XVIII.—On inheritance and partition. These are meagrely treated, the verses being similar to those in Manu ch. ix. vv. 208—210, and Yāj. ch. ii. vv. 120 and 138.
- 10 Ch. XIX.—On funeral obsequies.
- Ch. XX.—On the divisions of time, with an exhortation to refrain from lamenting over the dead. It contains extracts from the Bhagavadgītā ch. ii. in the Mahābhārata.
- Ch. XXI.—Funeral obsequies continued.
- Ch. XXII.—On impurity on account of death.
- Ch. XXIII.—On the purification of things.
- Ch. XXIV.—On the eight forms of marriage.
- Ch. XXV.—On the duties of a wife.
- 20 Ch. XXVI.—On the superiority of the senior wife and a wife of the same class. Manu ch. iii., v. 13, disapproving of a Brāhmaṇa's marriage with a Śūdra wife is here quoted, although in ch. xxiv. such a wife is laid down for a Brāhmaṇa by Viṣṇu.
- Chs. XXVII. to XXIX.—Give the different Samskāras or ceremonies, including Upayana, and the duties of a Brahmachārin.
- Chs. XXX. to XXXIII.—Prescribe general rules of conduct for a householder.
- Chs. XXXIV. to XLII.—Give an enumeration of the principal and secondary sins.
- 30 Chs. XLIII. to XLV.—Describe the different hells and the consequences of sins in the next life.
- Chs. XLVI. to LV.—Prescribe penances for different sins. Ch. li. contains a long metrical passage (very likely an extract from some other work) in support of the sacrifice of animals, thus showing that at the date of this Smṛiti the Vedic ordinance of a sacrifice was losing its hold on the minds of the people, and needed the special support of a Smṛiti writer.
- Ch. LVI.—Enumerates the particular portions of the Vedas regarded as peculiarly sacred.
- 40 Ch. LVII.—Describes the persons from whom gifts should not be accepted.

Chs. LVIII. to LXXII.—Give rules of daily conduct in great detail for a household.

Chs. LXXIII. to LXXXV.—On Siddhantas or oblations to manes.

Ch. LXXXVI. to XCIII.—Describe presents made to Brāhmaṇas and their merits.

Chs. XCIV. to XCVII.—On the duties of a hermit and an ascetic. They contain the anatomy of the human body and the elements of yoga philosophy.

Chs. XCVIII. and XCIX.—The earth on hearing the whole Smṛiti praises Viṣṇu, and enters into an utterly irrelevant dialogue 10 with Lakṣmī, in Upajāti metre, by enquiring of the latter as to where she is to be seen.

Ch. C.—Consists only of the verses declaring the merit accruing from the study of this Smṛiti.

Remarks.—This is the Smṛiti which has been made the subject of a commentary named Vaijayantī by Nanda Paṇḍita, son of Rāma Paṇḍita Dharmādhikāri, and which is referred to by Nilakantha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha. This work is exceptional in claiming a divine origin. Nanda Paṇḍita himself considered this claim as extravagant; for he says the present work must be a reproduction by some Rishi of what he 20 orally learnt from Viṣṇu, as the Uttara Mīmāṃsā of Dvaipāyana was. This explanation of Nanda Paṇḍita only confirms what is apparent on the most cursory perusal that the whole is a mere compilation, which has been ascribed to Viṣṇu to magnify its importance. The metrical portion of almost every chapter is a quotation, in most places unacknowledged, and in some few places acknowledged (see pp. 159, 160, 162) as traditional verses under the name of pūrigāthā. There occur a large number of verses that are found in Manu (see pp. 93, 94, 97, 111) and Yājñavalkya (see pp. 86, 89, 95, 99, 112). As regards the relative position of Viṣṇu in respect of Manu, it appears to me that a long 80 period must have elapsed after Manu, before the present work appeared, for—I., the limits laid down by Manu for A'ryāvarta in chapter ii. verse 22² had to be made more indefinite in the time of Viṣṇu (vide

* The passage referred to is at the beginning of the commentary, and runs thus :—

p. 160),¹ probably because the Aryas had then spread over a larger country; II., the lengthy defence of the slaughter of animals in a sacrifice at p. 181 could not have been necessary, unless the Vedic rite of sacrifice enjoined by Manu had begun to be looked upon with disfavor in the interval; III., the minute details of the treatment of the dead by Yama, the Pluto of the Áryas (p. 121), do not all appear in Manu. In regard to his chronological position in reference to Yājñavalkya, the facts that Yājñavalkya is often brief where Vishnu is verbose, (compare for instance the contents of chapter v. of Vishnu with the 10 corresponding portions of Yājñavalkya in chapter ii. after the 212th verse, or chapters 73 to 85 of Vishnu to Yāj. ch. i. vv. 217 to 269), that there is more of systematic arrangement and analysis in the former than in the latter, and that civil law occupies in Vishnu a subordinate position to ritual, incline me to the opinion that Vishnu is of an earlier date; although I must add that I do not think they were separated by any considerable length of time. The consideration that leads me to this statement is the almost complete uniformity of details on the different topics treated in the two works (see, for instance, the chapters on the punishment of offences, oblations to the manes, recovery of debts
 20 and purifications of things), particularly in respect to the elements of Yoga philosophy, which even in the Vedic literature has been considered to be a later growth. The fact that there are verses common to the two writers affords no clue to determine the question of priority; but considering the style of Vishnu, which is generally diffuse, it is not unlikely that Yājñavalkya borrowed from Vishnu what he thought was already concise enough without acknowledging the source; and he did so the more readily because these were probably traditional verses and not the production of Vishnu, who himself, like Yājñavalkya, was a compiler.

30 III. Laghu Vishnu Dharmaśāstra (C and D) consists of 109 verses in the Anuṣṭubh metre, and gives the general duties and ceremonies of the four classes and the four orders.

This same work is mentioned in B as वष्णुशैल धर्मशास्त्रं, and is divided into five chapters, which do not interfere with the consecutive numbering of the verses.

Remarks.—This work is not an abridgement of the abovenamed Vaiṣṇava Dharmaśāstra, as its name would seem to indicate, for—I., it is ascribed to a Īśhi Vishnu, who is described as proficient in the Vedic and Smṛiti lore, and who composed the present work at the request of 40 the sages residing at the town of Kalāpa.²

चातुर्वर्ण्यव्यवस्थाम् पश्चिमदेशे न विपत्ते । स मेच्छदेशो विज्ञेय आर्यावर्तस्ततः परः ॥

² See the opening verse which runs thus :—

विष्णुनेकाग्रमासीनं श्रुतिस्मृतिविदां वरम् । पद्मचक्रैर्नयः सर्वे कलापमायकसिन् ॥

This town of Kalāpa appears to have been situated on the northern side of the Himalayas,¹ and is likely the same as is referred to in the Bhāgavata (skandha ix., Adhyāyā 12, v. 6, p. 22). II., It does not contain those texts which are attributed to Viṣṇu by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayukha. III., In its last line it appears to pretend to be an original work referring the reader in respect of its omissions to other works.² IV., It contains a verse which has no counterpart in the large work—Vaishṇava Dharmaśāstra, and which enunciates a doctrine not found in any other Smṛiti. This is the last but one verse in the work,³ and it restricts the fourth order—asceticism (or Sannyāsa) to the Brāhmaṇa 10 class alone, in spite of Manu, who appears to allow it to all the three twice-born classes (see Manu, ch. vi. v. 85, see further Mallinātha's comments on v. 14 of canto viii. of Kalidasa's Raghuvamśa).

Hārīta.

There are three works under the name of Hārīta, viz., Laghu Hārīta Smṛiti, Vṛiddha Hārīta Samhitā, and Hārīta Dharmaśāstra.

I. Laghu Hārīta Smṛiti (A and B) consists of seven chapters, containing 198 verses in all.

Ch. I.—Opens with an enquiry by assembled sages in regard to the duties of different classes and orders and Yoga philosophy, and 20 contains Hārīta's statement of the duties of a Brāhmaṇa. I may note that the study of Dharmaśāstra as distinct from that of the Vedas is particularly enjoined in verse 24 (p. 179). All verses except the last (which is in the Upajāti) are in the Anuṣṭubh metre.

Ch. II.—Lays down the duties of the remaining three classes.

Ch. III.—Describes the duties of the first order.

Ch. IV.—On the duties of the second order, namely, that of a householder. It is noteworthy that the duties here laid down are not the peculiar duties of a householder, and are given in Yājñavalkya, under the head of the duties of a Brāhmachārin. Marichi and Sāunaka are referred to in verse 16 (p. 184).

Ch. V.—On the duties of a hermit (Vanaprastha).

Ch. VI.—On the duties of an ascetic (Sannyāsin).

Ch. VII.—Gives directions in regard to Yoga or meditation.

Remarks.—This work is evidently an extract from some larger work, which in the style of the Mahābhārata introduces the dialogue between

² The verse runs thus :—

आश्रमानामयं धर्मो मया प्रोक्तः सनातनः । यदन विदितं किञ्चित्तदप्येवो गमिष्यथ ॥ 40

³ It runs thus :—

आश्रमास्तु यवः प्रोक्ता वैश्यराजस्योस्तथा । परिव्रज्याश्रमप्राप्तिः ब्राह्मणस्यैव चेदिता ॥

Hárīta and other ṛishīs or sages by way of illustration in the midst of another narrative.¹ The introductory verses of this and the following larger work of Hárīta show that the present work is not an abridgment of the other; for the latter is professedly a dialogue between Ambarīsha and Hárīta (see page 194). The use of the word Bhārgava for Hárīta shows that he was a descendant of Bhṛigu (see p. 172 ch. i. v. 5). This work has no portion bearing on the civil law, and has marks of a recent date; for, I.—It is a sectarian work made long after the Smṛiti period when the schism between the Vaishṇavas and Saivas had become marked (see ch. i. vv. 2 and 6; ch. ii. v. 9; ch. vii. vv. 19 and 20, where नारसिंह, विष्णु, and मधुसूदन are referred to with peculiar veneration). II.—There is a difference observable between the definitions of a Brāhmaṇa given by Manu (ch. i. vv. 87—91) and Yājñavalkya (ch. i. vv. 118, 119,) on the one hand, and by Hárīta on the other; the former describing him by distinctive occupations, and the latter marking him by his parentage alone.² III.—There is strict use of the word *devīa*³ for a Brāhmaṇa alone marks a process of segregation more developed than in the times of Manu or Yājñavalkya. This is strengthened by v. 11 in ch. ii. on p. 180, which, while assigning to a Śūdra the service of the twice-born as his duty, specially directs that that service be that of a Brāhmaṇa.⁴

II. Vṛiddha Hárītā Samhitā (A) consists of eight chapters, 2,587 verses, all in Anuṣṭubh metre. It is styled in the colophon of each chapter as विश्वद्वयमीशास्त.

- Ch. I.—King Ambarīsha sought instructions of Hárīta on the subject of the duties of the different classes, and of the road to final beatitude. Hárīta commences by establishing the position of Viṣṇu as the head of the Hindu pantheon, and inculcates his worship in its different forms.
- 30 Ch. II.—Gives the well known Panchasamskāras or five initiatory observances of the Vaishṇavas, viz., Puṇḍradhāraṇa or the marking the forehead with certain perpendicular streaks; 2, chakra dhāraṇa or cicatrization of the body with marks of Viṣṇu's disc; 3, Nāmasamskāra assuming any one of the names of Viṣṇu; 4, the Mantra Samskāra, or the ceremony of receiving a mystic mantra or formula from the preceptor; 5, Bimbadarśana, receiving an idol from the preceptor.

¹ See v. 3. ch. i. (p. 172) which runs thus:—

अगारं कथयिष्यामि पुरा वृत्तमनुत्तमम् । कथिभिः सहस्रवार्दं हारीतस्य महात्मनः ।
 40 (p. 178) ch. i. v. 15.—आह्वय्यं आह्वयेनैवमुत्पन्नो आह्वयः स्यूतः ।

² See p. 179 ch. i. vv. 25 and 31 together.

³ Compare Manu ch. i. v. 91, where no such distinction is made.

- Ch. III.—Contains ceremonies for the recitation of certain mystic formulas, in tedious and unmeaning detail; refers to the Rāmāyaṇa, and certain incarnations of Viṣṇu as Varāha, Vāmana, Hayagrīva. These deities command special adoration from none in these days except the Vaiṣṇava. I may note the fanciful etymology of the term Kṛishṇa at p. 234. There is one prose passage (see p. 233) and some verses in the Sardūprikṛīḍita metre (see pp. 239 and 243), which is never seen in the earlier works. The Saptarishis, or the constellation of seven sages, are given in v. 368 p. 224. Sanaka (p. 227), Kāyapa, Kauśika, Nārada, Vāḷakhilya (see p. 229) are referred to.
- Ch. IV.—Ritual of the worship of Viṣṇu; articles requisite or prohibited in a sacrifice (pp. 252, 253); the pure and the mixed classes (p. 256); things fit and unfit to be accepted (pp. 257, 258); the duties of the four classes; punishment for offences (p. 259); the general civil law on the subjects of debts, inheritance, strīdhana, the different kinds of sons, &c.—these are very meagrely described. Several of the verses on civil law are borrowed from Yājñavalkya (pp. 262—264). Hārīta refers the reader to Manu, Ātyāyana, Nārada, and Yājñavalkya for further information on the subject (p. 265). In the last verse¹ Hārīta represents himself as having been addressed along with Manu and Nārada by Brahmā.
- Ch. V.—Lays down ritual for the daily and occasional worship of Viṣṇu. It is an acknowledged reproduction of what was said by Brahmā to Maṇu, Bhṛigu, Vasishṭha, Marichi, Dakṣha, Angiras, Pulaha, Pulastya, Atri (see p. 266). The different forms of Viṣṇu are distributed among the different classes for adoration (see p. 281). The sect of Lokāyatikas is referred to (see p. 267), the worship of any deity but Viṣṇu is condemned, 30 and among things to be recited by a householder, the Purans sacred to Viṣṇu are ranked next after the Vedas. Śrīsūkta and Purushasūkta are prescribed for the daily worship (see v. 1271 p. 300).
- Ch. VI.—Describes the fairs to be held by village authorities in honor of Viṣṇu (p. 314), different sacrifices, and funeral ceremonies (pp. 320 and 321). It is to be remarked that the practice now observed among some Hindu tribes of carrying their dead to the burning ground with music before them is indicated in v. 1530 p. 321. Results of sins (p. 327), the five great sins 40 (p. 328), and the secondary ones and penances for different sins

¹ See the last verse of ch. iv. (pp. 265, 266) which runs thus:—

यदाह भगवान् भक्ता मनोः स्वायम्भुवस्य च । नारदस्य च ये सम्यक्तदय कथयामि ते ॥

(p. 331) are next mentioned. The definition of a parśad or an assembly (v. 1668 p. 333) is next given. Recitation of the Vishṇu-Sahasra-nāma or the thousand names of Vishṇu is enjoined (p. 341), and penances to be performed in secret are enumerated (p. 343).

10 Ch. VII.—On the ritual of the different Iśtis or sacrifices of the Vaishṇavas. Hārīta professes to have been initiated into it by Bhṛigu, who learnt it from Vighanas, who in his turn was indebted to Vishṇu for it (see v. 1889 p. 352). While speaking of the Vaiyūhi sacrifice, a list of persons who are represented as possessed of prosperity and knowledge, is given with a direction that they should be worshipped in that order. I do not understand the principle of that order. That list contains Hārīta himself (p. 358). The twenty-four names of Vishṇu which every twice-born has to repeat before his daily prayers with the different permutations and combinations in the arrangement of the four weapons¹ of Vishṇu in his four hands is given at p. 361. A list of the eminent votaries of Vishṇu is given at p. 369, which contains Hārīta, Ambarīsha, and almost all the personages of the Rāmāyana down to Trijāṭā, one of the female demons guarding on Sītā while in the city of Rāvāṇa. There is a quotation from the Bhagavadgītā (p. 378 v. 2216).

20 Ch. VIII.—Lays down the ritual of the Vishṇu-worship, a strenuous exhortation to follow the Vedas, and attaches the heaviest sanctions to the slightest divergence therefrom (p. 394). In support of it a legend is narrated wherein Śāṇḍilya, a descendant of Kāśyapa, who promulgated a ritual of worship differing from that in the Vedas, was condemned to perdition for a number of years; and had to be born again as Jamadagni to atone for the said 30 conduct of his (pp. 395, 396). The practice of Suttee or self-immolation by a wife on the pile of her deceased husband is referred to (vv. 2432, 2433 pp. 396, 397). Imprecations are pronounced on all those who may not be Vaishṇavas (p. 403).

Remarks.—This work too is the modern production of a Vaishṇava for sectarian purposes. It is diffuse in its style, and often mystic in its commandments. The hatred for Śiva and his followers betrayed by this work in numerous places² cannot permit an earlier date to be assigned ¹ They are चक्र a conch shell, चक्र a disc, गदा a club, and पद्म a lotus.

² See for instance verse 73 at p. 200:— दशार्चनं विष्णुस्तस्य भार्गव यत्र दृश्यते । तच्छ्रावणां
40 विधिः शोको न विज्ञानं कदाचन ॥ Verses 937 and 938 at p. 272:—शिवार्चनं विष्णुर्द्वे च

to this work than the 11th century,¹ when the Vaishṇava sects of Rāmānuja and Rāmānanda came into existence. The exclusive worship of Viṣṇu enjoined (see vv. 2540, 2541 on pp. 405, 406), the stern prohibition of an oblation to the manes on an Ekādaśī or the eleventh lunar day of a fortnight (see v. 2564 at p. 407), the recitation of the Viṣṇu sahasranāma, or the thousand names of Viṣṇu being every day enjoined (see v. 1767 at p. 341), the ritual of Viṣṇu worship and Vaishṇava practices of cicatrization and the like in chapter II.—all these mark a date for this composition subsequent to the schism between the followers of Viṣṇu and 10 Siva. Further, the facts that this work is styled Viśiṣṭa Dharmaśāstra,² and contains the worship of Viṣṇu and Lakṣmi, in their various incarnations,³ together with a sacrifice in honour of vyāḥa or certain forms of Viṣṇu (see p. 360); point to the work being the lucubration of a follower of the Rāmānujas. The author has indeed spared no pains in attempting to give his work very great antiquity by fathering it on Hārīta, and stating that almost all the ancient Rīhis followed this Vaishṇava Dharmaśāstra (see p. 409), and that the doctrines contained in the present work had the sanction of Manu (see v. 2576 pp 408, 409). But Bṛiḡu's version of Manu, which is extant, as well as the 20 works of Viśiṣṭha and the rest, referred to as great Vaishṇavas, do not give the faintest trace of the Viṣṇu worship as here inculcated. The author's notions about the unity of time and of action are anything but sound. The work professes to be a dialogue between Ambarīṣha and Hārīta, and yet both of them are mentioned amongst the reputed Bhāgavatas, and are therefore directed to be worshipped along with Viṣṇu (see p. 369). Hārīta in one place is made the direct addressee of Brahmā,⁴ at another he is a pupil of Bṛiḡu,⁵ and at another still he is a pupil of Manu.⁶ And yet the truth is out when Viśiṣṭha, Bṛiḡu and Sanaka are mentioned among the ancient (purātana) sages.⁷ On 30

¹ See Wilson's Essays on the Religion of the Hindus, vol. I., p. 17. The date of Rāmānuja according to Prof. Goldstücker is the middle of the 12th century A. C. See Literary Remains of Dr. Theodore Goldstücker, vol. I. p. 237.

Manu is here made a pupil of Bṛiḡu !

⁷ See the first two verses of the VIII. chapter—

अथ वक्ष्यामि राजेन्द्र विष्णुपूजाविधिं परम् । श्रौतं महर्षिभिः शोकं वसिष्ठायैः पुरातनैः ॥ वैष्णवस्यै च भृगुवाचैः सनकायै च योगिभिः । वैष्णवेर्वैदिकैः पूर्वैर्यदुदाहरितं पुरा ॥ the whole the impression left by the work on my mind is that it broaches doctrines which had no existence during the Smṛiti period; and that it is a fair sample of the mischief done by writers of degenerate times either palming their works on old sages or interpolating their own productions into ancient works.

This work has nothing to do with civil law, although it takes some extracts from Yājñavalkya (see p. 265), and refers the reader for the rest to Manu, Yājñavalkya, Kātyāyana and Nārada.

III. Hārīta Dharmasāstra (C and D) consists of 111 verses in Anuṣṭubh metre, and contains ordinances in regard to penances, impurity, debts, succession, oblations to manes, and a few unconnected verses on the subject of alienation. The last verse here is स्मार्तं विप्रं, &c. which is the same as is cited above at page 34 line 7, Part II. and attributed to Nārada; on the authority of Kamalākara (see note p. 34 line 39 Part II).

Remarks.—From the abrupt commencement and end of this work it is clear that it is a detached portion of a larger work. There is reason to suppose that this is the genuine Smṛiti of Hārīta, for it contains a verse which is attributed by Nīlakanṭha to Hārīta (see above p. 77 l. 7), and is found in this work alone. It must be noted that in 20 all the places where Hārīta is cited by Nīlakanṭha, this is the only place where he appears in metre; in all the other places the citations are in prose (see part I. p. 31, l. 19; p. 34 ll. 9 and 11;¹ p. 35. l. 26). Colebrooke (p. 468 vol. I. Cowell's edition) says that a metrical abridgment of Hārīta's treatise in prose is extant. There are no grounds at present to say that the metrical work of Hārīta is an abridgment of his prose treatise; for those prose passages of Hārīta which have been quoted by Nīlakanṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha are not to be found in the metrical work.

The important verse of Yājñavalkya ch. ii. v. 135, on succession to a 30 sonless separated male, is found here exact to the letter, thus suggesting a hypothesis that this may be a traditional verse which Yāj. borrowed.

A verse cited above at p. 123 l. 8, which is ascribed to Vyāsa by the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, the Mitākshara and the Vīramitrodaya is found here.

There is a verse in this which directly contradicts the doctrine laid down by our courts that subsequent in chastity of a widow does not operate to divest her of a share once vested in her. It runs thus : अर्वाव्यभिचारिणी शक्यावच्छ नियमे स्थिता । तत्र तस्या भवेद्यसमन्यया स्याद्विदुष्यते ॥ Translation :—
40 long as the widow is chaste and devoted to religious observances, so long shall wealth be hers; else it vanishes, i. e. is taken away from her.

¹ Note that this passage is referred to Śankha by the Vīr. l. 170 p. 2, and Aparāka.

Uśanas.

There are three works attributed to Uśanas, viz., Anuśanaśa Dharmaśāstra, Anuśana Smṛiti, and Anuśana Smṛiti Dharmaśāstra.

I. The Dharmaśāstra of Uśanas (A and B) consists of 51 Anuṣṭubh verses, which give nothing more than a list of the several mixed classes and their occupations.

Remarks.—There is nothing in the work to indicate its authorship; while its contents rather point to its being an extract from some work on the sub-divisions of castes (see the first and the last verses). There is internal evidence to show that it could not have belonged to the Smṛiti period; and I cannot understand why Uśanas's name was associated with it, unless it be that in some controversy about castes, this composition was adduced by one party under the reputed name of Uśanas to give it antiquity. But this is a mere conjecture. That the work was made after hostilities among different castes had arisen is quite clear from the way in which the caste of kāyastha is described in verse 25 at p. 499.¹ While the mention of Tantramārga or the worship of Sakti in v. 47 at p. 500 would prevent this work from being assigned to any early period of the Dharmaśāstra literature,² the mention in the same verse of 20 Vaikhāṇasas, who are styled Nārāyaṇa Gaṇāḥ, or a community of Nārāyaṇa's followers, would bring the work down to the 11th or 12th century according to some European scholars.³ This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that several castes are here mentioned which are not referred to either in Manu or Yājñavalkya.

Vasiṣṭha is mentioned in v. 45 at p. 500.

II. The Smṛiti of Uśanas (A) consists of 618 Anuṣṭubh verses in nine chapters. It has one prose passage in the 9th chapter at p. 558.

Ch. I.—Certain sages headed by Śaunaka repaired to Anśana 30 Bhārgava to receive instructions in Dharmaśāstra. He reproduced to them what Uśanas had said on the subject before. This chapter contains a medley of directions connected with the daily life of man.

ककाक्षौर्ण्यं यमाक्षौर्ण्यं स्थपतेत्यकुन्तनम् । आपाक्षराणि सकृन्म कायस्थ इति कीर्तितः ॥

³ About the tenets of these Vaikhāṇasas, see Prof. Wilson's Essays on the Religion of the Hindus, vol. I. p. 17.

Chs. II. and III.—Give details of Āchāra, including oblations to manes, almost the same as in Manu, without the arrangement thereof found in the latter. It mentions the number of Ashtakas to be three, whereas Āśvalāyana mentions them as four (see above note 2 p. 187). An oblation at Gayā and death at Prayāga, or the present Allahabad, are spoken of as meritorious (see v. 237 p. 521).

10 Chs. IV. and V.—Śrāddha ritual is here given. Proper and improper persons for invitation at a Śrāddha are described. In vv. 256 and 257 p. 523, the students of Yajurveda and Atharvāṅgīrasa are specially mentioned as entitled to preference. The details are very minute.

Chs. V. to VII.—Treat of impurity consequent on birth and death. Manu and Prajāpati are referred to (p. 535). At p. 539 a verse from Manu (see ch. v. v. 60) is bodily quoted without acknowledgment. The non-acknowledgment may perhaps be due to the verse being a traditional one in Manu's work itself.

20 Chs. VIII. and IX.—Treat of penances. As compared with Yājñavalkya, the number of offences and penalties is considerably multiplied. A certain precept is enjoined as one laid down by *Brahmā*¹ himself (see v. 587 p. 551).

Remarks.—The author of this Smṛiti is represented as a descendant of Uśanas, who belonged to the genus of Bṛiḡu (see v. 1 of ch. i., p. 502). The Uśanas mentioned here could not have been the one that is referred to in the Mahābhārata as the antagonist of Angīras,² as the son of Bṛiḡu,³ the preceptor of the Dānavas or demons⁴ so often called kavi or Śukra; for v. 3. ch. i. p. 501 represents Bhārgava or a descendant of Bṛiḡu as the father of Uśanas. An examination of this work has led me to think that this is not the Smṛiti which was 80 accepted by modern writers on Dharmāśāstra as the Smṛiti of Uśanas. My grounds for this statement are—I. That those passages which are referred to Uśanas by Nīlakaṇṭha in his *Vyavahāra Mayūkha*⁵ are not met with here, although apparently the work as it stands is complete in itself; II. The inculcating of the study of Vedas, by interdicting conversation with a twice-born who does not study them; and the condemnation of their recitation like a parrot, mark a period when the injunction in regard to Vedic study was losing its hold on the mind of the public, and recitation by rote without understanding its sense had come into vogue¹; III. Again the setting down of a marriage with a woman of a dissimilar class as a primary sin marks a period removed from Manu and Yājñavalkya (compare Yāj. ch. i. v. 57 and ch. ii. v. 125). I would here note a circumstance which prima facie might send this Uśanas far anterior to Asvalāyana's time, for v. 186 p. 516 gives the number of the Ashtakas or the lunar eighth day of the dark fortnight of particular months to be three, while Asvalāyana in Sūtra 1, kaṇḍikā 4, ch. ii. of his Grihya Sūtra mentions them as four. The commentator of Asvalāyana notices a divergent opinion of certain previous authors who held the number to be three, and says Asvalāyana 10 has in his said Sūtra distinctly mentioned the word four to mark his dissent. But it appears to me that this fact does not prove the priority of Uśanas to Asvalāyana, although this particular doctrine of his would be older than that of Asvalāyana on the point.

Bhṛigu (p. 504) and Manu-Prajāpati (p. 535) are referred to.

At the beginning of ch. iv. (p. 523) a student of the Yajurveda or the Atharvaveda is mentioned as a preferential Brāhmana for an oblation to the manes. Why a student of the R̥g-veda is omitted, when he is specially recommended to represent the deceased relative at an oblation is not clear.² 20

III. The Smṛiti Dharmaśāstra of Uśanas (C and D) consists of seven chapters, and is mixed prose and verse. The copy D, which is a very recent transcript, is taken either from C itself, or from a copy which is the common original of them both; for in this work there are large gaps and clerical errors which in both copies exactly correspond.

Chs. I. and II.—The whole of the first and a large portion of the second chapter is omitted in the MSS. The portion is mostly in prose. Manu is quoted from in this work.

Ch. III.—The names of the different pure and mixed classes are given herein. 30

Ch. IV.—Treats of penalties and penances for different offences. On the subject of the marriage of a twice-born with a Śūdra woman, Uśanas states a variety of opinion by referring to Vasistha, Gautama, Hārta, and Vaiśvata, the last being likely Yama. There is a pretty large gap in this chapter.

Ch. V.—Treats of Śrāddha ritual. It gives references to Manu and Vaiśvata.

Ch. VI.—This chapter is termed the Vikrayādhyāya, or a chapter on sale generally, but mentions nothing more than such articles as may or may not be sold by a Brāhmaṇa.

Ch. VII.—Treats of punishments to offenders according to their classes. Branding and mutilation are mentioned amongst the punishments. Manu is several times quoted; on one occasion on the authority of Manu a list of articles is given, which it is not theft to take without the owner's permission.¹ The last verse exalts this work to the rank of the Vedas, and lays down its study as very meritorious.

Remarks.—The style of this work appears to me to be quite modern from the way in which a proposition is first laid down in prose, and in support thereof verses from older authors are quoted, with the preface भवति चात्रश्लोकः (there is indeed a verse to this effect). This looks quite like the manner of the modern Nibandhakāras or treatise writers. Another reason why I am not disposed to treat this work as the real Smṛiti work of Uśanas is the author's mentioning a diversity of opinions on a subject without stating his own view thereon (see analysis of chapter iv.) I think this mode of statement marks it as a compilation, and is inconsistent with the character of a legislator, such as Uśanas is admitted by Yājñavalkya and other authorities to be. It must also be noted that the verses ascribed to Uśanas in the Vyavahāra Mayūkha do not occur in this work. Neither the beginning nor the end suggest anything about the author. The title of the work Smṛiti dharmasāstra, is tautological (see Manu ch. ii. v. 10 quoted and translated in a note at p. 160 above).

All we know of Uśanas is that he was the preceptor of the demons, that he was a descendant of Bṛighu, that he was the priest of Hiranya Kaśipu (see Bhāgavata skandha vii. ch. v., v. 48) and of Bali, the great grandson of Hiranya Kaśipu, that a descendant of his styled Antanasa is a pravara of the family of Gautama Āṅgirasas, and that he was the third Vyāsa or the compiler and arranger of the Vedas in the present manvantara (see Devibhāgavata skandha i. ch. iv.)

Āṅgiras.

There are three versions of Āṅgiras, all very likely copies of the same work more or less complete. The first is Āṅgirasa Smṛiti, the second is the Smṛiti Dharmasāstra of Āṅgiras, and the third Āṅgiraḥ Prokta Smṛiti.

I. Āṅgirasa Smṛiti (A, B) consists of 72 verses in Anuṣṭubh metre, and mainly treats of penalties and punishments as the opening verse²

40 ¹ Compare Bṛighu's version of Manu's Code, ch. viii. v. 339.

² It runs thus:—

यदाभवेत्तु धर्मेन वर्णानामनुज्ञाः । प्रायश्चित्तिभिर्बुद्धा अङ्गिरादुत्तिष्ठन्तीत् ॥ indicates. Nili or indigo is strongly condemned, so much so that the wearing of a piece of cloth colored in indigo, or even the cooking of food with the fuel of indigo plant, is subjected to heavy penalties. A cloth colored in indigo is particularly prohibited to widows.¹ This is observed in the Hindu practice of the present day among the higher classes.² Verse 8 is common to Yama (see p. 562). Āpastamba is referred to in verse 54 (p. 550). There is a verse here (see v. 70 p. 560) which is also found in Āpastamba. Penalties are attached to intercourse of any kind with a Sūdra (see pp. 553, 559). The opening verse taken with the abrupt ending marks this as a fragmentary work. 10

II. The Smṛiti Dharmaśāstra of Āṅgiras (C and D) is substantially the same as above work, with many omissions. The number of verses is 32.

III. The Dharmaśāstra of Āṅgiras (C and D) contains 168 verses in Anuṣṭubh metre. Almost all the verses in the Smṛiti found in A and B are here given; so that there is reason to think that both the above pieces, though differently named, are only incomplete transcripts of this production. The opening verse of this represents Āṅgiras as addressing sages headed by Bhāradvāja.³ There is here a jumbled statement of penalties, purifications, and impurities; but nothing that 20 has reference to civil law. The last verse in the usual manner offers a bait to the study of the work by holding out to its reader absolution from all sins.⁴

Remarks.—This Smṛiti has no reference to civil law as may indeed be inferred from the absence of any quotation from Āṅgiras in the Vyavahāra Mayūkha. There is reason to think, however, that Āṅgiras wrote on other portions of Hindu law, which are not contained in any of the three versions noted above; for example, a quotation in the Nirṇayasindhu, parichchheda iii. the second half l. 51, p. 2, which shows that Āṅgiras wrote on the four Āśramas or orders. Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa quotes 30 Āṅgiras as laying down the number of samskāras (or purificatory ceremonies) to be twenty-five as against the forty given by Gautama and others. There are also other references to this author in standard authors that are not met with in these works, so that it follows that the

यते भर्तारि या नारी नीलीवस्त्रं प्रधारयेत् । भर्ता तु नरकं याति सा नारी तदनन्तरम् ॥

² Compare the passage from Skanda Purāṇa, noted in the Nirṇayasindhu, parichchheda iii. the second half l. 51 p. 2, which prohibits a widow's wearing a colored garment generally.

³ The verse runs thus :—

धर्मजिज्ञासुभिः सम्यगभितीजा महाश्रुतिः । भारद्वाजादिभिः षट् प्राग्वदीदेतदङ्गिराः ॥

Smṛiti as at present available is either incomplete or quite different from that which eminent treatise-writers accepted as belonging to Āṅgiras. Āṅgiras is mentioned in Yājñavalkya Smṛiti (ch. i. v. 4). There are indications in the present work to show that it contains doctrines which must be later than Manu and Yājñavalkya. I. The first is the marked segregation of the Śūdra¹; II. The mitigation of penalties in the case of the juvenile and the old marks in my opinion the introduction of an exception to the general rule in regard to punishments laid down by Manu and Yājñavalkya; III. The 10 restriction in the interchange of meals among the different classes, observed in vv. 55 to 58 p. 559, is not seen either in Manu or Yājñavalkya; IV. In verse 168 (C and D)² there is an authority for the present practice of the Dekkanese, namely, that of cutting off only the ends of the braids of their wives at the Prayāga shrine or Allahabad. The sneer with which this practice is treated by residents of other parts of India make me think it to be recent.³

There is no clue in this work to the age of Āṅgiras, nor anything to show which Āṅgiras he could be, save the fact that he was a contemporary of Bhāradvāja. It is almost clear that there were more 20 than one Āṅgiras. The first is that connected with the Atharvaveda (see the opening passage of the Gopatha Brahmana of the Atharvaveda p. 6; Calcutta, 1870). The second is represented as cotemporaneous with Uśanas,⁴ and as the father of Brihaspati. The third is the Āṅgiras mentioned in the Mahābhārata Vanaparva, chapters 217 to 231. The fourth is one of the six sons of Brahmā who are styled Maharshis, or the great sages,⁵ as indeed the colophon in A styles the author of the present Smṛiti. He is also one of the ten Mānasaputras of Brahmā (see Bhāgavata skandha iii. ch. xii., v. 22). He is the progenitor of a very 30 numerous family afterwards divided into three great branches known as Kevalāṅgiras, Gautama Āṅgiras and Bhāradvājāṅgiras (see Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, second half vi. 12, 3, p. 879). Āṅgiras is one of those who visited Rāma on his return from exile (see the Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa Uttarakāṇḍa ch. i. v. 7).

Yama.

There are two works ascribed to Yama, viz., Yamasmṛiti and Yama-dharmaśāstra.

I. The Yamasmṛiti (A) consists of 78 verses, all in the Anuṣṭubh metre, save v. 44, which is in the Upajāti. It professes to deal with Prāyaścitta or penance alone (v. 1 p. 560); has some verses on purification; refers to Brihaspati (see v. 27 p. 562) and Bhāsvati in v. 33 p. 563, v. 17 p. 562, and v. 54 on p. 565; speaks of certain castes 10 stigmatized as Antyaja common with Āngiras (see v. 3 p. 554 and v. 38 p. 557 respectively). Verse 65 on p. 560 ends in यमस्य वचनं यथा (as has been said by Yama); v. 74 corresponds to v. 163 of Āngiras in C and D.

Remarks.—It is clear from the opening verse that this work relates only to one portion of the law; and the contents show that that too is done imperfectly, there being nothing either at the beginning or at the end to connect this work with Yama. It is most likely a detached fragment of another work. The last verse shows that the work was addressed to a द्विजश्रेष्ठ (the best of Brāhmaṇas), thus giving a pretty clear indication that this does not belong to the class of Smṛiti works, 20 which as a rule are addressed to an assemblage of Rishis or sages.

This fragment affords indications of a later date than the digest of Yājñavalkya; as may be seen from the following circumstances:—

I. The exception introduced in v. 15 p. 561 to the general maxim that for the purposes of a sentence there is no proxy in criminal law, is not met with in Manu or Yājñavalkya; II. The penances laid down by Yājñavalkya are superseded in favour of gifts to Brāhmaṇas;¹ III. The exemption from punishment extended to children under six years of age in v. 16 pp. 561, 562. IV. The non-mention in Yājñavalkya of the castes referred to in v. 54 p. 565.

From a consideration of v. 17, on the one hand, which is met with in Āngiras, and from vv. 15 and 16 on p. 561 on the other, I am inclined to place Yama after Āngiras, inasmuch as the former notices an exception made by the latter to Yājñavalkya's law, and lays down an exception to that exception.

The definition of a शत्रुपेक्ष given in v. 37 p. 563² is opposed to that

यावद्विना न पूज्यन्ते सम्भोजनहिरण्यकैः । तत्रापीयन्नतस्यापि तत्पार्थ न भवत्यति ॥

² It runs thus:—

सर्पार्थं तु सयुद्धत्वं महार्थं यः भवत्यति । स वै शत्रुपेक्षो नाम नृपकादिषु गृहीतः ॥ given in the Amarakośa, kūṇḍa ii. varga ix. v. 5 and its commentary (see Bombay series edition of 1877 p. 210).

II. The Dharmaśāstra of Yama (B, C and D) consists of 98 Anuṣṭubh verses; refers mainly to Prāyaścitta or penance; and has a few verses on purification and on water oblations to deceased relations.

Remarks.—This Smṛiti is entirely different from the one above mentioned as found in A. Only a few verses agree, such as 33 and 54 of this Dharmaśāstra. The author of this is represented¹ as the foremost of Rishis, and declaring the law as laid down by Srutis and Smṛitis.

- 10 The inclusion of Smṛitis amongst his sources stamps him as a compiler and not a law-giver. In v. 29², a Kāpālika is mentioned as one whose food should not be partaken of on pain of incurring the penalty of performing at the least two Aindavas, which are penances similar to Ohāndrayānas. Kāpālikas are worshippers of Bhairava, an attendant of Śiva, who has no place in the Vedic pantheon, and is purely a Purāṇic or Tantric deity not met with in Manu or Yājñavalkya. It must be noted that the mention of this sect under the preceptorship of Baṭukanātha at Ujjayini, now popularly spelt as Oojein, in the Śāṅkara Vijaya of Ānanda Giri in ch. xxiii. p. 138, as well as in the
- 20 Śāṅkara Jaya of Mādhava, takes this sect to a time earlier than that of the famous Śāṅkarācārya.

As regards the pedigree of the author, Colebrooke (see p. 469 of vol. I. of his Essays) considers him as the brother of the seventh Manu or Manu of the present age. The fact that both the present Manu and Yama are styled Vaivasvata or sons of Vivasvat would indeed make them brothers; but it is hard to see how Yama, who, as son of Vivasvat, is represented in the Vedas as a deity³ can be identified with a human legislator who is expressly mentioned in this work as the best of Rishis or Munis. It is fair to add that a quotation from Yama, which

- 30 Kullūka has taken in his gloss on v. 38 ch. ii. of Manu, affords grounds to hold that Yama the legislator was also son of Vivasvat. But that passage is not found in both the abovementioned versions of Yama, and I am not sure that the work of Yama mentioned by Kullūka may not be entirely different. If we are to suppose them as one, then it must follow that our present Yama is only fragmentary. That this is likely will appear from several texts which are elsewhere attributed to Yama, but are not found here.⁴

40 ² It runs thus :—

कापालिक्कचमोक्त्यां तज्जरीयानिनां तथा । कुच्छन्दमचरेज्ज्ञानादज्ञानादेन्दवद्वयम् ॥

³ See Muir's text, vol. V., ch. xviii. pp. 287 to 305.

⁴ See for example Nirṇayasindhu Parickhēda iii. the first half l. 37 p. 1, where a text of Yama is quoted on the subject of marriage.

Verse 78 lays down a complete change of the gotra or family of a woman on her marriage.¹

Verse 91 mentions Gospiṅga or the horn of a cow as a certain measure of height, of the definite extent of which I am not aware, although it appears to be something like a cubit.²

Verses 19 and 20 contain strange provisions for punishing suicide (only an unsuccessful attempt of which is punishable under the Indian Penal Code), and for punishing the sons and friends of one who successfully or unsuccessfully attempts suicide.³

Yama appears in the Ṛig-veda and Sātapatha Brāhmaṇa of the White Yajurveda as a deity to whom several hymns are addressed. He is worshipped now with the recitation of Ṛig-veda x. 14, 13. In the Purāṇas, no Yama is met with as either a king or a sage; so that I am strongly inclined to regard the Smṛiti writer Yama, whom Kullūka quotes in his comments on Manu ch. ii. v. 38, as trying to enhance the importance of his work by styling himself the son of Vivasvat, and so giving the work an appearance of being a production of god Yama. The Purāṇas represent Yama as the guardian deity of the south. Being cursed by sage Māṇḍavya, he is said to have become incarnate in the 20 form of Vidura, the natural brother of Dhṛitarāshṭra and Paṇḍu (see Mahābhārata Ādiparva chs. 107 and 108). Yama is also said to have appeared in this world in the form of Yudhisṭhira (see Mahābhārata III, 314, 6, l. 310, p. 2).

His office in heaven is to judge of the actions of men in this world after their death, and to give rewards or punishments as may be due. As above mentioned, extracts attributed to Yama exist in several works besides those previously described, which are not to be found in these collections. Such a work therefore must have been current in several parts of India, particularly about the South at or about the time 30 of Yājñavalkya.

Āpastamba.

There is only one work named Āpastamba Smṛiti in all the collections I have consulted (A, B, C, and D). It consists of ten chapters in the Anuṣṭubh metre, and treats of nothing but penances as the opening verse indicates.

स्वगोत्राङ्गवयते नारी विवाहास्तमे पदे । स्वामिगोत्रेण कर्तव्यास्तस्याः पिण्डोदकक्रियाः ॥

² The verse runs thus :—

हस्तौ कृत्वा तु संयुक्तौ पूरयित्वा जलेन च । गोशृङ्गमात्रमुद्यत्य जलमध्ये जलं क्षिपेत् ॥

40

³ The verses run thus :—

आत्मानं घालयेद्यस्तु दण्ड्यादिभिरुपक्रमैः । दृतो मेधेन केतव्यो जीवतो विज्ञातं दमः ॥
दण्ड्यास्तनुमिश्राणि मत्वेकं पणिकं दमम् । प्रायश्चित्तं ततः कुपुयेयास्मान्ममचोदितम् ॥

- Ch. I.—Contains 34½ verses; mostly treats of penances for injuries or annoyances done to cows. The highest reverence is enjoined for cows; and minute directions are given for their tending, tying, &c.¹
- Ch. II.—Contains 14 verses; states what things never become impure, and how others are purified when impure.
- Ch. III.—Contains 12 verses; lays down penances for living under the roof of a Chāṇḍāla; has general rules and exceptions in regard to the performance of penances; has a verse (No. 6) found also in Āṅgiras and Yama (see pp. 557 and 562). Verse 7 is found in Āṅgiras (see p. 561) with a slight variation, viz., that the proxy on whom the punishment is enjoined to be inflicted is the preceptor, or a friend in Āpastamba; whereas he is the father, brother or a relation in Āṅgiras. In verse 10 there is an exaltation of the Brāhmaṇa similar to that on p. 564 v. 48 in Yama.
- Ch. IV.—Has twelve verses; treats of penances for drinking out of a Chāṇḍāla's cup, or for his touch, &c.
- Ch. V.—Has 14 verses; lays down a penance for a twice-born for drinking water while defiled by the touch of a Chāṇḍāla. Verse 4 lays down that there is no penance for a Śūdra except giving presents to Brāhmaṇas. Verse 8 is here referred to Āṅgiras, but it is not found in the Āṅgirasa Smṛiti.
- Ch. VI.—Has 10 verses; refers to the use of indigo, and penances for using it, &c.
- Ch. VII.—Has 31 verses, all relating to a woman in menstruation.
- Ch. VIII.—Has 21 verses; commences with the purification of things; condemns intercourse with the Śūdras. Verses 7 and 8 are identical with vv. 48 and 49 on p. 558 in Āṅgiras.
- Ch. IX.—Has 43 verses; describes miscellaneous penances; vv. 8 and 9 (p. 579) are identical with vv. 44 and 45 (p. 564) in Yama; so are vv. 26 and 27 (p. 581) identical with vv. 71 and 72 (p. 560) in Āṅgiras. The practice of taking Śulka or bride-price is strongly condemned (v. 25, p. 581).
- Ch. X.—Has 16 verses; inculcates forbearance, and mentions Yama in v. 8 as a deity of retribution after death. V. 11 is seen in the Hitopadesa of Viṣṇu śarman, and is a compendium of the duties of a man. Then follow certain exceptions to the law about impurities.

Remarks.—This is professedly a work written on one branch of the 40 Ārya dharmasāstra; and I fail to see why it should have been styled by Colebrooke (see his Essays, vol. I., p. 469) as the metrical abridgment of the larger work of Āpastamba, viz., his Dharmasūtra. To my mind, v. 25 on p. 581¹ appears diametrically opposed to such a supposition, for Āpastamba in his Dharmasūtra Prāśna ii. Paṭala vi., Kāṇḍikā xiii. Sūtra xii. (p. 72) lays down a doctrine about the payment of Sulka or bride-price to the father of the bride, which is inconsistent with the condemnation observed in the said v. 25 p. 581 in ch. ix. Another conclusion that I draw from the said verse is, that this production is much later than Yājñavalkya, who lays down a rule for the devolution of this bride-price, in ch. ii. v. 144.² I must not omit to note 10 that Manu in ch. iii. v. 51 also condemned the acceptance of Sulka in marriages; but I hold that in ch. iii. v. 31, and ch. ix. v. 197 Manu shows the existence of the custom of receiving Sulka which he had to recognise despite his disapproval of it.

As between Āngiras and Āpastamba as judged by their works in compilation A, I am of opinion that Āpastamba is the earlier. For, I. —Āngiras expressly quotes from Āpastamba (see v. 54 at p. 559)³; II.—Āngiras has borrowed some verses bodily and others with some variations from Āpastamba (compare vv. 49, 50, 52, 53, 55, 57, pp. 558 and 559, from Āngiras, with vv. 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, in ch. viii. pp. 20 577, 578 from Āpastamba); III.—A comparison of v. 8 p. 555 in Āngiras⁴ with v. 14 ch. v. p. 574 in Āpastamba⁵ shows that while both are laying down a penance for one and the same objectionable act, the penance is different in the two cases. Āpastamba lays down bathing and sipping water, while Āngiras says sipping water alone is sufficient. The use of the word eva (alone) in the said verse shows that Āngiras had in his mind at the time a text which enjoined something more than what he did, and that he emphatically dissented from that text; so that Āngiras must be later.

The theory propounded by me elsewhere that most of these Smṛtis 30 were not the direct productions of their reputed authors, but that they were the reproductions of their doctrines by either their descendants or followers, meets with confirmation here. Apart from the fact that there are several verses in this book which end in आपस्तम्बोऽब्रवीन्नुनिः (so

अश्वेनापि हि शुल्केन पिता कन्यां ददाति यः । तैवे बहुवर्षाणि पुत्रीय मृतमश्नुते ॥

² Viññāṇesvara defines Sulka mentioned in the verse as यद्वहीत्या कन्या दीयते (that which is taken when a daughter is bestowed in marriage) see Mit. ch. ii. l. 62 p. 2.

³ It must be added that although this verse is not found in Āpastamba exactly in this form yet v. 21 in ch viii. p. 578 in the latter is very similar.

40

⁴ The verse runs thus :—

विभो विभेन संसृष्ट उच्छिदेन कदाचन । आचान्त एव शुभेन भक्तिरा पुनिरपरीत ॥

⁵ The verse runs thus :—

विभो विभेन संसृष्ट उच्छिदेन कदाचन । स्वात्माचम्य विदुः स्वाद्यपस्तम्बोऽब्रवीन्नुनिः ॥ said sage Āpastamba),¹ the opening verse² distinguishes the writer of the work from the propounder of its contents, in unmistakable terms.

Uśanas is mentioned in v. 29 ch. i p. 569.

As regards the age in which Āpastamba lived, he is mentioned nowhere as a Ṛishi saye in the Matsya-purāṇa ch. vii., vv. 33, 34, where he appears as a contemporary of Kāśyapa and the presiding priest at the sacrifice named Putrakāmeshṭi by Diti, who became after that sacrifice the mother of the forty-nine Maruts. He also appears as 10 a descendant of Bṛigu. Āpastamba is again referred to in the Mahābhārata Anuśasanika Parva ch. 65 v. 12; but no account of him is given there beyond the fact of his having attained final emancipation by means of a gift of sesamum. There is also a kalpasūtra including Dharmasūtra ascribed to him. The work of Āpastamba, referred to by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha (see Part I. p. 55 l. 7; and p. 96 l. 29) is his Dharmasūtra. Some verses occur here that are also found in Laghu Parāsara.

The antiquity of Āpastamba is clear from his mention in the Vidādi Gaṇa in the Ganapāṭha of Pāṇini (see Bothlingk's Paṇini vol. II. p. 116).
20 There are very few followers of the Āpastamba Sūtra in this Presidency as far as I am aware, and they are confined to the Deśastha and Drāviḍa sections of the Drāviḍ division. Dr. Bühler's statement in his introduction to the translation of Āpastamba (see Sacred Books of the East, vol. II., Introduction pp. 31 and 32) seems to be inaccurate; for those that are generally known in this part of the country as Āpastambīyas are merely followers of the Hiranya keśi Sūtra of the Black Yajurveda.

Samvarta.

The Samvarta Smṛiti (A, B, C, D,) is the same in all the four compilations with slight variations in the number of verses, due probably to accidental omissions in transcription. It consists of 227 verses in A and B, 30 and of 210 verses in C and D, all in the Anuṣṭubh metre. It is not divided into chapters. It lays down the duties of a Brāhmachārin up to v. 34 (p. 587), those of a householder up to v. 96 (p. 592), those of a hermit up to v. 100 (p. 592), and those of an ascetic up to v. 106 (p. 593). Then begins the portion on penances. The verse (v. 108) enumerating the perpetrators of primary sins, is identical with v. 1 ch. viii. of Uśanas (p. 542), and only a paraphrase of Yāj. ch. iii. v. 227.

¹ See for instance ch. v., v. 14 p. 574; ch. vi. v. 9 p. 575; ch. vii. v. 31 p. 577; ch. viii. v. 21 p. 578.

अपस्तम्बो मयस्यापि मायाविश्वविनिर्भवम् । दृष्टिनामां हितार्थं वर्णानामनुपूरणम् ॥

The penance and purification for the slayer of a Bráhmaṇa is laid down up to v. 118 (p. 598) ; those for a drinker of wines (the most objectionable kinds of which are mentioned in v. 115) up to v. 119 (p. 594) ; those for a thief up to v. 122 (p. 594) ; those for the violator of his preceptor's bed, and for one who associates with any one of the aforesaid sinners of four kinds, are laid down up to v. 125 (p. 594). Then follow penances for secondary sins and general ordinances for purification to the end of the work.

Remarks.—The foregoing analysis will show that so far as this treatise shows, Samvarta has not written anything on the civil law : 10 and that in what he wrote on ritual and penance, there is nothing that is original. That this work was accepted by Kamalákara as the genuine Smṛiti of Samvarta would appear from the quotation of v. 178 (p. 598) in his Nirṇayasindhu Parichchheda iii. chapter on impurity l. 19 p. 1. But the quotations made from Samvarta by Nílakaṇṭha in his Vyavahára Mayúkha (Part I. p. 3 l. 11) and by the Víramitrodaya l. 9. p. 2¹ show that Samvarta wrote on the duties of a king and the administration of justice ; and the absence of those passages in the work now available clearly marks it as fragmentary.

It is worthy of note that in v. 35 p. 587,² all other forms of marriage save the Bráhma are emphatically discarded for a twice-born. This circumstance would only show Samvarta to be later than Manu (see ch. iii. vv. 20—26) ; but it affords no clue to deciding his relative position with reference to Yáññavalkya. For the latter only defines the eight forms of marriage laid down by Manu, and is silent as to which should be adopted by the different classes. (See Yáj. ch. i. vv. 58 to 61.) It would appear from this that in Yáññavalkya's time Manu's division of the different forms of marriage among the different classes had been broken through ; and that his only defining them without assigning them to different classes may be taken to be a compromise between 30 Manu on the one hand and Samvarta and other writers on the other. I only offer this as an explanation, which, if correct, will place Samvarta prior to Yáññavalkya, and this on the supposition that the Smṛiti under his name represents his opinions.

The verses in which his name is mentioned are v. 38 (p. 587) ; v. 164 (p. 598) ; v. 227 (p. 603).

As regards his history, the Puráṇas mention him as the seventh of the eight sons of Aṅgiras whose eldest son was Brihaspati. This

तस्माच्छास्त्रानुसारेण राजकार्याणि साधयेत् । शस्त्राभावे तु सर्वेषां देशपटवत नयेत् ॥

³ It runs as follows :—

Samvarta was the presiding priest at the sacrifice of Marutta, a prince of the solar race (see the Mahābhārata, Śāntiparva Rājadharmā ch. xxix. v. 21 [l. 27 p. 2]). Valmiki's Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Sarga xviii. vv. 2, 3 (l. 28 p. 1). alludes to this story of Samvarta, and makes Marutta a contemporary of Rāvaṇa. The fact that Marutta's sacrifice took place on the banks of the Yamunā at a sacred place called Plakshāvatarāṇa may afford some indication to Samvarta's place of residence. Beyond the facts above stated, we know nothing of him; but it appears likely from his being requested to preside at a sacrifice which is celebrated alike in the Brāhmaṇas as well as the Purāṇas, that Samvarta was the head of a school; so that it may be that the present work is the production of some pupil or descendant who epitomized his master's instructions.

Kātyāyana.

The Kātyāyana Smṛiti, as it appears in A and B, is divided into three Prapāṭhakas or parts, each of which is sub-divided into Khaṇḍas or chapters. The number of these Khaṇḍas in all is 29.

Prapāṭhaka I.

20 Khaṇḍa I.—Contains 18 verses in Anuṣṭubh metre; contains general rules in connection with the ritual to be narrated. Vasishṭha is referred to in v. 18 p. 605.

Khs. II. to V.—Contain 14, 14, 12, and 11 verses respectively, and treat of Śrāddha ritual. A certain form of Śrāddha ritual laid down by Vasishṭha is referred to in Khaṇḍa iv. v. 12 p. 608, there is one verse in Upajāti metre in Khaṇḍa v., viz. v. 5. p. 608.

Khs. VI. to IX.—Contain 14, 14, 24, and 15 verses respectively, relate to the production of fire by friction and its worship. Khaṇḍa IX. v. 11. (p. 614) is in Vamśastha metre.

30 Kh. X.—Has fourteen verses, and relates to the duties at the commencement of each day. Nārada is referred to in v. 2. p. 615.

Prapāṭhaka II.

Kh. XI.—Has 17 verses, and relates to the three prayers offered at the commencement, the middle, and the end of the day.

Kh. XII.—Has 5 verses, and one prose passage; relates to libations of water to the gods. Verse 3 (p. 618) is in Upajāti metre.

Kh. XIII.—Has 14 verses; and treats of the five daily sacrifices. Verse 9 is in Āryā metre; and v. 13 contains the dissent of Gotama from the author in regard to saluting the manes.

40 Kh. XIV.—Has 13 verses and one prose passage; relates to Brahma-yajña and Vaiśvadeva. V. 8 (p. 620) is in the Upajāti metre.

Khs. XV. to XIX.—Have 21, 28, 25, 24 and 16 verses respectively, refer to gifts to Bráhmaṇas, the dimensions of the sacrificial altar, certain oblations to the manes, the monthly and fortnightly sacrifices, and the duties of a wife in connection with the worship of fire. Gotama, Śāṇḍilya, and Śāṇḍilyáyana are referred to in v. 21 kh. xvii. (p. 626) and Gobhila in v. 24 do. do.

Prayāñhaka III.

Khs. XX. to XXIX.—Have 19, 16, 10, 14, 16, 18, 17, 21, 19 and 19 verses respectively; treat of the fire to be used in cremation, the worship of fire in detail, impurities on birth and death, 10 sacrifices and penances for omissions in that ritual, and certain other oblations, &c. The Rámáyana is referred to in v. 10 kh. xx. (p. 631). Verse 9 kh. xxii. (p. 633) is identical with Yáj. ch. iii. v. 11. Bhṛigu is referred to in v. 10. kh. xxvii. (p. 640). Verses 12 and 13 ibid. are identical with Manu ch. ii. vv. 46, 47. Gayá as a sacred place of offering oblations to manes is mentioned in v. 9 kh. xxix. (p. 643).

Remarks.—This same work appears in C and D as the Smṛiti of Gobhila, with the colophon styling it as simply Karma Pradīpa. It seems the opening verse¹ gave grounds for this incorrect designation of the work. But it is quite clear that the work is not one of Gobhila but of Kátyáyana, as the colophons in A and B expressly style it; for Karkáchárya one commentator of the Kátīya Śrauta Sūtra (of the White Yajurveda) often refers to Kátyáyana's texts which are found in this work.² From the way in which these references are made by expressly mentioning the name of Kátyáyana, it is evident that Karkáchárya regarded the author of the Karmapradīpa as different from the author of the Śrauta Sūtras he was commenting on, although they bore the same name.³ This is corroborated by the said Karkáchárya quoting certain verses belonging to the Karmapradīpa, viz., vv. 12, 13 80 and 14 kh. xv. (p. 622) as coming from Ohhandoga-pariśiṣṭa (see Kátīya Śrauta Sūtra p. 388 ll. 7, 5, and 9 respectively), and thereby showing that this Karmapradīpa of Kátyáyana was a Parīśiṣṭa of the Śama-veda.⁴ Gobhila is known to be the author of the Gṛihya Sūtras of

² Compare v. 3 kh. vii. p. 610, vv. 3 and 18 kh. xx. pp. 620 and 621, with Kátīya Śrauta Sūtra p. 354 l. 6; p. 354 l. 1; p. 353 l. 21 respectively.

³ This is confirmed by Chandra-Kānta Tarkālakāra in his commentary on Grihyasamgraha (a supplement by Gobhila's son to the Gṛihya Sūtras of Gobhila), 40 who often quotes from the Karmapradīpa, ascribing it to Kátyáyana, and also hints that the Kátīyāna who wrote it was a follower of the Śama-veda. (See Gobhila Gṛihya Sūtra. Bib. Ind. p. 797 ll. 4 and 10.)

⁴ See further Max Müller's Sanskrit Literature, 2nd edition, p. 301 note 5.

Śāmaveda ; and the circumstance of Kātyāyana being a Parisishta-writer to supplement Gobhila, explains why Śāmaveda is invoked at the beginning of this work, and why Gobhila's name is mentioned there. The supplementary nature of this work is apparent from the author's distinctly saying in the opening verse that he was borrowing from authors others than Gobhila, and from his subsequently quoting from other authors where they supported or dissented from Gobhila.¹ It thus appears that this work has been wrongly designated a Smṛiti. At any rate, that work of Kātyāyana from which Nīlakaṇṭha has made 10 very copious extracts in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha, and which Colebrooke describes as 'a clear and full treatise on law' (see Essays vol. I. p. 469), is not the present work which contains nothing about civil law.

Kātyāyana's name is connected with several works such as the Śrauta Sūtra of the White Yajurveda, the Karmapradīpa which, as we have seen, is a parisishṭa of Śāmaveda, the Varttikas on the Grammar of Pāṇini, two Sarvānukramas of the Ṛig-veda and the White Yajurveda, and the Smṛiti as quoted by modern treatise writers on Dharmasāstra. Again, a Kātyāyana is mentioned as residing at the court of Rāma in Uttarakāṇḍa ch. lxxiv. vv. 3, 4 (l. 114 p. 1).² It is hard to say whether 20 all the abovenamed works were the works of one and the same individual, or of several, although I incline to the latter supposition. I may also mention that in so far as the Karmapradīpa alludes to the Rāmāyana (see v. 10 kh. xx. p. 631), it is not unlikely that it may be the production of that Kātyāyana who was a judicial adviser at the court of Rāma. The Skanda Purāṇa mentions Kātyāyana as son to Yājñavalkya from his wife Kātyāyanī and as the author of Vedic Sūtras, thus identifying him with the author of the Kāṭya Śrauta Sūtra.

Bṛihaspati.

The Smṛiti attributed to Bṛihaspati is one and the same in A, B, C, 30 and D; though in C and D there are 31 verses omitted. In A and B it consists of 80 verses, all in the Anuṣṭubh metre, save v. 10 at p. 645, and v. 30 at p. 647, which are in the Upajāti and Indravejṛā metres respectively.

It opens with a question by Indra to Bṛihaspati as to which was calculated gift to secure eternal bliss. Bṛihaspati in reply mentions a grant of land as of superlative efficacy. Yadu and Nahusha of the lunar dynasty, and Prithu, Dilīpa, Nṛiga and Sagara of the solar

40 ² They run as follows :—

ततो विना वसिष्ठेन सार्धमष्टौ प्रवेक्षिताः । राजानं देवसंस्तुतां वर्षस्वेति ततोऽद्वयम् ॥
 मार्कण्डेयोऽथ श्रीहृषीकेशो वामदेवश्च काश्यपः । कात्यायनोऽथ जाबालिर्गौतमो भारद्वाजश्च ॥ dynasty (see vv. 25 and 26 p. 646) are highly extolled for their grants of land; and the horrid penalty of resumption invariably met with in all Sanads (grants) in this country is given in vv. 28 and 29 p. 646. Vyāsa is referred to in v. 43 p. 648. A Brāhman's property is invested with a halo of sanctity, and protected against depredations of thieves and unjust kings by means of a long dissertation. The digging of tanks for public use is commended under a prospect of great merit in the next world. Then follow miscellaneous verses.

Remarks.—There is nothing to support the claim of this work to a rank in the Smṛiti literature; nor is there anything to connect it with 10 Brihaspati save the last verse. The dialogue in the opening verses as well as the style of the whole indicate that it is a piece severed from some Purāṇa, and set up as an independent work, merely because Brihaspati's name occurs therein. Brihaspati's Smṛiti is very largely drawn upon by Nīlakaṇṭha on the civil law; and is represented as one of the four recensions of Manu.¹ That work is undoubtedly not the one that we have before us. It must be noted that in C and D the work commences with a verse which mysteriously introduces king Nala,² and is termed in the colophon as the abridged Brihaspati. Whether it is this work which Colebrooke alludes to when he speaks 20 of the existence of an abridgment of Brihaspati (see his Essays, vol. I. p. 469), it is hard to say. But it is likely it is not; for a work which gives precedence to gifts over all penances, and is so far modern, could not have been accepted by him as belonging to the Smṛiti period.

General Remarks.

Brihaspati is represented as the eldest son of Āṅgiras (see Mahābhārata Ādiparva, ch. 76), brother to Samvarta, the hereditary preceptor of the gods, and a cotemporary of Śukra or Uśanas. In Mahābhārata Ādiparva ch. 104, he is represented as son of Utathya, and brother of Dīrghatamas. He is said to have been the fourth Vyāsa, or 30 arranger of the Vedas in the present Manvantara (see Devī Bhāgavata skandha i. ch. iv.). This is the Purāṇic account of Brihaspati. In the Vedas the priestly character attributed to him in the Mahābhārata is nowhere met with; nor is there any warrant in the Vedas for holding him as the son of Āṅgiras. Dr. Muir indeed asserts both³ these circumstances in respect of him on the authority of the R̥g-veda; and cites in support thereof the following passages from the R̥g-veda, viz., x., 141, 3 and ibid. iv., 40, 1; vi., 78, 1 and x., 47, 6. I shall examine these passages in the said order. In R̥g-veda x., 141, 3, the last quarter is

² The verse runs thus:—

दृष्टविकृतं पुण्यं प्रवक्ष्यामि विवेचतः । यच्छ्रुत्वा तु नलो रामा सर्वपापैः प्रमुच्यते ॥

³ See his Sanskrit texts vol. V., p. 280.

ब्रह्माणं च बृहस्पतिम्. Sáyana explains it as ब्रह्माणं प्रजापतिं बृहस्पतिं च (see Max Müller's Rig-veda, vol. VI. p. 513). How in the face of this authoritative explanation Dr. Muir can make the word ब्रह्माणं qualify बृहस्पतिं as he apparently does, is more than I can see, especially when the existence of the particle च would rather necessitate Sáyana's mode of explanation, and when Prajápati. for whom the word Brahmanam is used according to Sáyana, does exist as a deity by himself on Dr. Muir's own showing (see his Sanskrit texts vol. V. p. 390). Far from appearing in the Vedas as a priest of the gods, Brihaspati appears there as a warrior
 10 having weapons (see Rig-veda ii., 24, 8; vii., 97, 7, and x., 53, 9), and leading the armies of gods along with Indra (see Rig-veda x., 103, 8; viii., 96, 15).

In regard to the descent of Brihaspati from Ángiras, which I think is meant to be understood by Dr. Muir when he says Brihaspati was an Ángirasa, Sáyana's comments on the Rig-veda iv., 40, 1, are indeed vague to some extent, though to my mind they sufficiently indicate that he considered Ángirasa as a deity by himself distinct from Brihaspati, as will more clearly appear from what follows. It suffices for my purposes here to observe that there is nothing in the verse to show 20 that अङ्गिरसस्य in the line must go with बृहस्पतेः. In the second reference in vi., 73, 1, Ángirasa Brihaspati is explained by Sáyana as अङ्गिरसः पञ्चाब्जतः (born after Ángiras), supporting himself by a quotation from Áitareya Bráhmaṇa (see Max Müller's Rig-veda vol. III., p. 888), which is translated by Dr. Haug as follows: "Those parts (of Prajápati's seed after it was heated) which were coals (Ángára) became the Ángiras. Those coals whose fire was not extinguished, and which blazed up again, became Brihaspati." (See Dr. Haug's Áitareya Bráhmaṇa vol. II. p. 220.) In x., 47, 6, Sáyana does not take the word बृहस्पतिम् as standing for the deity going under that name; for he explains it by बृहतो यन्त्रस्य स्वामिनम् (the 30 master of big sacred formulas), and makes it an epithet of Saptagu, who is the Rishi of the hymn. Moreover, the word अङ्गिरसः is referred to सः standing for Saptagu, and does not go with Brihaspati; as indeed it would be impossible to take it, considering the different cases in which the two words stand. Thus it will appear that in none of these three passages is Brihaspati described as an Ángirasa in the sense of a descendant of Ángiras.

It is perhaps superfluous to mention that the word Brihaspati occurs in the Gaṇapátha of Veda in the यन्त्रस्यवादि Gaṇa, seeing that it is found in the Vedas.

Parásara.

40

There are two works going under the name of Paráśara, viz., a Paráśara Samhitá and a Brihat Paráśara Samhitá.

- I. Parásara Samhitá consists of twelve chapters (A, B, C, and D).
- Ch. I.—Several sages once repaired to Vyāsa in his hermitage on the summit of the Himālayas, and requested instructions from him on the subject of Dharmasāstra. He, leading them to the hermitage of his father Parásara at Badarikāśrama, communicated to him the prayer of the sages. Parásara then begins by stating certain ordinances common to all the four classes, and laying down their occupations, and the distinctive features of the different yugas or ages. The chapter consists of 64 verses. Verses 21 and 22 (part ii. p. 3) are identical with Manu ch. i., 10 vv. 85 and 86 respectively.
- Ch. II.—Consists of 17 verses, and treats of the duties of a householder in all the four classes.
- Ch. III.—Consists of 54 verses, and treats of impurities of birth and death. Verses 43 and 44 are in the Upajāti metre.
- Ch. IV.—Consists of 29 verses, and lays down miscellaneous penances. Prajāpati in v. 4 (part ii. p. 13) and Sāṅkha in v. 25 (part ii. p. 15) are referred to. In v. 19 (part ii. p. 14), four out of the twelve kinds of sons are mentioned, and an adopted son is defined. 20
- Ch. V.—Consists of 25 verses; and gives penance for a dogbite, and certain ceremonies observed at the time of cremation.
- Ch. VI.—Consists of 71 verses; and prescribes penances for different faults and omissions.
- Ch. VII.—Consists of $42\frac{1}{2}$ verses, and lays down means of purification and penances. Manu is referred to in vv. 33 to 35.
- Ch. VIII.—Consists of $41\frac{1}{2}$ verses. A parshad is defined, and confession to them by the guilty is enjoined as a means of absolution. The study of the Vedas by the twice-born is insisted on.
- Ch. IX.—Consists of 62 verses; lays down minute rules with regard to the tethering, grazing of cows, &c., and penances for injuries done to them. Verses 33 and 48 are in the Upajāti metre. Manu is referred to in v. 51.
- Ch. X.—Consists of $41\frac{1}{2}$ verses, defines penances, and directs certain penances to be performed for certain offences.
- Ch. XI.—Consists of 53 verses; lays down penances, and defines certain mixed classes;
- Ch. XII.—Consists of 74 verses; lays down penances, a pilgrimage to Rāma's bridge at Rameśvara being one of them.

Remarks.—In C and D the number of the verses in different chapters 40 does not correspond to that given above, owing mainly to several omissions and to a difference of arrangement in respect of chapters.

The arrangement in A and B seems to be the correct one; for its total number of verses comes up to the figure mentioned in v. 73 ch. xii. (part ii. p. 52); and it is an arrangement which the well known Mádharma, commentator of the Parásara Smṛiti, has accepted. Mádharma's analysis is as follows :—

साम्प्रदिष्टासिहेतुनादाचारः पूर्वमीर्यते । आचारस्यान्यथाले तु प्रायश्चित्तगवेषणं । इहाचारे त्रयोऽध्यायः प्रायश्चित्ते नवेदिताः । अनारभतुवैधर्म्ये संधारणेतरौ । शिष्टाचारान्तिके तत्र धर्मौ साधारणौ मतौ । षट्सूत्रैश्चित्तरक्षायां षणोः साधारणाः स्मृताः । आचारे प्रथमाध्याये त एतेऽर्थोः प्रकीर्तिताः । कृष्यादि-
जीवनोपायो द्वितीयेऽध्याय ईरितः । चतुराश्रमधर्मस्तु सूचिता आश्रमोक्तिः । उक्तौ तृतीय आर्शाच-
10 विस्तारश्चाहसङ्गैः । अध्यायत्रयगा अर्थोः प्रोक्ता आचारकाण्डगाः । त्रये प्रकीर्णपापस्य प्रायश्चित्तं प्रपञ्चितं । असङ्गतवृत्तेनादि प्रोक्तं च परिदेदनं । प्रकीर्णदोषः संस्कार आहिताग्नेश्च पञ्चमे । मलवहे च संकीर्णकरणे चोपपातके । प्रायश्चित्तं षष्ठ उक्तं श्रुद्धिबान्ने रसेपि च । अवशिष्टद्रव्यश्रुद्धिः सतमाध्याय ईरिता । प्रायश्चित्तं गोवधे च सप्तम्येनाष्टमे स्मृतं । रोधनादिविशेषेण नवमे तदुदीरितं । अगम्यागम-
ने प्रायश्चित्तं दशमे ईरितं । अभोक्त्यभोजनादौ तदेकादश उदीरितं । द्वादशः परिदोषः स्यत्काण्डयो-
रुभयोर्द्वयोः । ”

II. Bṛihatpārásara (A and C) consists of twelve chapters, mostly in the Anushtubh metre.

Ch. I.—Has 62 verses; opens with the sages headed by Vyása going to Parásara, and requesting instructions from him.
20 Thereupon Parásara describes the different Yugas; detailing the evils to which the present age is subject. Verses 48 to 60 state in brief the substance of the whole work that follows. Verses 61 and 62 state that Suvrata composed the present work with the permission of Parásara. Verse 62 is in the Upendravajra metre.

Ch. II.—Consists of 479 verses; lays down the six duties of the twice-born in v. 7; then gives details with regard to the first of them, viz. sandhyá or prayers offered at stated times of the day; vv. 86 to 223 lay down the minute ritual enjoined during bathing the second duty; vv. 224 to 364 lay down rules 30 with regard to japa (recitation of sacred texts)—the third duty; vv. 365 to 408 lay down the details of the fourth duty, viz., pája or worship; vv. 409 to 447 relate to the fifth duty, viz., the vaiśvadeva (offering to the fire-gods), and vv. 448 to 465 to the sixth duty, viz., Átithya or hospitality; vv. 466 to 479 relate to duties of the several classes. The following metres are here met with:—Vasantatilaká (see vv. 221, 395, 396), Indravajrá (see v. 255, 256, 264, 266, 268, 407, 465), Upajáti (see vv. 265, 267, 269, 364), Upendravajrá (see vv. 362, 446), and Indravaneśá (see v. 222).

40 The following personages are referred to in this chapter :—

Gobhila (see v. 49); Aruṇa (see v. 78); Yájnāvalkya (see vv. 79, 249); Manu (see v. 86); Sanaka (v. 168); Sanandana (v. 168); Sanatkumára (v. 245).

The Pancharātra is alluded to in v. 397 ; v. 62 gives the seven sages of the present age of Vaivasvat Manu, in a certain order which is not the one given in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa skandha viii., ch. xiii. v. 5.

Ch. III.—Contains 184 verses, professes to lay down the duties of a householder in all the four classes (see v. 1), but as a matter of fact permits agriculture to Brāhmanas, and gives minute directions. Cattle as necessary helps to agriculture are exalted to the rank of deities, and are enjoined to be carefully tended (see down to v. 57). The rest of the chapter gives directions in re- 10 gard to ploughing, sowing, setting apart of certain portions of the produce to different sylvan deities and the king and his officers ; and to performing sacrifices. Verses 49 to 52 and 55 to 57 are in the Indravajrá metre.

Ch. IV.—Contains 372 verses, commences with the eight forms of marriage, gives the qualifications of the brides and bridegrooms, the duties of wives towards husbands, and of husbands towards wives ; the five daily sacrifices, and a long dissertation about the suppression of breath enjoined in the Yoga philosophy. Then follow general rules of daily conduct, the different Samskāras 20 or ceremonies, the duties of a Brahmachārin, the three kinds of Snātaka, the desirability of having issue, the commandment as to constant purity, gifts to be made to learned men, prohibition of flesh-eating, purification of things, interdiction of common boarding, and general devotions. Manu is quoted without being mentioned (see vv. 52, 57, 170, which correspond to Manu ch. ix. v. 14 ; ch. ix. v. 3 ; and ch. ix. v. 8 respectively).

Ch. V.—Contains 390 verses ; and relates to oblations to the manes. Āsvalāyana in v. 42, Gautama in v. 52, and Saunaka in v. 120 are referred to. Gayā Śrāddha is mentioned in v. 288. 30

Ch. VI.—Contains 339 verses, and relates to impurities on account of birth and death. It refers to a parśad or diet which is the final judge in all matters of civil law, and lays down penances for various offences. The mention of Agastya at the beginning seems, at present, to be inexplicable. Manu is referred to in vv. 46, 58 ; and Yajñavalkya and Vasishṭha in v. 58. Pilgrimage to Rameśvara is referred to in v. 93. An oilman and a toddy-drawer are mentioned as distinct castes in v. 245. The Mahābhārata story of Indra's killing Trisīras (see Udyoga Parva 5 ch. ix.) is referred to in v. 316. 40

Ch. VII.—Contains 42 verses which lay down the different vratas or penances, among which one named Brahma Kūrcha is mentioned, and this is by imbibing the ordinary Pañchagavya.

- Ch. VIII.—Contains 376 verses, relating to gifts of a cow, the skin of an antelope, gold, and the like.
- Ch. IX.—Consists of 336 verses, laying down the ritual of the different Sānti ceremonies in honor of Vináyaka, the planets, and Rudra; others in consecration of wells and tanks; others still styled Laksha homa and koṭihoma, &c.
- Ch. X.—Contains 145 verses, lays down the duties of a king, and those of the different orders.
- Durvāsas is referred to in v. 115.
- 10 Ch. XI.—Consists of 29 verses, and relates to the four orders.
- Ch. XII.—Contains 195 verses, relates to Prāṇyāma or suppression of breath and concentration. The last verse states that the total number of verses in the work is 3,300, and that Suvrata is its compiler.

Remarks.—I am inclined to think that this work is an expansion by Suvrata of the original Parásara's Samhitá—for (I.) if this had been the original and the other work its abridgment, it is unlikely that Mádhav should have taken no notice of that fact; (II.) its diffuse style and the wholesale quotations go to show that the smaller work was taken 20 as the basis by Suvrata and supplemented with long extracts from the Purāṇas¹; (III.) the sectarian tinge is marked in the work, whereas it is absent in the Parásara Samhitá. Although the number of chapters is the same, yet there is no similarity in the contents.

General Remarks.

Parásara's work is expressly intended to supersede Manu and Yājñavalkya as having become unsuitable to the age owing to lapse of time (see v. 23 ch. i. of Parásara Samhitá, and vv. 59 to 61 ch. vi. of the Brihat Smṛiti). Parásara treats of d'chára (ceremonies) and Prāyaschittá (penance) alone; but this omission to refer to the civil law is not, in 30 my opinion, due to the absence of its development at the time as it is in the earlier law-givers like Atri. Adverting to that subject, Parásara says that certain questions are to be determined by the decisions of a Parshad or an assembly of the learned. I interpret this statement to mean that Parásara found the civil law of the Smṛitis so considerably modified by usage that he felt it unsafe to refer his readers to those works, and therefore invested the verdicts of Parshads or conclaves of the learned versed in the current usages of the country with great authority. On the other two branches whereon he has delivered himself, his law is certainly a later development, seeing the 40 minute details in the ceremonial and the abatement of stringency

in respect of penances observable in his work. Agriculture is not only permitted here to the higher classes under emergency, but a series of directions about it are given, and a ceremonial laid down, a conformity with which excuses a resort to agriculture by the twice-born even in ordinary circumstances. Verses 467 to 469 in ch. ii. of the Bṛihat Parāśara lay down six duties for each of the three twice-born classes, thereby showing that the contest of the Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas for having the same duties assigned to them as to Brāhmanas had commenced long before Parāśara, who attempts to please them by allowing them the same number, though different in detail. 10

Parāśara is named in the work as वासिष्ठः, शक्तिपुत्रः, व्यासपुत्रः, and सत्यवनी- पति, thus giving an account of the author enough to identify him with the Parāśara mentioned in the Mahābhārata Ādiparva ch. 178, and the Matsya Purāṇa ch. 200. The illustrious son of this Parāśara named Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana is the last Vyāsa or arranger of the Vedas in the present Manvantara (see Devi Bhāgavata skandha i. ch. iv., and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, sk. i., adh. iv., vv. 19—24; Id. sk. xii. adh. vi., vv. 48—62).

The word Parāśara occurs in the Gaṇapāṭha of Pāṇini in the Gaṇa named Gargādi. 20

Parāśara is one of the seven seers of Vedic hymns in the family of Vasishṭha (see Matsya Purāṇa ch. 144); and some descendant of his named Pārāśarya is a pravara of one of the four branches of Vasishṭha's descendants.

Certain Yajurvedi Brāhmaṇas now residing at Nasik are surnamed Parāśare.

There is an Upa-Purāṇa attributed to Parāśara, and two astronomical treatises by the same sage are extant.

Vyāsa.

There are three works under the name of Vyāsa:—I., Laghu Vyāsa-Samhitā; II., Vyāsa Samhitā; and III., Vyāsa Smṛiti.

I.—Laghu Vyāsa Samhitā (A) consists of two chapters and 126 verses. The first chapter contains 81 verses relating to the daily rites and duties of a Brāhmaṇa. The great virtue of bathing in the morning as destructive of all sins is specially dwelt upon, and Kapila is quoted as an authority for a bath by wiping the body with a wet garment. The different kinds of bathing follow, and the chapter ends with a command for muttering the sacred Gāyatri verse. The second chapter, consisting of 95 verses, begins with the performance of the daily sacrifices to the domestic fire, the teaching of the Vedas, 40 bathing and prayers at midday, and the offering of water oblations to the gods, the manes and the sages, &c. The worship of Śankara, the sun, and Mādhūsūdana (an incarnation of Viṣṇu) and Brahmā is enjoined. Manu Prajāpati is referred to in v. 71. After the ordinary rites of the day, the five great sacrifices are mentioned and rules laid down for meals.

Remarks.—It is quite evident that this work is an extract from some larger work on ritual alone, not necessarily a Smṛiti; for the work without anywhere mentioning Vyāsa gives it as the utterances of several sages, not mentioning where and when they were delivered.

- 10 II.—Vyāsa Samhitā (A and B) consists of four chapters, containing 241½ verses.

20 Ch. I.—Begins by a number of sages proceeding to Veda-Vyāsa at Benares, and requesting him to expound to them the arrangement of classes. He then defines the country of the black antelope as one where dharma deserves to flourish, and v. 5 distinguishes the three twice-born classes only as those fit for all the duties laid down by the Vedas, the Smṛitis, and the Purāṇas, and no others. The writer apparently recollects what the same Vyāsa has laid down both in the Mahābhārata and the Bhāgavata; for in the very next verse and the following verses the rites of the Śūdras except the Vedic rites are laid down. In the next few verses the mixed classes are described; and afterwards all the rites peculiar to the twice-born up to marriage are laid down.

30 Ch. II.—Consisting of 55½ verses, begins with the duties of a Svātaka, and rules are laid down with regard to the choice of a wife. Verses 10 to 15 lay down rules for the choice of the first wife. 'The Vedas,' says he, 'lay down that the wife is half the man's body, and therefore amongst the different classes, the wife should be chosen from the same class, or at least the eldest.' Minute directions are laid down for the domestic duties of the wife, and her constant dependence on her male relatives, down to following her husband's corpse to the funeral pile.

40 Ch. III.—Consisting of 78 verses, begins with a threefold division of the duties of a householder into Nitya, Naimittika and Kāmya, and gives directions for morning prayers before and after bathing, offering water to the manes and deities, and the sacrifices to the fires, either Vedic or the ordinary fire according to the ritual laid down by Śākala. Instead of one handful, sixteen handfuls of food are ordered to be left near the house for the propitiation of spirits and outcasts. The entertainment of guests is afterwards laid down. Somewhat inconsistent provisions in regard to flesh-eating are laid down, and onions, white brinjals, red radishes, &c. are prohibited, apparently on received tradition. Directions for dining in certain dishes, and the entertainment of guests in the evening, conclude the chapter.

Ch. IV.—Consisting of 71 verses, begins by extolling the order of the householder, and lays down rules for different kinds of gift, and enjoins a man not to live for himself. Verses 41 to 45 give the different definitions of a Bráhmaṇa. A number of verses are extracted from some moral works, and the last 8 verses condemn the intercourse of a Bráhmaṇa with a Śúdra 10 either by way of food, or gift, or otherwise.

Remarks.—Neither this nor the above work of Vyása contains any mention of Vyavahára in any one of its eighteen sections; whereas verses from Vyása on Vyavahára are quoted by modern digest writers, such as Hemádri and Nílakaṇṭha.

Verse 18 ch. i. enjoins conformity with family usage in respect of Chúdá karma or tonsure.

A Smṛiti under the name of Bṛihad Vyása appears from copper plates to have existed, where the following verse often appears:—

बृहद्विषुषा युक्ता राजभिः सगरादिभिः ॥ यस्य यस्य यदा मुनिस्तस्य तस्य तदा कर्म ॥ 30

III. Vyása Smṛiti (C and D) contains 69 verses, and appears to be an incomplete copy of the fourth chapter of the Vyása Samhitá above-mentioned. It has some gaps, which exactly correspond in C and D, showing that these compilations belong to the same family.

General Remarks.

It appears that there were two authors of the name of Vyása, who are distinguished by Hemádri as Vyása and Veda Vyása. The opening verse in Vyása Samhitá indeed ascribes it to Veda Vyása, but no extracts taken by Hemádri in his Dánakhaṇḍa from Veda Vyása are to be found in this work. 30

Vyása is named Kṛishṇa Dvaipáyaṇa, because he was born in an island in the Yamuná (see Mahábhárata Ādiparva ch. 60) and Bádaráyaṇa, because he resided in a hermitage in the Bádari Forest. He is also known as Veda Vyása, because he divided the Veda into its present four divisions, (see Bhágavata skandha i. ch. iv., v. 19; skandha iii. ch. iii. and skandha xii. ch. vi.). He was born of Satyawatí by Paráśara before Satyawatí was married to Śantanu. Paṇḍu and Dhṛitáráshṭra were his sons born of the widows of Vichitravírya. His son Suka read the whole Bhágavata to King Paríkshít. He is said to have composed eighteen Puráṇas, the Sútras of the Uttara Mímáṃsá, and a Smṛiti. 40

Śaṅkha.

I. Śaṅkha Samhitā (A and B) consists of 18 chapters containing 818 verses.

- Ch. I.—Consists of 8 verses, and describes the proper duties of the four classes for whose benefit Śaṅkha made this Śāstra.
- Ch. II.—Consists of 12½ verses, and describes the mode of designating the four classes; ordains that the ceremony of tonsure should be made according to family usage, and mentions the time for carrying the student to his preceptor for learning the Vedas.
- 10 Ch. III.—Contains 18 verses, and describes the life of a student, ending with a present of Dakṣiṇā, after which he is to bathe before marriage.
- Ch. IV.—Contains 16 verses, and describes the marriage rite and the different kinds of marriage. It lays down three wives to the Brāhmaṇa, two wives to the Kṣatriya, and one to the Vaiśya and Śūdra; and says that the twice-born are not to marry a Śūdra wife even when in distress.
- Ch. V.—Containing 18 verses, describes the different sacrificial and domestic fires.
- 20 Ch. VI.—Contains 7 verses, and describes the third order, on which the Brāhmaṇa is to enter on approaching old age.
- Ch. VII.—Consists of 33½ verses, and describes the life of an ascetic and meditation on the supreme spirit.
- Ch. VIII.—Consists of 14½ verses, and lays down rules for bathing.
- Ch. IX.—Consists of 19½ verses, and lays down rules on sipping water and prayers.
- Ch. X.—Contains 6 verses on the retention of breath for the purpose of destroying sin, and the repeating of certain Sūktas.
- Ch. XI.—Contains 17½ verses and one prose passage relating to the importance and virtue of the Gāyatrī.
- 30 Ch. XII.—Contains a prose passage and four verses, all on libations of water.
- Chs. XIII. and XIV.—Contain 25½ and 7 verses respectively, relating to the Śrāddha ceremony. Yama is referred to in the last verse of ch. XIII.
- Ch. XV.—Contains 24 verses, gives rules for observing mourning, quoting Yama in v. 19.
- Ch. XVI.—Contains 22½ verses, gives directions for removing different kinds of impurities from different objects.
- 40 Chs. XVII. and XVIII.—Containing 61½ and 14 verses respectively, relate to penances. Yama is referred to.

Remarks.—This same work is found in C as Vridhha Śaṅkha and in D imperfectly to the end of the 8th chapter.

Śaṅkha is mentioned in the Dhatupāṭha of Pāṇini in the gaṇa named Aśvādi. There is a Śākhā of the Rig-veda extant named Śāṅkhāyanī, which is named after a descendant of Sankha.

Likhita.

The Likhita Samhitā (A, B, C, and D) consists of 92 verses, and is an unsystematic collection of rules on sacrifices and pūrta (works of public utility),¹ the former being assigned to the twice-born and the latter to the Śūdras, and rules on oblation to the manes, marriage, 10 penances for different sins, impurities, &c. Yama is referred to in v. 29.

Remarks.—This same work is again found in C under the name of Laghu Śaṅkha, with large omissions, the total number of verses there being 72.

Likhita is seldom quoted by himself, and yet the joint production of Śaṅkha and Likhita was at one time considered to have the highest authority.² A story is mentioned of this Likhita in the Mahābhārata, where he is mentioned as the junior brother of Śaṅkha. These brothers lived in separate hermitages, on the banks of the Bāhudā river, and one day when Śaṅkha was abroad, Likhita happened to repair to his brother's hermitage. Finding good fruit in Śaṅkha's garden, he freely took them, and was eating them, when his brother returned. Śaṅkha rated Likhita for having eaten his fruit without permission, and told him to go to king Sudyumna, and seek punishment at his hands for the offence of theft. Likhita accordingly went to the king, and made the request. But the king would not grant it, saying that he would exercise his prerogative of granting pardon. Finding Likhita inexorable in his demand for punishment, the king at last cut his hands off. Likhita then went to Śaṅkha, who restored his hands to him by making him bathe in the Bāhudā river.³ Vyāsa's narrating this anecdote as an ancient account would take back the brother legislators Śaṅkha and Likhita to a considerable period of antiquity. It seems that the brothers composed each by himself a work on law, and then jointly wrote on the same subject. This joint production was in prose, because extracts taken therefrom in the *Vyavahāra Mayūkha*⁴ and other works are in prose. This work is not seen in any of the four compilations used by me in this review.

Dakṣha.

The Dakṣha Samhitā consists of 200½ verses, and in A and B is divided into seven chapters, while it is one continued piece in C and D.

- Ch. I.—Contains 15 verses, lays down general duties of the four orders, and strictly prohibits passing any period of life without being in some one of the four orders.
- 10 Ch. II.—Contains 58 verses, and gives rules for the daily conduct of the twice-born. The day is divided into eight parts, the first of which is to be devoted to cleansing and bathing the body, and the recitation of prayers; the second to the study and teaching of the Vedas; the third to the means of obtaining livelihood for himself and his family and retainers; the fourth again to bathing and prayers; the fifth to the distribution of food among gods, manes, guests and his own family; the sixth and seventh to the hearing of Purāṇas and Itihāsa (a history); and the eighth to worldly affairs and the evening prayers. Of the night, the first half should be spent in recitation of the Vedas,
- 20 and the other half in sleep.
- Ch. III.—Contains 31 verses, lays down the nine good and the nine bad acts, the nine secrets, the nine things that may be freely declared, the nine things that ought not to be given, and enjoins industry and gifts to proper individuals.
- Ch. IV.—Contains 20½ verses, and describes a virtuous and a bad wife, and the consequent happiness or misery on having Śūdra wife respectively. Sūttea practice is alluded to in vv. 18 and 19.
- Ch. V.—Consists of 13 verses, laying down rules for cleanliness and enjoining their peremptory observance.
- 30 Ch. VI.—Contains 19 verses, and lays down rules for impurity on account of birth and death. The use of one word, viz., sūtaka for both kinds of impurity in v. 1 appears to mark the middle stage which prepared the way for its improper application at present to impurity on account of death exclusively. In v. 7 one who is a Brāhmaṇa by caste, but not so by his actions, is mentioned.
- Ch. VII.—Contains 49 verses, laying down what constitutes Yoga, and the different duties of an ascetic.

Remarks.—Colebrooke says: "Heroic history notices two personages 40 of the name of Dakṣha, one son of Brahmā, and the other son of Práchetas. A similar legend on the marriage of their daughters, and which is evidently allegorical, is told of both; it does not appear certain which of them is the legislator; however, a law treatise in verse is dignified with his name" (see his Essays, vol. I. p. 469). Now no warrant is given for the statement that 'similar legend on the marriage of their daughters is told of both'; while a reference to the Bhágavata skandha iv. chapters i. to v. on the one hand, and Bhágavata skandha vi. chapter v., and Matsya Puráṇa chapter v. show that they were distinct individuals, the one being styled Prajapati Daksha, whose daughter Satí was married to Śiva, and the other being called 10 Práchetasa Daksha, one of whose daughters Aditi was given in marriage to Kaśyapa. The first verse distinctly styles the author of this work as Daksha Prajapati, so that one acquainted with the Puráṇic history of the Hindus could never confound him with the Práchetasa Daksha. On reading the work, however, I find that its claim to such antiquity is untenable. The dvaita, advaita and the dvaitādvaita doctrines are referred to in v. 44, and it is stated by Yajñesvara Śāstri in his Ārya Vidyá Sudhákara on the strength of a work known as Sampradáya Prádīpa that the propounders of the dvaita doctrine flourished subsequently to Sankarāchārya about the thirteenth century of the Samvat era (see 20 pp. 228, 231, and 234). There is however no doubt about the genuineness of this production, for all the references to Daksha made by Hemādri in his Dānakhaṇḍa, and by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha, are met with in this work.

The work has no reference to the civil law, nor does Daksha appear to be anywhere quoted on the subject.

Gautama.

There are two works ascribed to Gautama, viz., a Gautama Samhitá and Vṛiddha Gautama Samhitá.

I. Gautama Samhitá (A, B, C and D) is in prose entirely, and is 30 divided into 29 chapters, one of which, viz., the 20th, is omitted in C and D. The Mitāksharā of Haradatta contains no comment on the said 20th chapter; and so far supports the text in C and D.

Ch. I.—Commences with laying down the authority of the Vedas and the works and practices of the Smṛiti writers, then speaks of the periods for Upanayana for different classes, and lays down general rules of conduct for the Āryas.

Ch. II.—Lays down the duties of men before and after Upanayana; and speaks of Samāvartana at the end of the studentship.

Ch. III.—Describes in brief the duties of a Brahmachārin (student), 4 a hermit and an ascetic.

- Ch. IV.—Lays down the different forms of marriage.
- Chs. V. to VII.—Lay down the duties of a householder in detail, and the avocations permitted to a Bráhmaṇa, when in distress.
- Ch. VIII.—States the privileges of a Bráhmaṇa who is learned, who has forty Samskáras and eight Átmaṇas performed on him, and who knows the Samayáchara, or the customs of the people. The Samskáras and Átmaṇas are then named and detailed.
- Ch. IX.—The duties of a householder are resumed.
- Ch. X.—Describes the duties and the privileges of the different classes.
- Ch. XI.—Gives in detail the duties of a king.
- Ch. XII.—Relates to punishments to be imposed by the king for different offences.
- Ch. XIII.—Speaks of the duties of witnesses and the consequences of lying.
- Ch. XIV.—Relates to the impurity on account of death and birth.
- Ch. XV.—Relates to oblations to the manes.
- Ch. XVI.—Lays down the proper and improper times of the study of the Vedas.
- 20 Ch. XVII.—States what articles are fit and unfit to be eaten.
- Ch. XVIII.—Duties of women are laid down.
- Ch. XIX.—Lays down generally the nature of penances.
- Ch. XX.—Describes how certain sinful actions in the past life produce certain bodily defects and diseases, in order that the person affected by those diseases may be able to perform the appropriate penances. This chapter is omitted in C and D.
- Ch. XXI.—Lays down the manner in which persons are to be excluded from all intercourse.
- Ch. XXII.—Lays down the offences which degrade a man.
- 30 Ch. XXIII.—Gives the penances for homicide.
- Ch. XXIV.—Do. for drinking spirituous liquors.
- Ch. XXV.—Lays down secret penances for unproclaimed offences.
- Ch. XXVI.—Describes penances for secondary sins.
- Chs. XXVII. and XXVIII.—Define the different Kṛichchhra and the Chándráyana penances.
- Ch. XXIX.—Relates to the civil law on the subject of inheritance without anything like arrangement being observed.
- Remarks.—This is the work of Gantama which has been referred to frequently by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahára Mayúkhya, and is the subject of a commentary by Haradatta called the Mitāksharā. The general style of the work leaves no doubt on my mind but that the work is very ancient. I am even inclined to place this digest of Gautama before the present compilation of Manu's institutes by Bhrigu. It must be clearly understood that I am laying down no general proposition with regard to the relative ages of Manu and Gautama themselves. As to that, Manu's priority to every other legislator is so universally admitted that I should hesitate before contradicting it. My contention, however, is that this circumstance is not inconsistent with Gautama's having promulgated his institutes, (whether in their present form or not I cannot yet positively say) before Bhrigu's compilation of Manu was published; for although Bhrigu styles himself as the immediate disciple ¹⁰ of Manu, yet the work itself furnishes abundant evidence to show that considerable time had elapsed after Manu, before Bhrigu undertook to collect and arrange his institutes. The most cogent argument in support of this position is supplied by the evidence of the language of Bhrigu's compilation, which is quite classical; while Manu, whose institutes he professes to epitomize, is a Vedic personage¹ mentioned in a work which is written in Vedic Sanskrit.

I base the claim of Gautama to the said antiquity on the following considerations: I.—Every chapter ends with the last word invariably repeated. As the commentator Haradatta explains, and as my knowledge of the way in which the Bráhmaṇas and Sūtras are recited by Vaidikas to this day, warrants the inference that this repetition is intended merely to mark the end of a chapter. Such a contrivance for this purpose plainly speaks of a time when the work in its present form was addressed to hearers and not to readers. The same cannot be said of Bhrigu's version of Manu. II.—There is one earlier legislator that has been referred to by Bhrigu under the name of Utathya-tanaya (son of Utathya) and explained by Kullūka to be Gautama (see Manu ch. iii. v. 16). III.—Municipal law both in its civil and criminal branches is in a much less developed state in Gautama than in Bhrigu. IV.—The ³⁰ three classes of the twice-born are separated by wider gulfs in Bhrigu's time than in that of Gautama, for Gautama as a rule lays down ordinances without making distinctions such as are observed in Bhrigu. Compare for instance Bhrigu's allotment of the eight kinds of marriage to the four classes, (see Manu ch. iii. vv. 22—26), with the deliverance of Gautama on the subject in ch. iv., where, after enumerating the eight kinds of marriage, he has no remark to make save that the four first according to some, and the six first according to others, are the approved forms. V.—The absence of that systematic arrangement in Gautama which is observable in Bhrigu is an argument in the same ¹⁰ direction. VI.—The primary position among the four orders being assigned by Gautama to the order of the householder (see ch. iii.), and pratigraha (acceptance of a gift) being mentioned by him as the least efficacious duty of a Bráhmaṇa which was to be availed of in the last resort under distress (see ch. vii.), indicate a society more energetic and progressive than that depicted by Bhṛigu.

It is usual in this work to note dissenting opinions by the words ityeke (so [say] some), so that dharmaśāstra was a topic of discussion even before Gautama.

II. Vṛiddha Gautama (A) consists of twenty-two chapters.

- 10 Ch. I.—On the enquiry of some hearer, Gautama narrates a dialogue between Yudhishtīra and Kṛishṇa. Yudhishtīra requests instructions on dharma sacred to Viṣṇu. Kṛishṇa begins by expatiating on the observance of dharma; and states some of his own attributes. The chapter consists of 72 verses.
- Ch. II.—Consists of 42½ verses; and states what acts on the part of the different classes secure to them eternal bliss.
- Ch. III.—Contains 98 verses, states proper and improper recipients of gifts; and lays down that the best passport to heaven is gifts to a Bráhmaṇa.
- 20 Ch. IV.—Contains 58 verses, and states the observances whereby a Bráhmaṇa emancipates himself and others from eternal perdition.
- Ch. V.—Contains 123½ verses; and relates the horrors of the passage from this world to the regions of Yama and of the punishments there inflicted. Yudhishtīra gets frightened at the account, and enquires after the means of salvation. Gifts of various kinds and devotion to Viṣṇu or Śiva are enjoined for the purpose.
- Ch. VI.—Contains 174 verses. Different gifts are again mentioned, among which is that of land; and in connection therewith the texts of Brihaspati and Vyāsa are quoted (see vv. 127 and 136 in part II. page 541).
- 30 Ch. VII.—Contains 134 verses, and states the merit of giving a pair of bulls, and the worship of sacrificial fires, and prāyopaveśana (abstaining from all action in view of death), and contemplating on the divine essence.
- Ch. VIII.—Contains 120½ verses, mentions the five great sacrifices, the observances at the time of bathing, the kinds of flowers acceptable and objectionable to gods, the worship adopted by Vaikhāṇasa and the followers of the Pancharātra; and the vices in the different castes.
- 40 Ch. IX.—Contains 84 verses, and lays down the rules with regard to the gift of a kapilā cow.¹ The last 9 verses are in the Upajāti metro.

¹ For the various kinds of kapilā, see the Dānachandrikā (I. 20 p. 1.) quoting Varāha Purāṇa on the subject.

- Ch. X.—Contains 120 verses, and states further rules with regard to the gift of a kapiḷā cow, the proper times for different observances, proper and improper persons for invitation at a Śrāddha, and acts which lead to heaven and to hell.
- Ch. XI.—Contains 37 verses, and mentions acts which are considered equal to the slaying of a Brāhmaṇa, the merit of feeding people, the persons whose food should not be partaken of, and the different merits of different gifts.
- Ch. XII.—Has 52 verses, and lays down the duties of an ascetic, the proper recipients of a gift, and the merit of feeding people. 10
- Ch. XIII.—Contains 34 verses, gives directions as to the taking of meals; and states the merit of offering grass to cows and giving sesamum and sugarcane.
- Ch. XIV.—Contains 66½ verses; commences with the exemptions of men from the performance of ordinary duties when in distress; states the qualification of a good Brāhmaṇa, and professes to give a summary of dharmaśāstra by referring to Manu and the sources of law.
- Ch. XV.—Contains 98½ verses; treats of the different sacrifices to the domestic and the Vedic fires, stating amongst other things* 20 that everything under the sun is made for sacrificial purposes.
- Ch. XVI.—Contains 48 verses, and describes the chāndráyana penance.
- Ch. XVII.—Contains 58½ verses, and states the merit of being an ekabhukta (one who takes meals once during twenty-four hours) in the several months of the year.
- Ch. XVIII.—Contains 48½ verses, states the merit of having a single meal during the day throughout one year; and of observing fasts on the twelfth lunar days of the several months.
- Ch. XIX.—Contains 45 verses, and states the merit of gifts during 30 an eclipse, a vyatipāta, &c. and of the sight of Asvattha (Ficus religiosa). Acts which reduce a Brāhmaṇa to the position of a Śūdra are enumerated.
- Ch. XX.—Contains 47½ verses, and states the different means of salvation.
- Ch. XXI.—Contains 32½ verses, inculcates faith, and advises respect being paid to the votaries of God and to the followers of those votaries.
- Ch. XXII.—Contains 47½ verses, states that there is nothing more repulsive to God than the recitation of the Vedas by the 40 Śūdra; and that the best way to attain salvation is to worship God in real faith.

After this, the assembled audience parted; Krishna went to Dvārakā, and Yudhishtira followed the rules laid down in this work.

- Remarks.*—I confess I do not see why this work is styled Vṛiddha Gautama; for there is nothing common between it and the Gautama Samhitā, either in style or subject matter. I am indeed puzzled as to why the present work should even be named after Gautama; for the whole work is a dialogue between Krishna and Yudhishtira, and Gautama is connected with it only as narrating the dialogue¹ (it does not appear to whom). The existence of a Vṛiddha Gautama and a Śloka
- 10 Gautama (a metrical Gautama) is indeed indicated by extracts made from them in the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, the Achāramādhava, and Hemādri.² But none of those references are to be met with in this work, so that I have very little doubt this work is entirely different. An examination of its contents shows that it omits all mention of Vyavahāra and Prāyashchitta, and touches on Achāra alone, and that too very meagrely. The different duties of the classes, including the duties of the king, and the orders, the different samśkāras, and the like branches of ritual are all passed over, while the subject of gifts is dilated upon to a disproportionate extent. The work seems to be made up from the
- 20 different Purāṇas,³ where the subject of dharmaśāstra is very partially noticed. That it is a recent work is clear from its mentioning the Vaishnava sects of Vaikhānasa and Pāñcharātrika (see v. 88 of ch. viii.) and the Yūgha of Rāmānuja (see v. 93 of ch. viii., and compare the Sarvadarśana Saṅgraha p. 55). It is evidently sectarian; for it professes to give the Dharmas sacred to Vishnu alone, and is styled at the end of each chapter as a Vaishnava Dharmaśāstra. The author of it, however, was a very tolerant Vaishnava; and gives to Śiva as high a position as to Vishnu (see ch. iii. vv. 17 and 30; ch. v. vv. 122 and 124; ch. vii. v. 125).

General Remarks.

In regard to the age of the author of this Smṛiti we have no means to ascertain exactly which Gautama it was who composed the present Smṛiti. There are several Gautamas mentioned in the Mahā-

अथमेधे पुरा इत्ये केसवं केसिबुद्धनम् । धर्मसंशयकं बुद्धय किमप्युक्त गौतम ॥
गौतमः । पश्यमेनापि मेधेन यदा स्नातो बुधिश्रितः । तदा राजा नमस्कृत्य केसवं वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥

² Let me here note that quotations from Vṛiddha Gautama, that have been noticed by me, show that work also to be metrical; so that I do not know that Śloka Gautama may not be another name for Vṛiddha Gautama. I have however mentioned them above.

40 as distinct because the Dānakhaṇḍa of Hemādri quotes, from both Vṛiddha Gautama and Śloka Gautama (Hemādri: pp. 438, 472, 636, 699, 742, 757, 1029 1039, for Vṛiddha Gautama; and p. 91 for Śloka Gautama; Cal. Ed., Samvat 1930).

³ See for example vv. 47 to 51 in chapter ix. of Vṛiddha Gautama which in the Dāna-chandrikā of Dvārakā (see I. 20 p. 1) are referred to Vārāha Purāṇa.

bhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa. There is one Gautama who is one of the Saptarshis (seven sages) for the present Manvantara or age (see the Bhāgavata Purāṇa skandha viii. ch. 13 v. 5, and Āsvalāyana Śrauta Śūtra p. 891).¹ His wife's name was Ahalyā. His son was Satānanda, who was the priest of Śiradhvaja, king of Mithilā of the Janaka dynasty, who was the father-in-law of Rāma, son of Daśaratha. The hermitage of this Gautama was in the vicinity of Mithilā (see v. 11 ch. 48 Bālakāṇḍa Rāmāyaṇa). Further on in the Rāmāyaṇa Uttarakāṇḍa ch. lxxiv. v. 4, one Gautama is mentioned as residing at the court of Rāma; and is likely the same as the one above mentioned. It is a pity that 10 the ancestry of this Gautama is not given in the Rāmāyaṇa either in the Bālakāṇḍa chs. 48 and 49; or in the Uttarakāṇḍa ch. 30, where the same story is again referred to. All that can be gleaned from a reference to the enumeration of the Pravaras (or distinguished persons of a family), is that Gautama was a descendant of Aṅgiras. There is another Gautama that is described as the twenty-first Vyāsa or compiler and arranger of the Vedas of the present Manvantara, the present Vyāsa, who is the twenty-eighth in number, being Krishnadvaipāyana (see Devī Bhāgavata, skandha i. ch. iv.). There was a third Gautama who appears to have resided on the banks of the Godāvari, probably 20 where Nasik now stands; and after whom that river is named to this day as Gautamī, (see Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa Araṇya kāṇḍa sarga iii. v. 47 and Śiva Purāṇa Jñāna kāṇḍa chs. 50 to 52). A fourth Gautama is mentioned in the Brāhmaṇa of the Black Yajur-veda.² There is a fifth Gautama who is said to have resided at the court of a descendant of king Vena, where Atri had gone to request a gift (see Mahābhārata Vanaparva ch. 185). There is a sixth Gautama who is mentioned as one of the sages who surrounded Dyumatsena, the father of Satyawat and the father-in-law of Sāvitrī (see Mahābhārata Vanaparva ch. 298). There is a seventh Gautama who is known as the son of a ṛishi called 30 Dīrghatamas and nephew to Brihaspati (see Mahābhārata Ādiparva ch. 104). This Dīrghatamas further appears there as a contemporary of king Bali, son of Sutapa, and a descendant of Āyu of the Lunar dynasty. Another version of this story as given in the Matsya Purāṇa (see ch. 48 v. 53) makes Gautama the younger brother of Dīrghatamas. Now although it cannot be definitively said which of these Gautamas was the legislator, yet I presume it is the last who is the author of the Smṛiti. Assuming, as indeed is very likely, that the Gautama mentioned

² It must be noted that it is Gotama and not Gautama who occurs in the R̥g-veda, or is known under another name of Akṣapāda, as the founder of the Nyāya (dialectic) school.

by Bhṛigu was the writer of the Smṛiti, I find that a certain opinion is quoted in Manu ch. iii. v. 16 as being that of Utathya tanaya (son of Utathya) who is explained by Kullūka to be Gautama. This is to a certain extent supported by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra (second half, vi., xi., 1, page 878, Cal.), where he appears as a Prayara Ṛishi descended from Utathya. From the preceding remarks it will also appear that the last Gautama according to one version (viz., that of the Matsya Purāṇa) is the son of Utathya, and according to another, he is the grandson of Utathya; for Dīrghatamas and his brother Brihaspati were the sons of 10 Utathya. Whatever the value of this conjecture, one thing is certain, that Gautama is one of the oldest law-givers, and had at one time paramount authority as a legislator after the time of Manu.¹

Śātātapa.

There are three works under the name of Śātātapa—viz., a Samhitā, a Smṛiti and a Vṛiddha Śātātapa Smṛiti.

I. Śātātapa Samhitā (A and B) is divided into six chapters.

20 Ch. I.—Contains 81 verses; opens with a statement that sins are of three kinds, viz., the primary sins, secondary sins, and sins; adds that sins, if unexpiated, result in certain stains on the body, and produce diseases for seven, five and three lives respectively, and that the remedies for sins consist in japa (secret repetition of holy texts), worship of gods, sacrifices, and gifts. Then commences a regular diagnosis of several diseases in reference to the patient's acts in a former life; and the different penances and remedies for the same are mentioned. Nivartana and Gocharman are mentioned as certain measures of land.²

30 Ch. II.—Contains 57 verses, and lays down the evil effects of the slaying of a Brāhmaṇa and the remedies for the same. Hari-vamśa is referred to in v. 30. The present permutations of Rudra, Laghu Rudra, and Mahārudra are referred to in vv. 31 and 32.

Ch. III.—Contains 22 verses, and describes miscellaneous sins, their effects and penances.

Ch. IV.—Contains 32 verses and relates to theft.

Ch. V.—Contains 39 verses and relates to prohibited intercourse with women.

कृते तु मानवो भर्तृकेतायां गौतमः स्मृतः । द्वापरे शास्त्रलिखितः कौलो पारशरः स्मृतः ॥

² See. ch. i. vv. 14 and 15 :—

 दद्यात्स्वर्गे महीयते.

Pratishthā Hemādri by Śrī Hemādri, being an account of the Ishtā-pūrta works entitled Parīśeṣha Khaṇḍa (i.e. miscellaneous sections of Chaturvarga Chintāmaṇi).

Pratishthā Dinakaroddyota by Gāgābhaṭṭa alias Viśveśvarabhaṭṭa, son of Dinakarabhaṭṭa (being the 9th Uddyota).

Pratishthā Paddhati by Dinakara, son of Bhāradvāja Mahādeva.

Pratishthā-Tilaka. It is in 15 Pāṭalās, in the form of a dialogue between Īśvara and Devī.

Pratishthā-śāra-dīpikā by Pāṇḍuranga, son of Rāmachandra Dīkshita, son of Chintāmaṇi Dīkshita, of the family of Ṭakale. 10

Pratishthā Prayoga, being a part of Prayogaratnamālā by Vāsudevabhaṭṭa, son of Āpadevabhaṭṭa.

Devasthāpana Kaumudī by Śankarabhaṭṭa Ghāre, son of Ballāla Śūri.

Mūrti-Pratishthā by Trivikrama Śūri, son of Raghu Śūri (see Dr. R. Mitra's Notices of S. MSS. vol. V. p. 151).

Mūrti-Pratishthā-Paddhati by Trivikrama.

Prāsāda Pratishthā Paddhati by Naraharibhaṭṭa Pandharapura.

Linga-Pratishthā Paddhati founded on Baudhayāna and other ancient authorities :—by Bhaṭṭa Chintāmaṇ, son of Bhaṭṭa Moresvara, belonging to the family named Patwardhan (see Dr. Rājendralal Mitra's Notices of S. MSS., vol. I. p. 6).

Utsarga Kaustubha compiled by command of Māhārāja Dhirāj Bāj Bahādur by Anantadeva, son of Āpadeva, being the first half of the second Dīdhiti of the Pūrta Paddhati contained in the Rājadharm Kaustubha.

Utsarga Paddhati by Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa, son of Rāmeśvara Bhaṭṭa Śūri (it relates to the utsarga of tanks, wells, cisterns, gardens, trees, &c.; and is the oldest work by the Bhaṭṭas of Benares) (see also Dr. R. Mitra's Notices of S. MSS., vol V. p. 146.) 30

Sārvadaivikī Pratishthā by the Yati Prajñāmṛta, pupil of Kṛishṇāmṛta.

Prāsāda-Śivādyaśhara-Pratishthā by Śankarabhaṭṭa, son of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa, extracted in his Dharma-dvaitanirṇaya.

Nūtana-Mūrti Pratishthā Prayoga by Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa according to the Gr̥hya Parīśiṣṭa of Āśvalāyana.

All the above works are now used for the founding, consecration, and the ceremonies attendant thereon on this side of India. I have omitted various minor works collected by me. Dr. Rājendralal Mitra (to whom we are largely indebted for various discriminating and learned contributions in Āryān literature), has in his second

- volume of notices of Sanskrit MSS., given the following account of a curious ancient work on the subject, for which I must find place here :
 “Maya Mata, alias Maya Silpa, alias Pratishthā Tantra,—a treatise on architecture founded on the canons of Maya, a Dánava, who is reputed to have built a palace for Yudhishthira. The work is written in the Tántric style in anushṭubh verses ; but it is so full of lacunæ and obscure terms and phrases that it is in many places unintelligible. The author’s name is not given, and the last line and the colophon suggest the idea of the work being incomplete. But such as it is, it is the most
 10 complete treatise on architecture that has yet come to hand, and I feel grateful to Mr. A. C. Burnell for having procured it for me from the Library of the Rájá of Tanjore. It is remarkable in being less devoted to religious ceremonies and astrological disquisitions than the Mána-sára. Contents : 1, Architecture defined ; 2—3, Examination and purification of the ground intended to be built upon ; 4, Measurement of land ; 5, Ascertainment of the points of the compass ; 6, Fixing of pegs to demarcate the spots for building ; 7, Offerings to gods ; 8, Measure of villages and the rules for laying them out ; 9, Ditto of towns ; 10, Directions for laying out squares, octagons, &c. ; 11, Laying the founda-
 20 tion and the ceremonies to be observed on the occasion ; 12, Plinth ; 13, Base ; 14, Pillars ; 15, Stone-work ; 16, Joining or cementation ; 17, Spires or tops of houses ; 18, One-storied houses ; 19—20, Two-storied houses ; 21, Three, four, &c. storied houses ; 22, Gopuras or Gates ; 23, Maṇḍapas ; 24, Out-offices, barns, treasuries, &c. ; 25, Maṇḍapasabhās, or open courts ; 26, Linear measure of finger breadths, &c.” (vol. II., p. 306).

N.B.—I append the following extracts from the Pratishthā Mayúkha bearing on different portions of the founding and consecration of temples, images, &c.

- 30 The following is the conclusion of the Prásáda-dhivāsana ceremony :—

APPENDIX.

III.

THE SAPIṆḌA RELATIONSHIP.

Sāpiṇḍya (the relationship of a *Sapiṇḍa*¹ is a very important subject in the Hindu Law, and has reference to three branches of it, viz., marriage, impurity on birth or death, and inheritance.

Sāpiṇḍya is defined in two different ways by different writers. According to the first definition Sapiṇḍa connection means connection with the act of offering a *Pinḍa*² or rice-ball. This is followed by the author of the Smṛiti Chandrikā, and by Aparārka, Medhātithi, Mādhava,³ Nāgajībhāṭṭa, and others. The second definition makes the relationship depend on the connection with one piṇḍu or body, that body in the case of collaterals being that of the kūṣaṇka or the common ancestor⁴ as counted from the persons whose relationship is in question. And this is followed by Vāchaspati Miśra, Sūlapāṇi, Viṣṇu-vara, and the authors of the Madanaratna, Pārijāta, Nirṇayasindhu, Dharmasindhu, and Samskārakaustubha and others. Both these definitions are too wide, and they have both been circumscribed, the former by a text from the Matsya Purāṇa,⁵ and the latter by one from Yājñavalkya (ch. i. v. 53, second hemistich). When thus curtailed they appear ultimately to lead to a similar result. Without pursuing therefore this distinction (which for all practical purposes seems immaterial, and is based on the ambiguity of the word Pinḍa), I may say in general terms that Sapiṇḍa relationship extends on the father's side to the sixth ascendant. These ascendants may be males or females, and may further be connected with the father through males or females. Thus a man's father's father's father and father's mother's father are male ascendants through a male and a female respectively. Again, a man's father's father's mother and father's mother's mother are female ascendants through a male and a female respectively.⁶ This process being 30

³ It runs thus :—

तेपञ्चजन्तुर्थायाः पित्रायाः पिण्डभाषिणः । पिण्डद. सप्तमस्तेषां सापिण्ड्यः सप्तपौत्रवत् ॥ See Nirṇayasindhu pari. iii. 1st half l. 22 p. 2.

⁵ See Table I. further on p. 349.

extended on the father's side, up to the sixth ascendant, male or female, six descendants, male and female, must be counted through males and females, from the six ascendants, and from himself or herself who is the seventh in the series. In counting these descendants, wives of the male Sapiṇḍas are also included. The same is to be done on the mother's side up to three ascendants above the mother, and the four descendants of those three ascendants above the mother. The wives of the male descendants are included as before. This is sapiṇḍa connection in general, and is co-extensive with that for marriage purposes.

- 10 All these Sapiṇḍas do not enter into the other two of aforesaid three divisions of Dharmasāstra affected by the Sapiṇḍa relationship. But whilst this is so, it may be said that the general statement of Sapiṇḍas as above given is the widest and includes Sapiṇḍas of all kinds and degrees. Further on, they will be treated of as coming from different departments for different purposes. The distinction of Sapiṇḍas for different purposes, the contraction of Sapiṇḍa-ship, and all other kindred matters, will then be cleared up.

Sapiṇḍa relationship is divided by some writers into two kinds, mukhya (primary), and āropita (arbitrary).¹ Others divide it into 20 sākṣhāt (immediate), and paramparayā (mediate or through a medium). This is derived from Vedic texts, like ātma hi jajñé ātmanah [i. e. from ātman (self) ātman (self) was produced] and prajām anu prajūyase (i. e. thou art born [again] through [thy] offspring).² The connection with one body, which is the essential of the Sapiṇḍa relationship, is in some cases thus explained: The wife and husband become each other's Sapiṇḍas in and through the body of their son, who draws the elements of his Piṇḍa (or body) from the blood of both. The brother's wives are connected with the Piṇḍa or body of their common father-in-law, whose blood enters the blood of the sons 30 of those sisters-in-law through their husbands.²

I shall now treat of Sapiṇḍas in reference to the first division, which I shall call

SECTION I.

Marriage.

An Arya should not marry a Sapiṇḍu. This appears to be the law of old text-writers or Rishis. The wishes and practices of the ancient sages appear curious, if not often inconsistent; and custom has again changed the old limits.

The determination that the Sapiṇḍa relationship does not exist between the bride and bridegroom is to be made by the following rule:

Begin with the bride or the bridegroom, and count, exclusive of both, six or four degrees upwards according as their relationship with the common ancestor is through the father or the mother respectively, and if the common ancestor is not reached within those degrees on both sides, then only they are not *Sapinda*s, and marriage between them can be solemnized. This is the sum and substance of the different formulas and tables which are laid down succinctly and clearly in the Dharmasindhu, and which I extract below for the information of my readers.¹ An interesting calculation of the number of brides prohibited on account of the sapinda relationship has been made by Rāma Vāja-¹⁰ peyin and thrown into the form of verses.² These verses have been quoted and explained by the Samskṛākaustubha in a very lucid manner. I give the extract below.¹ To understand this aright it will be necessary for the reader to take three things as granted. First, that the bridegroom is going to be married for the first time. Secondly, that each married couple has one son and one daughter. And thirdly, that the brides who are excluded by reason of their relationship through the step-mother, or through adoption, of either the bride or bridegroom are not included in this calculation. I subjoin four tables prepared by me according to the above authorities for the further elucidation of the above remarks of Kaustubha :—

[The entire drift of this and the two preceding passages being given in the body of the work, they have not been translated.]

TABLE I.

Ascendants through the Father.(1) The bride or bridegroom.Explanation.

TABLE III.

Ascendants through the Mother.(1) The bride or bridegroom.

TABLE IV.

Descendants through the Mother.

Any one of seven pairs in Table III., excluding A A' as already included 10 in Table I.

Tables I. and II. together are required to show the Sapiṇḍas on the father's side who cannot be married. Table I. gives the 32 ascending stems. Each of these 32 stems branches into 63 male and 63 female descendants, who are the Sapiṇḍas of the (1) at the base of Table I. The females in Tables I. and II. are represented by a stroke on the 20 letter, which in Table I. signifies that the letter with the stroke is the wife of the male signified by the letter without the stroke; and in Table II. the stroked letter is the sister of the male for whom the letter without the stroke stands. The number of stems in Table I. is in all 32; and the number of prohibited daughters in Table II. is 63; so that applying Table II. to each of the stems in Table I., the total number of brides unavailable on account of Sapiṇḍa relationship through the father is $32 \times 63 = 2016$. The explanation given in regard to the stroke on the letters in respect of Tables I. and II. applies also to Tables III. and IV. respectively. Table III. is a Table of ascendants to the 4th 30 degree on the mother's side exclusive of the party considered and corresponds to Table I., which represents the father's side. It contains the stems on the mother's side, whose descendants are not married on account of Sapinda relationship, and Table IV. shows the daughters unavailable as descending from any of the stems indicated in Table III. The number of stems in Table III. is 7, the first stem AA' being included in Table I., and the number of prohibited daughters in Table IV. under each stem is 15; so that the total number of daughters unavailable by reason of their Sapinda relationship to the bridegroom through the mother is $7 \times 15 = 105$. These, together with the aforementioned 2016, make 2121; and represent all the daughters ineligible for marriage owing to their Sapinda relationship with the bridegroom either 10 through the father or the mother. Counting the bride as the starting unit, the number of bridegrooms excluded will be the same.

There are two cases wherein this relationship has to be further extended, viz., where either the bride or the bridegroom happen to have a stepmother, or is adopted from another family. The text that governs this subject, as concerns the stepmother, is from Sumantu, viz., पितृपत्न्यः सर्वे मानस्त्वन्मतरो मातुला स्वहृदिग्न्यो मातृजसत् स्तृहितरश्च भगिन्यः स्वदपत्यानि भागिन्यानि भन्यथा सङ्करकारिणः स्युरिति. Translation :—"The wives of the father are all mothers, their brothers are maternal uncles, their sisters are mother's sisters, their daughters are sisters, and the offspring of those [daughters] 20 are children of a sister. Otherwise there will be a prohibited intercourse (i.e. the non-observance of this rule will lead to prohibited intercourse)." There is a diversity of opinion on the interpretation of this passage. Some hold that Sapinda relationship in the case of the stepmother is the same as in the case of the natural mother to the fifth degree, while others consider that it extends only to those relations through the stepmother, who are specifically mentioned in the above text. Thus in the latter case while the brother of the stepmother would be unavailable for marriage, as being mentioned in the text, the son of that brother would not be so situated. The preponderance of authority, 30 at any rate on this side of India, is in favour of the latter opinion. The Nirṇayasindhu, the Samskāra Mayūkha, Dharmasindhu, Samskāra-kaustubha, and Gopīnātha Bhaṭṭī (or Samskāra Ratna Mālā), all disapprove of the former interpretation, which is adopted by the eastern lawyers. According to the Mayūkha and others, therefore, the brothers and sisters of a stepmother and also the children of her daughters are to be held as unavailable for marriage, and these are in addition to the 2121 Sapindas that have been already mentioned.

The second exceptional case is that where the bridegroom is an adopted son. Here, again, the conflict of opinion is very great. The 40 opinion of the majority of writers, however, which is accepted in this Presidency, is the one which was first enunciated by the Sāpindya Dīpikā, and followed by the Samskāra-kaustubha (l. 49 p. 1), Gopīnāthabhaṭṭī, Dharmasindhu (pari. iii. 1st part l. 15 p. 1), and the Putrakalpalatā of Yajñeśvara Śāstrin (p. 64). I quote it below as given by the Dharmasindhu (pari. iii. part first l. 15 p. 1).¹ The substance of it is that for an adopted son, Sapiṇḍa daughters from the families both of his natural and of his adoptive father are not available, and the number of degrees to which that relationship is to extend, will depend on—(I.) firstly, whether the adopted boy had his Upanayana performed in the natural father's family; (II.) secondly, whether his Upanayana alone was performed in the adopter's family, the previous Samśkāras having been performed in the natural father's family; and (III.) lastly, whether all his Samśkāras commencing from the Jātukarmāṇa to the Upanayana were performed in the adopter's family. In the first case, the Sapiṇḍa relationship extends in the family of birth to seven degrees through the father, and five degrees through the mother; and in the family of adoption, to three degrees both on the father's and mother's sides. In the second case, the relationship extends in both families to five degrees on the father's side and three degrees on the mother's side. In the third case it extends in the family of adoption to seven degrees on the father's side, and five on the mother's side, and in the family of birth to three degrees on the father's as well as mother's side.

It may be well here to note that the Nirṇayasindhu considers that, 20 after adoption, the Sapiṇḍa relationship extends in both families to seven and five degrees on the father's and mother's sides respectively; while Nāgajībhāṭṭa thinks that that relationship with the family of birth ceases after adoption altogether. I quote below the concluding lines of the Sāpiṇḍya Prudīpa of Nāgajībhāṭṭa, as containing the adverse views of some writers on this subject, which he has met by his previous exposition.²

What I have said above embodies the general rules with regard to marriage; but it is necessary I should here note the exceptions to the above rules, which have been established either by text or usage; lest 30 persons not acquainted with them might sometimes be disposed to set down all marriages not in exact accordance with the said rules as incestuous. In giving those exceptions I could not perhaps do better than quote the words of the Dharmasindhu,¹ as I think it summarizes there all the texts on this subject which have been fully discussed in the Achāra Mādhava, the Nirṇayasindhu, and the Samakārakaustubha :—

Translation :—But admitting the legality of occasionally contracting the Sapinda relationship, nothing is [here] said as to which females may be married by which males [and] may not be married by which males ; while modern [writers such as] the author of the Sāpindya Dīpikā and others, having accepted the authenticity of such texts as ‘the fourth or 30 the fifth male may marry the fourth female, and according to the opinion of Parāśara the sixth female ; but the fifth male [shall] never [marry] the fifth female,’ have laid down rules in regard to the restrictions on sapinda relationship, which may be adopted under difficulties by the helpless. Thus the fourth female may be married by the fourth or the fifth male on the father’s or the mother’s side ; while the same may not be married by the second, the third, the sixth and the subsequent males ; in the opinion of Parāśara the fifth male may marry the sixth female, but the second, the third, the fourth, and the subsequent males may not marry the sixth female. The fifth male may not marry the 40 fifth (female). According to another text, viz., ‘on the father’s or on the mother’s side, the sixth male may marry the sixth female,’ the sixth male also may marry the sixth female. The conclusion therefore is that the sixth female may not be married by any one other than the fifth or the sixth male. So according to the text of Vyāsa 'also the seventh female on the father's side and the fifth female on the mother's side [is allowable,' and according to the Chaturmśātimata (a compilation from the writings of twenty-four sages) '(one) beyond the seventh may be married; failing her, the seventh female, failing her the fifth female; the same rule (holds) on the father's side, the seventh female on the father's side, and the fifth female on the mother's side, may be married by the third and all the subsequent males. On the father's side also, 10 the fifth female may be married by the third and the subsequent males; even there [i. e. on the father's side], and on the mother's side the fifth male may not marry the fifth female; for the prohibition 'the fifth male never the fifth female' is general. [We now] give rules in the case of the third female who becomes eligible for marriage according to the text 'the third female or the fourth female on both the sides [may be married].' The third female on the mother's side may be either mother's brother's daughter or mother's sister's daughter, while on the father's side the third female [may be] either father's brother's daughter or father's sister's daughter. Of these the father's brother's daughter 20 should be left out, since she is of the same gotra (family). Daughters of the father's sister and of mother's sister should also be left out in accordance with the text of Manu, viz., 'a wise man may not marry three females, viz. the father's sister's daughter, the mother's sister [and] mother's sister's daughter. The meaning of the said text is that [one] should not marry the following three females, viz. Patrishvaseyi (father's sister's daughter), Matur Bhagini (mother's sister), and Mātuk Svastriyā (mother's sister's daughter). The mother's brother's daughter [is therefore] the only third female who may be married in the manner before mentioned, if there be [such] a custom in the 30 family. Thus of the third females, the mother's brother's daughter alone may be married; [and that too] by the third male alone [and] not by the fourth or any subsequent male. Some allow a marriage with the daughter of the father's sister under difficulties; here the rule should be understood [as binding where and when it derives support] from the usage of the country or the family. On this subject [the following] is the summary of the conclusions in the Sāpindya Dīpikā and other [works]. [Of] the third female, mother's brother's daughter alone may be married; the fourth female by the fourth or the fifth male alone; the fifth female by [all] from the third 40 [mal.] down to the seventh male except the fifth one; the sixth female by the fifth or the sixth male alone; [and] the seventh female by [all] from the third male to the seventh male. This marriage by restrictions on Sapinda relationship may be performed by a person in need [and] under necessity ; as it is said [that it brings on] the sin of violating the bed of the preceptor, and as it is clear that the texts restricting sapinda relationship apply [only] to needy persons in so far as sin is said to attach to the adoption of an alternative by one who can adopt [the primary rule], according to a text [which says] ‘he who [being] capable of [performing] the primary [commandment] adopts the alternative [one] does not here get the merit [resulting from it].’

In reference to the above translation, it must be remembered that cardinal numbers stand for the degrees of descent from the first common ancestor. Thus that the fourth male may marry a fourth female means that a male descendant of the third degree may marry a female descendant of the third degree from the first common ancestor.

The Nirṇayasindhu thinks that all the texts that contract the sapinda relationship for the purpose of marriage refer to persons other than the twice-born, and would therefore never permit such prohibited marriages under any circumstances (see pari. iii. 1st half l. 23 p. 2 to l. 24 p. 2). The Samskāra-kaustubha refutes the opinion advocated by the Nirṇayasindhu, and supporting Mādhava, lays down a general proposition that the contraction of the sapinda relationship for the purpose of marriage is lawful, wherever it is sanctioned by the usage of the country or that of the family. Usage has modified the text law on the subject of marriage to such a degree that it would not be just to shut one’s eyes against that usage. For independently of such usage, there is really no other Hindu law on the subject. For further remarks in this respect of usage as connected with sapinda relationship, I must refer to my appendix on customary law further on.

SECTION II.

Impurity on account of birth or death.

The Sapinda relationship with which we are now concerned is limited to persons who belong to the same gotra.¹ It is true that a man has to observe mourning for certain relations through the mother, through his wife, and his father’s sisters ; but it must be understood that he does so in virtue of special texts and not owing to their Sapinda relationship. The extent of this relationship, as far as the present Section is concerned, is as follows :—

¹ See the Sāpindya Prādīpa of Nāgajībhāṭṭa who says on this subject :—सगोत्रत्वसमानाधिकरणसापिण्ड्यमेव दक्षाहासौचदौ प्रयोजकम् । Translation :—“Sapinda relation should be accompanied by community of gotra before it can be a cause of impurity of ten days and the like.”

- (1.) All male ascendants through males up to the sixth degree, together with their descendants through males down to the sixth degree ;
- (2.) All male descendants of himself and of the said ascendants through males down to the sixth degree ;
- (3.) The wives of the above classes, (1) and (2).

Where a man does not know his gotra, or has none, as in the case of the last three classes, his impurities are to be determined by his relationship as laid down in the above three classes. No impurity on account of birth is observed in the case of an Asagotia. 10

As to how far adoption affects the question of impurity, it appears from Dattakachandrikā p. 59, and its translation in paragraph 1, section iv., p. 652 Stokes' Hindu Law Books, that in the case of a simple adoption, the Sapinda relationship is confined to the family of adoption, and is so far not exceptional as far as impurity is concerned. In the case of a divyamushyūyana adoption, (which is not in use at present), the relationship extends in both families ; but this rule is now a dead letter.

The rule in regard to the relationship through a stepmother, which was mentioned in Section I., holds good in this Section also. Such 20 relationship is held to extend only to such relations through a step-mother as have been specifically mentioned in the aforesaid text of Sumantu.

SECTION III.

Inheritance.

As regards inheritance, the sapinda relationship is, to a certain extent, of the same class as that for regulating impurities. Thus male sapindas through the father and through males for six degrees, and their male descendants for six degrees as well as his own, are capable of inheriting as sapindas. Their order amongst themselves will be 30 stated further on.

As regards females, they inherit by virtue of special texts. This seems to be so both on the texts and by inferences drawn therefrom. I will quote a few out of the principal authorities bearing on this question. Āpastamba (II. 6, 14, 2) says ;—पुत्राद्वै रः श्रव्यसक्तः सपिण्डः (on failure of sons, the nearest sapinda [takes the inheritance.]) Here the word sapinda is used in the masculine, and precludes the idea of a female being included in that word. Haradatta in his commentary on this Sūtra says that Āpastamba hereby clearly lays down that females are not entitled to inheritance, and goes so far as to hold that even those females 40 who have been named in some texts apparently as entitled to inheritance are in virtue of those texts entitled to protection and maintenance at the hands of the *sapinda*s who take the inheritance (see Āpastamba Dharmasūtra, vol. II. pp. 81 and 82, and Sacred Books of the East, vol. II. p. 182, Note 2.)

The Vīramitrodaya (leaf 209 p. 1, line 3) quoting Baudhāyana as cited by Jīmūtavāhana, speaks as follows :—अत एव भवेति स्त्रीत्यनुवृत्तौ वैधायनः । न दायं निरिन्द्रिया भद्रायादाश्च स्त्रियो यता इति श्रुतेरिति । न दायमहेति स्त्रीत्यन्यः । Translation :—Therefore Baudhāyana repeating the words strī arhati (a female 10 deserves) [from the preceding verse] says :—A female does not deserve to inherit, being declared by the Śruti to be feeble and incompetent to inherit. The words na dāyam (no inheritance) are to be construed along with strī arhati (a female deserves).

Gautama observes :—पिण्डगोत्रस्य विसम्भन्त्या रिक्त्य भजेरन् स्त्री चानपत्यस्य । Translation :—Of one without issue, the wealth goes to those [who are] connected with him by the sapinda relationship, by gotra or by pravara, as well as to the wife. Haradatta in his comment on this says :—स्त्री तु सगोत्रादिभिः सैवैः सयुजीयते । यदा सगोत्रादयो गृह्णन्ति तदा तैः सह पत्न्यपि एकमंशं हरेत् । Translation :—The wife takes [the wealth] along with the sagotras (men 20 of the same gotra) and the like. When sagotras and the rest take [the wealth], the widow too takes one share along with them. It will thus appear that even the widow of the deceased is not permitted by Gautama to inherit independently of the male relations.

Gautama therefore must be taken to be opposed to the succession of females generally in accordance with the Vedic text which Haradatta has cited in his comments.

Vasishṭha in his chapter on succession (see Part II. pp. 486—490 Cal. ed.) does not mention any female as entitled to inherit save the appointed daughter. In default of the sons, he says :—अतः पूर्वं सगोत्रादयो 30 षडङ्गान्शिगोत्राणां पूर्वैः पूर्वो गरीयान् । न खलु कुलीने विद्यमाने परगामि स्यात् । यस्य पूर्वेषां कर्णा न कश्चिदायः स्यात्स्वपिण्डाः पुत्रस्यानीया वा तस्य धनं विभजेरन् । तेषामन्तरे आचार्यान्वेष्टासिन्वै हरेयाता तयोरेकमेव राजा हरेत् । Translation :—In default of these, the prior in order among those connected by libation of water or libation of pinḍa, by birth, pravara or gotra is preferential [for succession to another subsequent]. So long as there is any descendant of the family, surely [the inheritance] will not go to a stranger. If one has none of the first six to take his wealth, his *sapinda*s or men standing towards him in place of the son will take his wealth. Failing these, the preceptor and the pupil will take; and 40 failing those, the king.

Here the widow herself has no place; and so Vasishṭha too must be

From the above texts it appears that all ancient authority is opposed to the succession of females generally. They are thus useful in determining the capacity of female sapindas to inherit. This question arises with reference to verse 187, chapter ix. of Manu, and verses 135 and 186 of Yājñavalkya, chap. ii. In the former sapindā dyah (सपिन्दाः) has been interpreted by Kulluka so as to include males as well as females; and in the latter the word gotrajaḥ (गोत्रजः) is capable of being so interpreted as to stand for males as well as females. Some have maintained on the strength of the above that the widows of all Gotraja sapindas inherit; while others hold that those females only who have 10 been expressly mentioned, do so inherit. My investigations have led me to the latter conclusion.

In regard to sapindas, the following are some of the facts found in the two Smritis mentioned in the above paragraph.

Manu refers to sapindas on three occasions:—1 Marriage¹; 2, impurity²; and 3, inheritance.³

In the first case, he says the bride should be “an asapindā of the mother, and an asagotrā of the father.” In the second, he says “sapindya (the sapinda relationship) ends with the seventh puruṣa (person).” In the third case “to the next amongst sapindas, dhanam 20 (wealth) belongs.”

Yājñavalkya speaks of the extent of sapinda relationship in his first chapter in discussing the subject of marriage. Thus in verse 52, he says the bride must be an asapindā,⁴ which he explains in verse 53 to be one removed five and seven degrees on the mother's and the father's sides respectively.⁵

We take Yājñavalkya on this side of India as interpreted by Vijñāneśvara. We must therefore ascertain what the latter says of the sapinda heirs. How these enter into Vijñāneśvara's succession scheme must be the next point in the inquiry. Vijñāneśvara divides succession 30 into two classes, the apratibandha (unobstructed) and the sapratibandha (obstructed), or, as I would here call them, the regular and irregular orders of succession.

The sapindas as such do not enter into the regular or apratibandha (unobstructed) scheme of succession of Vijñāneśvara. This last is confined to the sons, sons' sons, and sons' grandsons.⁶ When these three classes of heirs do not exist, comes what I would call the irregular or exceptional course of succession—which Vijñāneśvara calls the sapratibandha (obstructed) succession.⁷ As regards the Gauḍa or eastern writers the words sapratibandha and apratibandha do not occur. But 40 that is not important for the present purpose. In the course of the irregular or sapratibandha succession come the following according to Yājñavalkya :—पत्नी दुहितरश्चैव पितरौ भ्रातरस्तथा । तत्सुता गोत्रजा इन्धुशिष्यसम्प्रदाचारिणः ॥ (ch. ii. v. 185). See the translation above Part II. pp. 220 and 221.

In commenting on this verse Viṣṇuśvara introduces dauhitra (the daughter's son) after duhitri (the daughter) in consequence of the syllable cha occurring in the original. After chu, come the pitara (parents), the brothers and their sons, and after these the Gotrajas. About these last Viṣṇuśvara says as follows :—आनुवृत्ताणामप्यभावे. गोत्रजा
10 धनभाजः । गोत्रजाः पितामही सपिण्डाः समानोदकाश्च । Translation :—Failing the brother's sons, those born in the same gotra are takers of wealth. They are the father's mother, the sapiṇḍas and the samānodakas.

Viṣṇuśvara thus accounts for the father's mother being placed here :—मातर्यैव च वृत्त्या पितुर्मौता धनं हरेदिति मात्रानन्तरं पितामह्या धनग्रहणे प्राप्तिं पित्रादीनां आवृत्तपत्यन्तानां वृद्धक्रमत्वेन मध्येऽनुग्रवेशाभावात्पितुर्मौता धनं हरेदित्यस्य वचनस्य ग्रहणाधिकारमाक्षिमात्रपरत्वात् उत्कर्षे तत्सुतानन्तरं पितामही गृह्णातीत्यविरोधः । (leaf 60 p. 1 lines 7—9). Translation :—‘The paternal grandmother's succession immediately after the mother was seemingly suggested by the text before cited, “And the mother also being dead, the father's mother shall 20 take the heritage” : no place, however, is found for her in the [bad-dhakrama] compact series of heirs from the father to the nephew : and that text (“the father's mother shall take the heritage”) is intended only to indicate her general competency for inheritance. She must, therefore, of course succeed immediately after the nephew ; and thus there is no contradiction.’ (See Colebrooke's Mitāksharā ch. ii. sec. v., para. 2 Stokes' Hindu Law Books p. 446.)

After her come (समानगोत्रजाः सपिण्डाः पितामहादयो धनभाजः) the Samānagotrāja Sapiṇḍas, [who are] the Pitāmaha (the father's father) and the like.

30 He again amplifies the same :—तत्रच पितृसन्तानाभावे पितामही पितामहः पितृव्यास्तनुत्राश्च क्रमेण धनभाजः पितामहसन्तानाभावे प्रपितामही प्रपितामहस्तानुत्रास्तनुवृत्तेत्येवमासप्तमसमानगोत्राणां सपिण्डाणां धनग्रहणं वेदितव्यम् । Translation :—Here on failure of the father's issue the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the paternal uncles and their sons. On failure of the paternal grandfather's issue, the paternal great grandmother, the great grandfather, his sons and son's sons inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of [those who are] Sagotras (of the same family) as well as sapiṇḍas.

Viśveśvara, in his Subhodhinī, while explaining the phrase Gotra-jābhdhau (on failure of the Gotrajas) used by Viṣṇuśvara in the sentence गोत्रजाभावे बन्धवो धनभाजः (On failure of the Gotrajas, the Bandhus

Translation :—Failing brother's sons, Gotrajas [succeed]. On the analogy of [the use of] balhvarda (a bull) after go (the bovine genus), [gotrajas] other than the aforesaid father, brother and brother's son are to be understood [here by that term].
Vijñāneśvara says that they are the father's mother, sapinḍas and samāmodakas, that of these the father's mother first takes the wealth; and that although from the Manu's text 20 [ch. ix. v. 217], 'if the mother be dead, the father's mother will take the wealth' [the right of] the father's mother to take wealth after the mother follows, yet it being impossible to introduce her into the fixed order ending with brother's sons, and there being no reason why she should be placed last [of all the heirs, simply because] she has to be removed [beyond her position in the Manu's text], the gotrajas commencing with the father's father [inherit] after her [i. e. the father's mother]. Here the Smṛiti Chandrikā understands the term gotrajñā as a sarūpaikūṣeṣa (a grammatical formation wherein one only of exactly similar words remains and the rest are omitted)¹ of male gotrajas alone and not of female [ones]. A virūpaikūṣeṣa (a grammatical formation where one alone of dissimilar words remains, and the rest are 30 omitted)² is to be understood, [only] where [such interpretation] is indicated on independent grounds, such as the statement of a supplementary sentence as in [the words] 'bring kukkutau (which may primarily mean either two cocks or two hens, but which, owing to the sentence that follows here, means a cock and a hen); we shall unite them.' There is no such indication here [i. e. in the case of the word gotrajñā]. On the other hand, the companionship [of that word] with 'brothers, and his sons,' favours its signifying male gotrajas [only]. Again, the wife, the daughter and the like being specifically³ mentioned as entitled to inherit, the Śruti [text] 'Therefore females are feeble and incompetent to inherit,' will [indeed] have to be taken to apply [not to them but] to women other than the [said wife, daughter, &c.]; but in places like the gotrajñā, a virūpaikūṣeṣa
40 is opposed to the said [Śruti], and therefore its suggestion deserves to be rejected. Therefore it was that the Bhāṣyakāra (commentator) of Āpastamba while commenting on the Sūtra (text) 'the father should divide his wealth among his sons in his lifetime, &c.' first stated that the wealth should be distributed among sons alone, and not among females, such as daughters, and then said, although according to the Pāṇini's rule ' [the words]

³ The Sanskrit word is Syṅgagrāhikayā, which literally means 'by holding [a cow, &c.] by the horns,' is now used to mean 'forcibly or in defiance of opposition.'

bhrātṛi (brother) and putra (son) [when compounded] with scāyī (sister) and duhitṛī (daughter), &c.¹ It is possible to dissolve the word putrebhṛāḥ (among sons) as a virūpaikaśeṣa as putrīśca duhitarscha 'sons and daughters', and so to introduce the daughters after the sons, yet males alone and not females are heirs in accordance with the Śruti, 'therefore females are feeble and not entitled to inherit.' The intent of the commentator is that the virūpaikaśeṣa [construction], though allowed [by grammarians], should not be accepted in the present case owing to its repugnance to a Śruti text, and the absence of an indication warranting such [construction]. Jīmūtavāhana too says: "Yājñavalkya too has used the word gotraja in order to denote that the right [of inheritance] belongs to one born in the family such as the father's daughter's son 10 and the like in that order, which is followed for the purpose of offering a pinda (a libation of rice) and that the wives of the sapindas are to be excluded, as not being gotraja (born in the family). Accordingly repeating [the words] arkati stri (a female deserves) [from the preceding verse] Baudhāyana says ' [females do not deserve] to succeed, as they are deemed feeble and disentitled to inherit, according to Śruti. [The words] na dāyam (no inheritance) are to be construed with arkati stri (a female deserves). The right of the widow and the like [to inherit] is unobjectionable owing to special texts [to that effect]." This is not correct, for it is possible to reconcile [all the three texts, viz., the Śruti, Manu and Yājñavalkya] by [holding that] the virūpaikaśeṣa [construction] is to be adopted in [interpreting] the [present] text of Yājñavalkya, so as to include 20 the father's mother [in the word gotraja], and thus to harmonize with the aforementioned texts of Manu and the like, which specifically declare her capacity to inherit, and [further] that the Śruti is to be taken applying to women other than those [expressly mentioned]. As for Jīmūtavāhana he is not consistent with himself, for [in one place] viz., his disquisition on the mother's right [of succession], he says that on the analogy of the mother's right [of succession] after the father, the father's mother succeeds after the father's father and before his issue, and that Yājñavalkya said nothing separately [about the succession of the father's father and the father's mother], because in laying down the right of the mother [to inherit], he had indicated the right of the father's father and the father's mother [to inherit] 30 before the father's brother and the like; and [in another place] he says that the use of [the word] gotraja [by Yājñavalkya] was [made], in order to exclude the wives of sapindas. [I say Jīmūtavāhana is inconsistent], because in his latter [statement] the Śruti which disables [females] from inheritance will apply to the father's mother as much as to the father's brother's widow, owing to the former resembling the latter in an absence of a specific mention in the Yājñavalkya's text [under consideration]. According to the explanation given by the venerable Vidyāranya, of the aforementioned Śruti, 'Therefore [females are] feeble, &c.,' that Śruti does not refer to a prohibition of inheritance; so that no difficulty [arises] and no explanation [is needed]. But how can this explanation [of Vidyāranya] do in the 40 face of the adverse text of sage Baudhāyana? Granting that the word adriya does mean the soma juice in conformity with the context, yet inasmuch as there is an absence of another text declaring the incapacity [of females] to inherit, as it is not possible for the [present] Śruti to be unsupported, and as therefore the inference of [the existence of] a prohibition is necessary to justify the assertion of a fact, viz., that females are deemed incompetent to inherit, we should explain* [the present text] in the same way as [the Vedic text], 'therefore by the birth of a child without his knowledge, a man

* The meaning is that from the statement of a fact contained in the above Śruti we ought to infer a specific prohibition in regard to the capacity of females to inherit. 30 is degraded from his Brāhmanahood?" On failure of the father's mother, those who are of the same gotra and are *sapinda*s such as the father's father and the like, are takers of wealth; the *sapinda*s belonging to a different gotra being named by the term Bandhu. Among them, on failure of the father's issue, the father's mother, father's father, father's brothers and their sons are takers of wealth in order. On failure of the issue of the father's father, father's father's mother, father's father's father, father's father's brothers and their sons [inherit]. In this way, *sapinda*s having the same gotra succeed to the wealth of a sonless male, up to [i. e. exclusive of] the seventh degree. On failure of *sapinda*s, the samānodakas [inherit]. They are seven [degrees] beyond the *sapinda*s, or as far as the birth and [family] name is known [to be the same]. For Manu says:—'The sapinda relation ceases with the seventh [degree], and the samānodaka relation ceases with the fourteenth.' Some say [it extends] as far as the birth and [family] name is known [to be the same], the remaining [gentiles] are termed the gotra. 'That the words Bandhu and Sakulya in the text of Vishnu [on this subject] stand for a sapinda and a Sagotra (one of the same gotra or family) [respectively] has already been stated. The Samānodakas too are takers of wealth in the order of their propinquity."

[I have not translated this passage because the most important portion of it is already included in the extract from the Vīramitrodaya.]

From the above authorities, it appears—first, that the Hindu law is opposed to the succession of females; and secondly, that exceptions have been made in the case of certain females, and that those who

40 do so succeed are—

- (1) The wife.
- (2) The daughter.

although there is none such in so many words; just as we do in the case of the following text, when we deduce therefrom a commandment of the Veda for a married man to abstain from going abroad for any length of time.

- (3) Mother.
- (4) Paternal grandmother.
- (5) Paternal great-grandmother.
- (6) Paternal great-great-grandmother.
- (7) Paternal great-great-great-grandmother.
- (8) Paternal great-great-great-great-grandmother.

I may add that the above is drawn up in reference to the Mitāksharā of Vijñāneśvara. Nīlakaṇṭha in the Vyavahāra Mayūkha adds the sister, while Kamalakāra expressly disapproves the addition.

Of the above eight females, the wife, daughter, and mother come in 10 virtue of the express texts of Yājñavalkya (ch. ii., v. 135)¹ and others. This observation is applicable to the whole of India: the difference in regard to the Gauḍa authors is only in the interpretation. After the mother, comes the paternal grandmother. She does so by a text of Manu.² This text is quoted and supported by the Nibandhakāras (treatise-writers) Aparārka, Vijñāneśvara, Jīmūtavāhana, Mitra Miśra, and others. The four remaining female sapiṇḍas are deduced from the above text of Manu by Vijñāneśvara.³ His commentator Viśveśvara in his Subodhinī adopts this construction, and instead of stopping with the detailed enumeration ending with the prapitāmahi completes the 20 seven degrees as above detailed.⁴

The result of the whole foregoing discussion may be thus briefly summed up so far as the female Sapiṇḍa succession is concerned:—

I. That the Śruti as well as the Smṛiti law and its expositors are unfavourable to the succession of females in general;

II. That an exception is made in the case of certain females;

III. That the succession of those females whose right to succeed is so admitted, is itself subject to disabilities⁵ from which the succession of all males is absolutely free;

⁵ Thus the widow must be chaste, or she cannot succeed, [see above Part II.] p. 77, lines 7—12, 29—32, p. 78, ll. 3—6, 31—34, p. 79, ll. 1—3, 9—12; Mitāksharā (Colebrooke's Trans.) Stokes' H. L. Books pp. 428, 429; Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage p. 470, and note s; see 13 Bengal Law Reports p. 1 (Kery Kolitany v. Moniram Kolita); even after she has succeeded—she will be deprived of the property if she turns unchaste—(see Mayne, p. 471 and notes; Hārta quoted above at p. 288 from Pandit Jibānand's Edition of the Smṛitis; on the other hand, see the judgment of the majority of the judges in Kery Kolatany v. Moniram Kolita, 1 Beng. L. R. p. 1). If she adopts, she at once loses her title over her husband's property. See Rāje Vyankatray v. Jayavantray, IV. B. H. C. R. p. 191 A. C. J.; Nathaji Krishnaji v. Hari Jagaji, VIII. Bom. H. C. R. p. 67 A. C. J.; Narsamma v. Balaramachariu

IV. That the above propositions are expressly laid down by Jímú-taváhana in the Dáyabhága and by Devaṇṇabhaṭṭa, in the Smṛiti-Chandriká;

V: That Vijñānesvara, though not as explicit as Jímútaváhana and Devaṇṇabhaṭṭa, is substantially in accord with his brother jurists-prudents.

I have indicated above that no other female *sapinda*s than the 8 above mentioned can inherit according to the text law. I now proceed to state the reasons why they are so disqualified in addition to those already 10 advanced in the above general remarks. I naturally begin with the Śruti. The text तस्मात्स्त्रियो निरिन्द्रिय भदायादाः¹ (therefore females are feeble and unworthy of inheritance) which occurs in Taittirīya Yajurveda Samhitá, kāṇḍa VI., prapāṭhaka V., and anuvāka VIII., incapacitates females from inheritance generally. The translation of this text suggested on the authority of Vidyāraṇya by Messrs. West and Bühler at page 178 note a (2nd edition) is opposed to Vidyāraṇya's own explanation of the self-same text in other places, and also to the interpretation placed Ruttonbaee* I. Bor. p. 431; Teekumjee v. Mt. Laroo II. Bor. 361; Murugayee v. Vīramakaly, I. Mad. L. R. 226).

As a daughter, her succession is full of impediments. The unmarried take before the married (see above Part II., pp. 79, 220; Bakhubai v. Manchábai, 2 Bombay H. C. R. p. 5). Again the sadhana (or endowed) have to give way to the unendowed (see above Part II., pp. 79, 220; 2 Bombay H. C. R. p. 5). In Bengal, the sonless are excluded by those having sons (see above Part II., page 220, lines 48—50; Mayne, cases in note s at p. 476. Unchastity excludes her from taking the estate, see Mayne, pp. 471, 475 note r; 2 Macnaughten H. L. p. 133, Question 2, Mussamut Gungajuti v. Ghasita, Indian L. R. 1 Allahabad 46). But in Advyappa v. Rudrewa, Printed 30 Judgment for 1870, Bombay, p. 516, the contrary has been held.

In Navalram v. Nandlisor, Bombay H. C. R. vol. I., p. 209, the daughter's estate is held to be unlimited; on the other hand, in Mussapunt Gyan Koowar and others v. Dhookurn and others, 4 Calcutta G. D. A. R. p. 420 (2nd edition), Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo Lal, 22 Calcutta W. R. (C. R.) 496, 2 Macnaughten H. L., case 16, p. 224; Seagamalathammal v. L. 57, the daughter's interest under the same law is held to be limited for life; so also by the Privy Council in Chotay Lal v. Chunnoo Lal and others, VI. Law Reports, Indian Appeals p. 15.

- 40 The mother taking as her son's heir takes only like a widow, 1 Bombay H. C. R. 117, 1861, Vinayak Anandrao v. Laxmibai, 6 Bombay H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 215, Narsappa v. Sakharan; P. Bachirajee v. V. Venkatappadu, 2 Madras H. C. R. 402 (even if she succeeds to a daughter, the result seems to be the same); Laxmibai v. Ganpat Moroba, Bombay H. C. R. (O. C. J.) 128. The other five ascendants, taking under the same texts, can have no higher title.

thereon by earlier sages such as Baudhāyana (see above p. 358) and commentators of acknowledged learning and acumen such as Haradattāchārya (see above p. 358), Devaṇṇabhaṭṭa,¹ Apararka,² and Mitra Miśra.³ Thus Vidyāranya himself in his comments on the 27th Āmṛdka of Prapāṣhaka IV. of kāṇḍa I. of the Taittirya Yajush Samhitā, (see vol. I. p. 667 Cal. ed.) explains this verse in the manner I have done. His (Vidyāranya's) explanation runs thus :—नस्मादौके स्त्रियः सामर्थ्यरहिता अपत्येषु दायमानौ न भवन्ति. Translation :—'Therefore in this world females being feeble, do not become the takers of dāya (heritage) from their issue.'

Yāska, the author of the Nirukta, supplies evidence of early tradition being opposed to female succession; for in commenting on the Vedic text—अविशेषेण पुत्राणां दायो भवति धर्मतः। (Inheritance properly belongs to sons without distinction), he says न बुद्धिन् इत्येके तस्मात्पुमान्दादादौ श्रयादास्तीति विज्ञाप्यते. Translation :—Some [hold that] daughters [do] not [inherit]. Therefore it is known that a male is the taker of wealth, and that a female is not a taker of wealth (see Prof. Roth's edition of Yāska, p. 531).

Manu as edited with Kullūka's commentary contains a verse which is unmistakenly based on the above Śruti text (see ch. ix., v. 18).⁴ I think that the readings⁵ of Kullūka is clearly wrong, and that of 20 Hāradatta and Mitra Miśra is correct. First, because in Kullūka's reading there is an unmeaning repetition of the expression amantādh, when the idea has been already fully exhausted in the preceding half of the verse by the uṣṭi striṇāṃ kriyā manṭraih; secondly, because the words tathā cha Śrutayo bahvyoh (likewise several Śruti texts) with which the next verse begins indicate that it was preceded by a verse containing some Śruti texts; and thirdly, the use of the word nirindriyāh in a Vedic sense in a classical work points to that word being naturally followed by another Śruti word adāyādāh. For there is no other word in the Black Yajurveda following nirindriyāh except adāyādāh; and 30 lastly, because this reading has been accepted by an acknowledged

In the Mitāksharā on Gautama Smṛiti (MS. leaf 80, p. 2, line 11) the same reading is given by Haradattāchārya.

⁵ Reading of the same half by Mitra Miśra in the Vīramitrodaya (leaf 220, p. 1 line 2) :—

अनिरिन्द्रिया अदायादाः क्रियोन्तमिति स्थितिरिति तन्मूलकमनुवचनाच्च ॥ authority like Haradattāchārya in two distinct works,¹ and an able commentator like Mitra Miśra. Āpastamba and Baudhāyana are against the capacity of females to inherit (see above p. 358) generally. If Kullūka had obtained the same reading, he too would have supported the Śruti, as he holds anti-vedic interpreters heretical (chap. ii., vv. 7—15).

The next step in the enquiry is to find out how Vijñāneśvara has interpreted Yājñavalkya on this point. Further, has he in interpreting Yājñavalkya held Āpastamba, Baudhāyana and others 10 to be binding as lawgivers; and if he has, in what manner has he removed their objections to female succession? Vijñāneśvara's mode of settling the order of succession shows unmistakably that he has settled his schemes on the same principle as the above writers, and with the above texts before him, and in accordance with those texts. Thus he takes the widow and daughter and mother as expressly mentioned by Yājñavalkya, and the daughter's son by the indication of cha in the Smṛiti. In like manner, when "the fixed order," as he calls it, is over, he places the pitāmahi; for, as he says, she is

- * Haradatta is the author of a commentary on the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra named 20 Ujjvalā, and on the Gautama Dharmasūtra named Mitākharā. He is a very old and standard writer on Dharmasūtra, and not a recent one as said by Dr. Bühler, who remarks:—"His date may be inferred from the fact that the oldest writer on law quoting his opinions is Mitra Miśra, the author of the Vīramitrodaya, &c." (See Prof. M. Müller's Sacred Books of the East, vol. II., p. xliii, Introduction.) This is not correct, for Haradatta is, so far as my present researches go, quoted by Mādhava in the Sarvadarśana Sangraha in his account of the Nākula Pāsupata Darśana (Sarvadarśana Sangraha, p. 74 line 17, Calcutta edition, 1858; see an English translation of that passage in the Paṇḍit Benares, vol. X. page 286). The date assigned by Dr. Burnell to Mādhava is the latter part of the 14th century. (See "Introduction to 30 the Translation of the Dāyabhāga portion of Vyavahāra Mādhava p. x. by Dr. A. C. Burnell.) Bhaṭṭoji Dikshīt in his commentary on Chaturvīṁśatī Smṛiti refers more than once to Haradattāchārya (M. S. Elphinstone College Copy: leaf 6, p. 2, l. 35, § 1 line 10). I have had the references verified by comparing the passages with Haradatta's Commentary on Gautama named Mitākharā; it is also clear that this Haradatta is different from Haradatta Miśra, the author of the Padamanjari. For the one is known by the epithet Āchārya, and the other by that of Miśra. Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa in his Pryagaratna, while treating the subject of Pīṇḍapīṭṛiyajña, cites Haradatta's commentary on the Āpastamba Sūtra (see leaf 93, p. 2, line 3). Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa, as we know, lived at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of seventeenth century of Samvat era 40 (see Part I. pp. 4, 5 Preface). He is also quoted in the Maheśabhaṭṭī (l. 1, p. 2). This shows the standing of Haradatta, and this accounts for his being quoted as a decisive authority by Mitra Miśra, for it is clear to me that a long series of writers from Āpastamba, and Baudhāyana, downwards, had been interpreting the above-mentioned Śruti passage in a uniform manner; and a series of commentators of established repute have done the same, the last being Mitra Miśra, who is not the first to quote Haradatta, as has been asserted (Sacred Books of the East, vol. II. p. xlii, Introd.), nor could he have been quoting from mere memory, and therefore committing a mistake of interpreting Manu, as the whole passage shows. (1 West and Bühler's Digest, Part II. p. 100 note.)

mentioned by Manu, who puts her after the mother ; but as the order of succession up to the brother's sons is, according to his view of Yājñavalkya, fixed, she cannot get in there, and he therefore complies with the spirit of both Manu and Yājñavalkya by placing her after the brothers' sons, and before the gotraja sapiṇḍas ; and he derives her adhikāra (right) from Manu ch. ix. v. 217, and not from Manu ch. ix. v. 187, where the sapiṇḍas are mentioned.

He then takes the prapitāmāhi as one of the same class, namely, the direct ascending sapiṇḍas among females, but in naming the sapiṇḍas after the pitāmāhi (father's mother), he fixes them thus!— 10

Pitāmāhi (father's mother).

Pitāmāha (father's father).

Pitāmāha's (his) sons.

Pitāmāha's (his) son's sons.

Thus he leaves out the wives of the father's brothers and of their sons. Then comes the Prapitāmāhi (the father's father's mother).

Prapitāmāha (father's father's father).

Prapitāmāha's sons.

Prapitāmāha's grandsons.

In this case also, the wives of the sons and grandsons of Prapitāmāha (father's father's father) are excluded, on the same principle as I take it, namely, that they, like the two females in the next preceding class, are merely of an inferior class of sapiṇḍas, whereas the pitāmāhi and prapitāmāhi and the wives of the remaining four ascendants are sapiṇḍas of the same class as the mother. The blood of these six female ancestors enters into the piṇḍa (body) of the deceased (propositus). Therefore they take his dāya. The wives of the collaterals are sapiṇḍas only in an inferior sense. Hence Viśveśvara in working out Viṇḍaneśvara's order up to the seventh degree, excludes the wives of the 30 collaterals, and only includes the remaining four ascending female sapiṇḍas.

That Viṇḍaneśvara was anxious to include females wherever he could do so consistently with Vedic and Smṛiti texts is clear from his strong remarks in the cases of the wife, the daughter, and the mother. Whenever he could take advantage of some accepted rule of criticism to avoid the disabilities created by Vedic or other texts, he has tried his best. His deliberate exclusion of the wives of two male sapiṇḍas up to the Prapitāmāhi (father's father's mother) and of two more after her, is, I think, strong evidence of his views in regard to the 40 determination of the order of sapiṇḍas in the very same series.

Of those who have interpreted Vijñāneśvara, Viśveśvara, both in the Subodhinī and in the Madanapārijāta, distinctly excludes the wives of the collaterals,¹ and only includes the six lineal female ancestors of the deceased.² His treatise entitled Madanapārijāta, as he says in the preface, is expressly based on Hemādri, Kalpadruma, Aparārka, Smṛtyartha Sāra, Smṛiti Chandrikā, Mitāksharā, &c. and it may therefore be fairly taken that his eighth chapter on Dāya expresses the sense of all the above. His conclusions have been summarised before.³ Mitra Miśra in the Viramitrodaya explains⁴ Vijñāneśvara in the way I have done 10 above. The other Nibandhakāras (digest-writers) both among the Drāviḍas and the Gaudas also hold the wives of the collateral sapinḍas to be excluded.

Bālabhāṭṭa alone includes two more females, namely, the sister and the daughter-in-law. His reasoning is defective. If new reasons had to be given for the first time, one or two Śruti texts⁵ may be cited to support the inclusion of the above two, but that would be making new law, and would be open to the charge of symbolical reasoning, which has been so often condemned. As regards the others, namely, the wives of the collaterals, he says nothing explicit.

20 Śulapāṇi seems to follow Aparārka; but he is very brief. In speaking about the daughter, however, he distinctly qualifies her succession by the epithet sādhvī (chaste) on the authority of Bṛihaspati.⁶

Besides the above evidence, of the distinct exclusion of the wives of collaterals, another piece of evidence is that in classifying the gotrajas according to Yājñavalkya II., 135, Vijñāneśvara divides them into three distinct classes⁷ :—

- I. Pitāmahī,
- II. Sapinḍāḥ.
- III. Samānodakāḥ.

80 He here brings in the Prapitāmahī, and Viśveśvara follows him, and brings in the four other lineal ancestors, indicated evidently by the analogy of the Pitāmāhī. For he does not include her among those whom he classes as Sapiṇḍas, and who, if the word Sapiṇḍa be more literally taken, is, as a fact, a sapiṇḍā in a sense entirely different from what the wives of the collaterals are.

The next step is to see whether Vijñāneśvara in interpreting Yājñavalkya holds the Vedas, Āpastamba, Baudhāyana, and other authorities binding. On this point there is ample evidence, and in the affirmative. Yājñavalkya himself names (ch. i., 4) Āpastamba among 20 Smṛiti lawmakers, and Baudhāyana is also expressly included by Vijñāneśvara as an authority. Yājñavalkya also expressly mentions the Vedas, (which 10 like all Āryan law-makers he was bound to do,) the Purāṇas, &c., in verse 8, and in verses 4 and 5 names 20 out of the Smṛiti-makers. Vijñāneśvara takes this enumeration as illustrative, not exhaustive. Thus in his comments on the above verses (4 and 5) he says:—नेवं परिसहस्रं किं तु प्रदशनार्थमेतन् । अतो वैधायनादेरपि धर्मशास्त्रप्रणेनुत्तमविरुद्धम् । एतेषां प्रत्येकं ग्रामाभ्येऽपि साक्षाद्गुणमाकाङ्क्षापरित्यज्यन्यतः क्रियते । विरोधे तु विरुध्यः

Translation:—This enumeration is not exhaustive but illustrative. Therefore [the character] of Baudhāyana and the like as writers of dharmaśāstra is indisputable. Although each of these [writers] is an authority, yet wherever a deficiency is observed [in one writer], it is supplied from other [writers]. Where there is contradiction [between two texts, both] optionally [prevail]

Again, the authority of Śruti as against Smṛiti texts is admitted throughout Āryan law, except where that has been modified by usage. Vijñāneśvara in his comments on Yājñavalkya I. 7, clearly lays this down. (See Mit. chap. i. l. 2 p. 1.) He also quotes Manu, chap. ii. v. 10 as authority. A reference to Manu chap. ii. vv. 7—11, shows that any commentator, interpreting the law in a manner so as to question the authority of the Vedas, was considered an atheist like a Chārvāka. Manu, II., 12, is essentially the same in its signification as Yājñavalkya, I., 7.¹ So that Vijñāneśvara in expounding the Dharma and 80 in placing the Śruti, the Smṛiti, and other sources of the Dharma, in the order in which they were to be held binding, clearly indicates his own rules of interpretation. He must therefore be taken to have held both the Śruti and Smṛiti binding. Such being the case, the next question which fairly arises is—supposing there are two interpretations of Vijñāneśvara possible—one in consonance with the Śruti and with Āpastamba and Baudhāyana and their commentators, and another opposed to them, which should be accepted. The answer according to the Dharmaśāstra rules—

if I might not also say according to all systems of reasoning—must be in favor of the former. And this conclusion is also strengthened by the circumstance that Vijñāneśvara's own expositors, with the exception of Bālabhaṭṭa, have also understood him in the first sense, and not in the second.

Messrs. West and Bühler's Digest lays down the following rule, and refers to the examples from which the deduction is made.

- (14) Gotraja Sapinda. — On failure of the paternal grandmother, the Gotraja Sapinda, i.e. all the males of the deceased's family (gotra), related to him within six degrees, downwards and upwards, together with their respective wives, are entitled to inherit the estate of a separate householder. It would seem that the Gotraja Sapinda inherit according to the nearness of their line to the deceased, i.e. that the fourth, fifth, and sixth descendants in the deceased's own line (Sāmtāna) should be placed first, next the father's line, viz., the deceased's brother's second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth descendants, next the grandfather and his descendants to the sixth degree, and so on. In Guzerat the sister is placed at the head of the Gotraja Sapinda.¹

Out of the 34 cases, 9 are directly connected with the present question.

(3). (A) Daughter v. (B) Daughter's son. [Surat case.] [This should have been placed in ch. ii. sec. 7 to which it belongs, because there is no competition between Gotraja sapindas, and the Mitāksharā authority¹ quoted does not apply to this section at all.]

(4). (A) Sister v. (B) The son of the same sister. [Ahmedabad case.] (A) succeeds. The Śāstri's answer has nothing to do with the question. According to the Mayukha the sister comes in as a Gotraja; but the sister's son can only come in, if at all, as a Bandhu under the Mitāksharā.

(5). (A) Sister v. (B) The son of the same sister. [Ahmednagar case.] (A) succeeds. 10 So many passages are indicated that evidently the Śāstri has not even understood the question, see also remarks on the preceding case No. 4.

(6). (A) Sister v. (B) Her own two sons. As in No. 5, "No authority quoted." See my remarks on the two preceding cases Nos. 4 and 5. [Ahmednagar case.]

(7). (A) Widowed mother who had remarried v. (B) The sister of the deceased. (B) succeeds. "Authority not quoted." This is the remark of the learned editors. But I would add that the question contains no proper statement of facts, and the answers give no reasons. [Sholapur case.]

I. A. 2. Half-sisters: one case. [District not stated.]

(A) Step-sister v. (B) Step-mother. (A) succeeds. Nirpayasindhu is quoted, but 20 does not support the answer in favor of the sister.

I. A. 3.—The paternal uncle: 2 cases.

(1). (A) The paternal uncle v. (B) His own wife. (B) held not entitled to a certificate. [Poona case.] The question is wrong, and so is the answer. Whether a certificate to administer to a nephew's estate may be granted to the aunt in the absence of her husband in a foreign country, is here a matter of discretion. There is no competition of interests. The status of the family is not stated; and the authorities are vague.

(2). (A) The paternal uncle v. (B) The pāt wife of the deceased's father. [Dharwar case.] "Authority not stated." The answer that (A) is heir and the pāt wife only entitled to maintenance shows that the latter, although a gotraja, was not considered an 30 heir.

I. A. 4.—Father's brother's son: ten cases. [Ahmednagar case.]

(1). (A) A separated cousin v. (B) An illegitimate son, the deceased being a Brahman. [An Ahmednagar case.] (A) succeeds. There is no competition here between male and female, nor between two heirs. One is an heir and the other only entitled to maintenance.

(2). (A) Father's brother's son v. (B) Sister's son. The deceased was a Śādra. [A Tannah case.] (B) succeeds, according to the Śāstri's answer. But the learned authors of the Digest add a note that "the father's brother's son inherits, since he is a Gotraja Sapinda, while the sister son is only a Sapinda:" so there is no competition 40 between Gotraja Sapindas.

(3). (A) Two separated cousins v. (B) Widow of a separated cousin. [A Dharwar case.] (A) succeeds. The Śāstri's answer shows that the cousin's widow was held not to be entitled to inherit as a gotraja sapinda, unless she had a son. [This case therefore is adverse to the proposition advanced.]

(4). (A) Cousins v. (B) Sons of maternal uncles. [A Branch case.] (B) are gotrajas and succeed, while (A) their opponents are Bandhus; so that there is no competition between gotrajas, or between male and female gotraja sapindas.

There seems however to be no competition between males and females.

(5). (A) Cousin v. (B) Second cousin's son. [A Sholapur case.] The answer is both (A) and (B) succeed. This has been rightly condemned, for the cousin (see table at p. 378) is a nearer sapinda, while his opponent belongs to the class of remoter sapindas.

(6). (A) Two separated cousins v. (B) A sister's daughter and (C) A separated cousin's son. [A Surat case.] Here the sister's daughter is held not to be an heir, and rightly so: for the rest, see my remarks on the preceding case (5).

(7). (A) Cousins v. (B) Cousin's sons. [A Khandesh case.] (A) succeed. The question ought to have stated whether the family was joint or divided; for the answer will be wrong in the case of an undivided family. But this as well as Nos. 5 and 6 are not illustrations of male v. female sapindas.

(8). (A) A separated cousin v. (B) Daughter's daughter and (C) Some second cousins. [A Tannah case.] (A) succeeds. Daughter's daughter is not an heir to a deceased male; but the question is inaccurate in not stating whether the second cousins were separated or joint. If they were joint, then the answer is incorrect; for they would exclude the separated cousin though nearer.

(9). (A) Four cousins v. (B) Sister's son, (C) Two widowed sisters-in-law and (D) Three father's cousins. [An Ahmedabad case.] (A) succeed.

The Śāstri's reply is valuable, as showing the distinction between the two classes of female sapindas—Mukhya (principal) and gauna (secondary). He rejects sisters-in-law as not being a Mukhyā Sapinda, and therefore not an heir. The Digest-writers condemn the opinion in respect to the gift to the sister's son, and cite authorities. Those very authorities show that the Śāstri's reply would be right if the cousins were joint with the deceased. The question does not state their status.

The English translation (p. 163, 1st ed.) is imperfect: see the Marāṭhī work, p. 145, from which the English version must have been made. As to the remark of the learned authors of the Digest at page 165, the fault is due to the loose translation, rather than to the answer which, when closely translated, runs thus: "to the sisters-in-law, the mukhya (principal) sapinda relationship does not come, but the gauna (secondary) sapinda relationship comes: therefore the sisters-in-law are not heirs." See Mr. Justice West's remarks at page 442 of Indian L. R. Bombay series vol. II., which are based on the inaccurate English translation.

(10). (A) A cousin v. (B) A manager for the deceased adopted son, appointed by his uncle's widow deceased. [A Poona case.]

This is not a case of succession. A Dharmādāya gift by a widow is confirmed.

I. A. 5:—Paternal grandfather's brother's son: two cases.

(1). (A) Granduncle's son v. (B) Full sister's daughter. [A Surat case.] (A) succeeds. A sister's daughter is no heir at all; and here there is no competition between rival Gotrajas.

(2). (A) Granduncle's son v. (B) Son of father's sister. [A Broach case.] The latter is a Bandhu and the former is a gotraja sapinda; so there can be no dispute about priority, and there are no rival Sapindas.

I. B. α. 1. Brother's grandson: two cases.

(1) (A) Son of first cousin v. (B) Sons of first cousins. [A Dharwar case.] The question is indefinite; for it contains no materials for a distinction, all the claimants being of equal affinity. The Śāstri has rightly given a hypothetical answer dependent on the united or divided status of the parties.

Again, this case ought to have no place under the present heading of 'brother's grandson.' It has been omitted in the Marāṭhī edition, see p. 149.

(2). (A) A brother's grandson v. (B) A daughter's grandson. [An Ahmednagar case.] (A) succeeds. A daughter's grandson is no heir to a male; there is no competition of heirs here.

The status of the parties is not described. Besides the cases mentioned by Mr. Mayne (p. 451 note b) there are others in which the

I. B. a. 2.—Paternal uncle's grand-son: one case.

(1). (A) Paternal uncle's grandson v. (B) A sister [the opponent appears to be a sister from the reply, but it is not stated in the question]. [A Dharwar case.] (A) succeeds.

This reply shows that the Śāstri did not consider the sister as a Sapinda; for if he had, then indisputably the sister would have excluded the first cousin's son as being nearer according to some writers.

I. B. b. 1. Daughter-in-law.

(1). (A) Daughter-in-law v. None. [A Surat case.]

10

The question distinctly states that there is no male relation of the deceased.

The reply in the English and Marāṭhī versions does not correspond (see I. W. & B. p. 169 1st Ed. and the Marāṭhī version p. 151).

The second authority quoted by the Śāstri shows that he based the succession on the capacity to offer Pindas, and that because the list of persons entitled to perform a Śrāddha contains the daughter-in-law, she is an heir. For this Presidency, the Śāstri may perhaps be pronounced to have been on the wrong track.

In their 2nd edition the Digest-writers add in remark 3 (p. 196) the case of Bace Jetha v. Haribhai, S. A. No. 304 of 1871, Bom. H. C. P. J. F. for 1872, decided on 8th March 1872. That case however is one of the daughter-in-law of a Watan as 20 against a distant cousin born in a branch of the family which had no connection with the watan. A Watan being burdened with service to the State, succession to it is jealously watched by the State, and confined to the particular branch wherein the Watan has continued through generations. It was held by the learned judges in the above case that females were not ineligible for succession to a Watan (see Act XI. of 1843, sec. 13); and that it was always confined to that branch alone. As there was none in that branch who could exclude her, that finding was enough for the purposes of that case; so that the observations of the learned judges in regard to the order of succession among the claimants seem to be an obiter dictum.

I. B. b. 2.—Brother's wife; three cases.

30

(1). (A) Sister-in-law v. (B) Sister's son. [A Tannah case]. (A) succeeds. The report is very brief. This is not a case of competition between two gotrajas. The status of the family is not stated.

(2). (A) Separated sister-in-law v. (B) Separated male cousin. [A Khandesh case.] (A) succeeds.

The question is vague. The Digest-writers in Remark 2 say that if the male cousin be the brother's son, then the Śāstri's reply is erroneous. This is confirmed by them by adding another paragraph in their 2nd edition (see p. 197). This remark has been omitted in the translation (see p. 163) and the translator renders 'male cousin' by पुत्रभाऊ (paternal uncle's son) so as to exclude the brother's son. If the remark of the Digest-writers is based on a reference to the original case in which this Vyavasthā was obtained, then the Śāstri's notions in regard to Manu IX. 187 seem to be unsound, for he would apply that text even in reference to persons mentioned in the Yājñavalkya's text ch. ii. 135, whose order Vijñāneśvara will not allow to be interfered with.

(3). (A) Sister-in-law v. (B) Distant member of the family four or five times removed. [A Surat case.] (A) succeeds.

The Śāstri seems to have been influenced by the circumstance of the family having been joint, and the distant male being separate. If that should be so, I am not sure that he may not be right. The authority he cites is Yāj. II. 135, which would appear not to be applicable to the case.

50

I. B. b. 3.—Paternal uncle's widow: three cases.

(1). Aunt v. Sister. [A Ratnagiri case.]

doctrine opposed to that in the digest seems to have been held.¹ Again, it seems that two kinds of texts have been held to be applicable to the same property at different times : sometimes as if the property were undivided, and again as if it were divided.² This seems to have partly affected the opinions of the Śāstris above noted upon.

The learned editors observe³ in reference to the Śāstris' opinions generally :—"It is however sometimes impossible to bring the authorities which they quote into harmony with their answers." Mr. Mayne quoting the above remark adds :—"It may be added that it is equally 10 difficult to bring their answers into harmony with each other. I have given up in despair the attempt to reconcile the fictions and rulings from Bombay, already cited in this paragraph, with those which will be found below."⁴ It is a pity that all the Śāstris' opinions were not published in original ; and those published have been partly published, passages considered irrelevant by the editors being left out.⁵ The

The statement in the reply about the rule of the Mayūkha is incorrect (see above Part II. p. 81, l. 25). The bearing of the authorities is not clear. The question is silent both in respect to the status of the family and as to how the dumb son came to succeed.

20 (2). (A) Paternal uncle's widow v. (B) Maternal uncle. [An Ahmednagar case.] (A) succeeds. No authority is quoted. The question ought to have stated whether the claimants were joint or divided with the deceased. There is no competition between two classes of *sapinda*s.

(3). (A) Paternal uncle's widow v. (B) Father's second cousin. [A Tannah case.] (A) succeeds. It is not stated in the question whether the family was joint or divided. The reply does not state whether the paternal-uncle was at the time of his death joint or divided with the deceased.

I. B. b. 4 Paternal uncle's son's wife : one case.

(1). (A) The cousin's wife v. Daughter-in-law.

30 The reply is unsatisfactory. The cousin's wife and the daughter-in-law being on a level in the Hindu scheme of succession, if inheritance was to be permitted to female gotrajas, the daughter-in-law must be nearer than the cousin's widow. There is here no competition with a male.

I. B. b. 5. The widow of a gentile within the fourth degree : one case.

(A) The widow of the distant cousin v. Nobody. [Surat case.]

The question is indefinite and the answer vague. The status of the family is not stated.

authorities marked by an asterisk have been added by the Editors.¹

The observations of the Privy Council have evidently not been properly attended to by those who set the questions and those who answered them.² Seeing that the English translations are not always quite accurate,³ the publication of the original would have been desirable.

Sir T. Strange, after discussing the question of the widow's right to succeed, comes to the conclusion that, subject to the condition of chastity, her right is admitted.⁴ But after stating that the daughter is admitted to succession by an express text, he notes⁵—"the general 10 principle being that the sex is incompetent to inherit."

Mr. W. H. Macnaughten also notes the gotraja heirs as given in my table up to No. 30; and then says: "In default of all these, the Sapiṇḍas in the same order as far as the seventh in degree, which includes only one grade higher in the order of ascent than the heirs above enumerated. In default of Sapiṇḍas, the Samanodakas succeed; and these include the above enumerated heirs in the same order as far as the fourteenth in degree."⁶

So far in regard to the female Gotraja Sapiṇḍas who inherit, and also about the exclusion of the rest. 20

Next I will state, as I promised to do before,⁷ the order in which the male Gotraja Sapiṇḍas inherit; for their number has been already mentioned. The annexed table contains all the Gotraja Sapiṇḍas entitled to inherit; and the numbers indicate the order in which they inherit relatively amongst themselves, 1 (son), 2 (grandson), 3 (great grandson), are put in to complete the table. It is only in their absence

"Every such reference in a suit, where it may bind a right, should embrace all important facts proved or admitted in the cause, which may affect the conclusion, 30 and it is the duty of the court itself so to frame the questions that they may elicit an opinion upon the very facts on which the legal title depends. If the facts be not ascertained, but stated, and disputed, then the questions should embrace either view of the facts. When the opinion given is apparently irreconcilable with the opinions of proved text-writers, those who give the opinion should be asked further to explain that which appears prima facie thus irreconcilable, so that they may show on what they ground an apparent exception from the general law, whether on general custom, modifying texts, on local usage, family customs, or other exceptionable matter."

that this table can come into use. 5 (daughter) and 6 (daughter's son) are inserted in order that no heir taking under an obstructed succession may be left out. But 5 and 6 are not Gotraja Sapiṇḍas.

The figures enclosed in squares indicate the female Gotraja Sapiṇḍas: all the unenclosed figures represent males. 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, and 28 are the deceased's ascendants. 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, and 29 are the sons of these ascendants respectively. The perpendicular columns denote collateral lines of male Sapiṇḍas for six degrees descending from each ascendant.

An inspection of the table will show that when the seven female sagotra sapiṇḍas and the two heirs out of the gotra, viz., the daughter and the daughter's son, are excluded, there remain 48 male gotraja sapiṇḍas. Of these, the order of heirs up to No. 10 has been fixed by Yājñavalkya (ch. ii. v. 132), from No. 11 up to No. 18 by Vijñāneśvara (see above p. 360) and from No. 19 up to No. 30 by Viśveśvara in the Subodhinī (see above p. 361), and I have supplied the remaining numbers according to the authorities.

Thus the male sapiṇḍas inheriting as such are divided into two groups, the first consists of five grades,¹ each grade containing three persons; the second consists of seven grades, the first containing three persons, and the remaining six of four persons each.² Members from the first group inherit before those in the second. The order 10 throughout is indicated by the numbers.

Those in the first group (Nos. 12 to 30 in the table) are stated by Vijñāneśvara and his commentator Viśveśvara in the Subodhinī. I supply the order of the rest in the following manner. In stating the heirs after the brother's sons, Vijñāneśvara describes the Gotrajāh to be pitāmāhī, Sapiṇḍāh and samānodokāh.³ There are thus three classes; of these classes the second is that of sapiṇḍāh. In the same passage, after enumerating the sapiṇḍas as far as Nos. 16, 17, and 18, (see table page 378, and the passage at p. 360) he says evamāśaptamāt, &c. (in this manner up to the seventh [sapiṇḍa], the taking 20 of wealth by sagoṭra sapiṇḍas should be known).

After stating how the gotraja sapiṇḍas are succeeded by the Samānodakas, Vijñāneśvara quotes⁴ the following verse from Bṛihas-Manu :—

सपिण्डना तु पुरुषे सप्तमे विनिवर्तते ॥

समानोदकावस्तु निवर्ततेऽष्टमस्तु ॥

Here also it is clear that sapiṇḍa-ship ceases (lit. returns) at the seventh puruṣa (person) : Samānodoka-ship at the fourteenth. It is clear, therefore, that all the males up to the seventh degree as given in the table are heirs; and Vijñāneśvara's enumeration up to No. 18 30 fixes the order as far as No. 18, and leaves the order of the remaining sapiṇḍa heirs to be supplied. Viśveśvara carries it up to No. 30,⁵ and those that are declared to be heirs by the text *āśaptamāt*⁶ must be classified as above according to Manu chap. ix. v. 187, which is adopted by Vijñāneśvara.⁷

In regard to the two groups above mentioned by me, there is a difference of opinion. Mr. Harrington, judge of the late Sadr Court of Calcutta,¹ considers that the line of the [Sapinda] heirs is to be continued down to the seventh descendant, from the propositus and from each ascendant, so that the deceased owner's own descendants come first, next the father and his descendants, next the paternal grandfather and his descendants, and so on. This conclusion is opposed to both Vijñāneśvara and Viśveśvara, and is not borne out by the arguments adduced. In reference to the arguments I may say that there is some 10 confusion in the report in regard to the Mitāksharā and the Dāyabhāga or Gauda authorities; and no references are given to the texts cited; but so far as I can follow those arguments after perusing the entire Dāyabhāga chapters alluded to, they amount to four; three based on different interpretations of the word putra (son) and its equivalents, and the fourth on the interpretation of the word santāna (issue). First of all Mr. Harrington holds that a strict interpretation of the word putra would exclude the grandson, or the great grandson, from succeeding after the son.² Mr. Harrington's references to Colebrooke's translation of the Mitāksharā show that all Yājñavalkya that was then translated and was 20 available to him for reference were the 35 verses (114 to 149) of chap. ii. In these, the word 'son' occurs in the form of suta, putra, tanaya, in fourteen verses.³ These three terms are equivalents of *atmaja*⁴ (son), literally one born from one's self.⁵ The word Putra (son) in verse 136 alone is construed as son's son and son's grandson as well as son, in consequence of the authority of various texts and comments. Thus Bālabhāṭṭa:—अत्र पुत्रपुत्रौ वीत्र[पुत्रौ]वीरपुत्रश्चम्. Translation:—Here the use of the word Putra [is to be taken as] upalakṣhaṇa (illustration of) pautra (son's son), and prapautra (son's grandson).

Mitra Miśra: [while on the subject of the wife's right to inherit, 30 and in reference to the same verse] says:⁶—

अपुत्रपदं पत्नीत्यादिषु सूत्रमात्रं वीत्रपुत्रौत्राभावोपलक्षणम् ॥

Translation:—The word aputra which is met with in [texts beginning with] patni,⁷ &c. is illustrative of [one without] the son's son, and the son's son's son.

Jīmūtavāhana also, while discussing the widow's right of succession,

Kaṁalākara in his Vivādatāṇḍva quoting Yāj. ch. ii. v. 136 says :—

अनेदं तत्त्वं ब्रह्मस्यान्तेति विष्टपमिति ब्राह्मन्निखितव्यसिष्टपटीनसिद्धवनेः त्रयाणामुदकं कार्यं त्रिषु पिण्डः प्रवर्तते इति मनुकेलोकानन्त्यं दिवः प्राप्तिः पुत्रपौत्रपौत्रकैरिति याज्ञवल्क्योक्तिः पुत्रादीनां त्रयाणां मुख्यत्वात्तदभावे ————— यस्तत्संस्तुष्टिभिर्भक्ता मुख्यपुत्रपौत्रपौत्रा-
वर्गाणपुत्रहीनो मृतस्त्वय सर्वस्यावरादिधनं ब्राह्मणादिविवाहोदा* संयता एन्ती ————— 10
गृह्णीयात्।

Translation :—Here the truth is that inasmuch as three [descendants] commencing with the son are principal [heirs], in accordance with the text of Sāṅkha, Likhita, Vasishṭha, and Paithīnasi [ending in] ‘attains the world of the sun,’² with the text of Manu, viz., ‘water should be offered to three [ancestors] and [so] is the Piṇḍa offered to three [ancestors],’ and with the text of Yājñavalkya, ‘the attainment of worlds, eternity, and of heaven is through sons, son's sons, and son's son's son [respectively],’ it is on failure of them that . . . in the case of one who being divided and not reunited dies without leaving the prin- 20 cipal [i.e. the legitimate] son, son's son, or son's son's son, and the secondary sons, the whole wealth including immoveables belongs to the widow, who was married according to the Brāhma, or a like form, and is chaste.

The Dharmasāstra rules of criticism require that to each word should be assigned its plain meaning, unless the context or some authority is clearly opposed to such an interpretation. Again, Mr. Harrington gives no authority for so vague a use of the word putra as will include seven descendants. Such an interpretation is unwarranted by Sanskrit idiom and grammar, and is opposed to the express authorities above 30 quoted.

Secondly :—Mr. Harrington (p. 157) rests his conclusion on the following words of the Mitāksharā :—‘The same holds good in respect to their sons and other [descendants]’;³ and also on the commentaries of Viśveśvara and Bālabhaṭṭa there. Now with reference to the demonstrative pronoun ‘their’ in the above extract, it is clear from the context that it refers to all those who have been mentioned in that paragraph of Mr. Colebrooke's translation which explains the meaning of the two phrases—namely, the obstructed and the unobstructed succession. That it does so refer also appears from Bālabhāṭṭa, who says :—

तत्पुत्रसि पुत्रपौत्रपितृन्यादिपुत्रादिष्वपीत्यर्थः

Translation :—Their sons, &c. The meaning is ‘in the case of the sons and the like of the son, grandson, the paternal uncle, &c.’ The translation of this line given by Mr. Colebrooke (para. 4 of note 3 on p. 365 Stokes’ Ed.) has been evidently misunderstood by Mr. Harrington. As regards the support drawn from Viśveśvara’s comment I must say that his language as translated by Mr. Colebrooke on p. 365 note 3 10 Stokes’ edition is somewhat vague and inaccurate. Indeed the original passage in the Subodhinī itself seems to be confused by the term अत्र तच्छब्देन पुत्रपौत्रयोः पुत्रादयः गृह्यन्ते. Translation :—Here by the word at, sons and grandsons [being understood, their] sons, &c., are to be taken. This passage is faulty. The son can have no descendant except through his own son. It appears to me, therefore, that there is a misreading here in the manuscript now available, and this can only be cleared up by a careful comparison of different families of MSS.

Thirdly, Mr. Harrington’s argument is (p. 157) : “The same construction must, I think, be put on the words ‘sons’ and ‘issue’ (putra and 20 sūnava)¹ in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of the fifth section and second chapter of the Mitāksharā, and this interpretation is indeed indicated by expressions on the same paragraphs, viz., ‘on failure of the father’s descendants’ (santāna) and ‘on that of the paternal grandfather’s line’ (santāna).” The fifth paragraph of ch. iii. sec. v. as above referred to runs thus :—“On failure of the paternal grandfather’s line, the paternal great grandmother, the great grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit.”² Sūnu means son, and not issue.³ Mr. Harrington was evidently not aware to what absurd lengths the word santāna would lead if strictly interpreted; but apart from that objection, if the word 30 putrah (sons) is to be understood as standing for any male descendant, then Viśveśvara is guilty of tautology in using an alleged synonymous expression sūnavah immediately after putrah in the same passage. But this interpretation is not correct.⁴

Fourthly and lastly, Mr. Harrington thinks that the use of the word santāna shows that descendants in general were indicated. This is not correct. On this point there is no ambiguity left. For Viśveśvara in the Subodhinī in explaining the phrase पितृसन्तानाभावे (Translation :—“On failure of the father’s issue”) says :—पितृसन्तानो अतृप्तपर्यन्तः (Translation:—The line of the father [must be understood] to be [or to end] up to [or with] the brother's sons.)

Mr. Colebrooke translates Santāna first into "descendants," (para. 4, line 1, Stokes' H. L. B. p. 446,) and again at p. 47 (para. 5, line 1) into "line." This is not correct, and often misleads. It should be either uniformly translated or simply transliterated.

Mr. Harrington's theory therefore is not supported by any authority, and his inferences, based on the words putra, sūnu and santāna, are etymologically incorrect; and are opposed to the interpretation of Viśveśvara, and to the text of Kātyāyana as received by digest-writers. 10

Again, on the same point Messrs. West and Bühler in their "Digest of the Hindu Law of Inheritance and Partition," observe:—

"The principle suggested by Mr. Harrington, namely, to continue each line of heirs down to the seventh person, and thus to allow, first the brother's descendants to inherit, next the paternal uncle's descendants, and so on, can easily be carried out in the case of the paternal uncle's line and those descended from the sons of remoter ancestors. But it is impossible to allow the brother's grandsons, great-grandsons, and remoter descendants to inherit before the paternal grandmother, since the right of the latter to succeed immediately after the brother's sons is clearly settled, not only in the Mitāksharā, but in all the law books of the Benares Schools and in the Mayūkha. Besides, under this 20 arrangement, the remoter descendants of the deceased himself, as great-great-grandsons who possibly might be in existence at the great-great-grandfather's death, would be lost sight of altogether. In order to provide for the rights of these persons who undeniably have a right to inherit, they might either be considered as coheirs with the descendants of the paternal uncle, who are equally distant from the deceased, or placed after the paternal grandmother, and before the paternal grandfather, viz., 1, paternal grandmother; 2, deceased's great-great-grandsons, or remoter descendants to No. 7 if living; 3, brother's grandsons, brother's great-grandsons, brother's great-great-grandsons and their sons; 4, paternal grandfather. The second arrangement seems to be the more satisfactory, as it follows the principle indicated by the Mitāksharā, that the succession is to go to the direct and the several collateral lines, after providing for the grandmother conformably to Manu's text in her favour, in the order in which they branch from the common stem."—(First edition p. 143; second edition p. 176).

Here two things appear to be assumed by the learned editors:—

1. That the Pitāmahi's (grandmother's) position in the order of succession is settled, while that of the Pitāmaha (grandfather), his sons and his grandsons is not equally settled.

2. That there is no received rule for determining the order of succession of the Sapiṁḍas succeeding under the present text of Yājñavalkya (chap. II., v. 135), and that one has now to be fixed for the first time. 40

On both these points the answer must be in the affirmative, and against the course of succession above suggested by the learned editors.

For, as I have shown before,¹ the following are fixed by Vijnāneśvara himself:—

No. 11. Father's mother (Pitāmahi).

No. 13. Father's father's sons.

12. Father's father (Pitāmaha).

14. Father's father's grandsons.

And again:—

No. 15. Father's grandmother (Prapitāmāhī). No. 17. Father's grandfather's son.

16. Father's grandfather (Prapitāmāha). 18. Father's grandfather's grandson.

These are expressly settled by Vijñāneśvara's text thus:—

“पितामहाभावे समानगोत्रजाः पितामहादयो धनभाजः”

Translation:—On failure of the father's mother, those of the same gotra such as the father's father and the like are takers of wealth.

तत्र च पितृसन्तानाभावे पितामही पितामहः पितृव्यास्तत्पुत्राश्च क्रमेण धनभाजः । पितामहसन्तानाभावे प्रपितामही प्रपितामहस्तत्पुत्रास्तत्पुनवच्च ॥

- 10 Translation:—Thus on failure of the father's line, the father's mother, father's father, father's brothers, and their sons are takers of wealth in order. On failure of the father's father's line, the father's father's mother, father's father's father, his sons, their sons.

Vijñāneśvara himself fixes the Pitāmāhī's position, and expressly says that Manu's text is merely for showing that she has a right to take¹; and by thus citing Manu he evidently justifies her being thus brought into his sapratibandha scheme, for she would otherwise have no place according to the text of Bandhāyana. The very passage of Vijñāneśvara which fixes the position of the father's mother, also fixes that of the 20 father's father, and in precisely the same manner; and I cannot therefore understand how he can be displaced in opposition to the order fixed by Vijñāneśvara and by a series of writers of acknowledged position, following Vijñāneśvara. It will be thus seen that the order as far as No. 30 of my table (see page 373) has been fixed by Vijñāneśvara and Viśveśvara. And with the exception in the case of Gauḍa writers such as Jīmūtavāhana and others, he has been followed by writers like Bālabhāṭṭa, Mitra Miśra, Kamalākara, and Gāgābhāṭṭa.

Again, as regards the order by which one ascendant with his two descendants is taken by me in the above enumeration before going 30 to the rest of the sapindas in next line, this is also clearly settled by authority. First of all, Viśveśvara himself, in his second work entitled Madana Pārijāta, shows² how the male sapindas of three ¹ Mit. ch. ii. leaf 60 p. 1 line 8:—धनग्रहणाधिकारप्रतिपाद्यपरत्वात्.

Other writers while admitting her right, fix her portion according to their own views. Thus Vachéśpaṭi Miśra places her at the end of Sakulyas according to his nomenclature, but Sapindas according to Vijñāneśvara's. See Vivādachintamani (Calcutta), Samvat 1874 page 53; Translation by Babu P. C. Tagore, p. 234.

² The work is attributed to Madana Pāla, in the colophon of each śatabaka (chapter). But he must be the king under whose auspices the work was composed by Viśveśvara 40 (see Sanskrit Vyavasthā Chandraikā vol. I. note 46 p. 15). There are nine śatabakas in this work. The following passage is from the eighth śatabaka:—

पितामहस्याभावे पितृव्याः तत्रापि सोदरमित्रोदरव्यवस्थापूर्वदेव साक्षात्पितामहीपुत्राः मृग्यं धनभाजः सद्भावे सापन्नपितामहीपुत्राः तेषामप्यभावे भ्रातृपुत्रन्यायेन पितृव्यपुत्रास्तेषामभावे तत्पुत्रा अपि पूर्वोक्त-रीत्या प्रत्यासाधिविज्ञेयो द्रष्टव्यः grades only succeed in each case by the analogy of the father, the father's sons [i. e. the paternal uncle], and the father's grandsons as given by Yājñavalkya. The passage which follows this rule is given at page 361, and clearly gives the names and order of succession of the Gotraja sapiṇḍas up to number 30 in my table.¹

In like manner, Kamalākara, after mentioning the succession in default of the brother's sons, says :—

तदभावे वयैव दिशा पितामहपितृव्यतन्त्रास्तदभावे प्रपितामहीप्रपितामहस्तन्त्रा इत्येवमासप्तमं सपिण्दास्तदभावे सौदका भनभाजः

Translation :—Following the same direction [i. e. proceeding on the analogy of the 10 order of succession expressly mentioned by Yājñavalkya up to brother's sons], in default of her, the father's father, father's brothers and their sons take the wealth; failing them, the father's father's mother, father's father's father, his sons and their sons; in this way, sapiṇḍas up to the seventh [degree] take. Failing those the Samānodakas.

Again, this order is expressly followed by Bālabhāṭṭa, and by all the other writers I have named above. It seems also that this interpretation of Viṣṇuśvara had become fixed by usage, and had been accepted even before the time of Viśveśvara, by such eminent authorities as Mādhava and Devaṇṇa Bhāṭṭa or Devānanda-20 bhāṭṭa, as he is styled in the Calcutta edition of the Smṛiti Chandrikā. Thus a succession of digest-writers and commentators have fixed the order of sapiṇḍas up to number 30, and such order, whether convenient or not, is now binding, and must be accepted. In regard to the rest, I have briefly indicated the rule which settles their order of succession. To make the matter clearer, I must add a few words. Manu (chap. ix., v. 187) says: “अनन्तरः सपिण्दाद्यस्तस्य तस्य धनं भवेत्.” Translation :—“To the next amongst the Sapiṇḍas, the dhana (wealth) belongs.” This nearness begins with the 4th, 5th and 6th descendants of the propositus (Nos. 31 to 33, table p. 378), and the remaining four 30 Sapiṇḍas of each series one after the other (see Nos. 31 to 57 in table, p. 378). Viṣṇuśvara's statement āsaptamāt (up to the seventh) is exhaustive as to number, and there is nothing illustrative in this passage. Where the term Bandhu is taken as illustrative, it is done on the authority of Mitra Miśra² to supply an omission; but the person so introduced, comes after the enumerated Bandhus, although if nearness alone were considered, the maternal uncle, so introduced, would come before his son, which he does not.

Translation :—Failing the father's father, the father's brother [succeeds]. Here the distinction between the full blood and half blood [is to be understood] as before. [Thus] the sons of the father's mother first take wealth. Failing them the sons of the father's stepmother. Failing these, the sons of paternal uncles [succeed] on the 40 analogy of the brother's sons [mentioned in the verse of Yāj. regarding the order of heirs]. In their default, their sons [succeed]. Thus the propinquity [for succession] is to be determined after the aforementioned manner.

I cannot see how this order, expressly fixed by rules, can now be altered. Were it open to do so, many other orders might be suggested. Thus, if the field had not been pre-occupied by Vijñāneśvara and his followers, the easier course would have been to leave off the *sapinda*s with the grandfather, begin at the son of the great grandson (No. 31), and carry the seven stems through in a regular manner. Another course would be to take three persons from the propositus all through, and then exhaust the seven lines beginning with that of the deceased. A third course would be the one indicated by Messrs. West and Bühler, beginning after the Pitā-mahī, on the ground of her being mentioned by Manu. A fourth would be the order of the Mayūkha, wherein simultaneous succession opens out to different sets of sapinda heirs.

I will now make a few notes on decided cases. In Rutcheputty Dutta Jha and others v. Rajunder Narain Rao and others,² it was held, according to the Mithila Śāstra, that "the party in possession being descended in the sixth degree in the paternal line was to be preferred to the maternal line." The position of the contending parties is given below.³

There is no contest here between *Sapinda*s of any kind or degree.⁴ The plaintiff's (appellant's) father was neither a Bandhu nor a Sapinda, near or remote, even out of the hundreds named in the marriage section.⁴ As a son of the sister of the wife of the deceased propositus, he was no relative of the deceased under any system of Āryan law in India. And I confess I cannot see how all the discussion in the case should have arisen.

In Rany Srimuty Dibeah v. Rany Koonda Luta and others,⁵ it was held according to the Dáyabhaga Śāstra which governed the descent, and not the Mitáksharā, that a gift of Zamindaree to a stranger by the widow of the last Zamindar who died without issue, made with the confirmation of the mother's brother's sons, was valid as against the claimants under the Mitáksharā, as being descended in the seventh remove in the male line from the common ancestor.

In Bhyah Ram Sing v. Bhyah Ayur Singh,¹ the question was (page 390) "whether the plaintiffs, being great-great-great-grand-sons of the common ancestor, were too remote in degree to be heritable as gentiles." There was no contest between two persons as heirs or between two classes of heirs (p. 392). This case is followed in Thakoor Jeebnath Singh v. The Court of Wards,² wherein it is held that the great grandson of the deceased's great-great-great-grandfather is by Hindu law entitled to succeed in preference to the father's sister's son. The two previous cases, "one in the 2nd Moore p. 132, and the other in the 4th Moore, p. 292," are referred to by their Lordships (p. 165) as being those the principle of which had been followed in the case from the 18th Moore just referred to.

In Thakoorani Sahiba and another v. Mohun Lall and others,³ the sister's son is held not to be an heir to his deceased uncle's property ac- 20

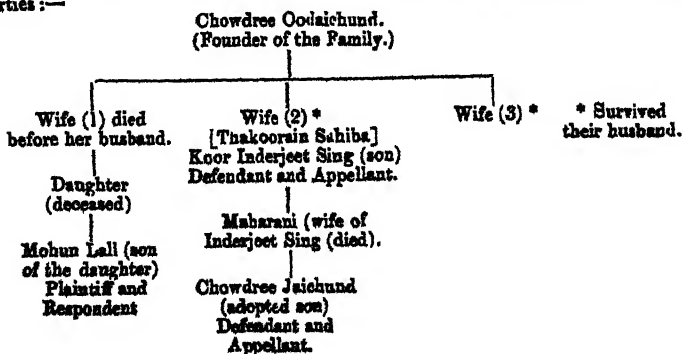

¹ 13 Moore's E. I. Ap. 373; same case: 5 Beng. L. R. 293; the first two paragraphs of the head note run as follows:—"According to the Mitáksharā and the authorities of the Benares school of law as received in the North-West Provinces, grandsons in the fourth and fifth removes are Sapindas and heirs to their common ancestors.

The question of preference in succession is distinct from exclusion, as the preference is founded by the Hindu Law on the superior efficacy of funeral oblations."

This being a Mitáksharā case, the last opinion appears opposed to Vijñānśvara. The case in the 4th Moore, p. 292, is a Dáyabhaga case; and the one in the 2nd Moore p. 132 appears to be between a remote Sapinda and one not an heir at all.

cording to the Benares exposition of the Mitákshará. The question of Sapinda succession is discussed ; but the defendant in possession being an adopted son of the last owner, the Sapinda succession question cannot arise.

In Koore Goolab Sing and others v. Rao Kurum Sing,¹ it was held that by the Mitákshará, a male descendant in the fifth degree from the great grandfather of the propositus succeeds to the exclusion of the sister's son. In Thakur Jibnathsing v. The Court of Wards and another,² it is held that the grandson of the great-great-great-grandfather of the 10 deceased is, according to the Mitákshará, a nearer heir to the deceased than his father's sister's son.

Sisters in Madras were held to have no title to brother's property.³ The case is decided in accordance to usage "prevailing beyond memory and acquiesced in by all parties concerned." The texts cited were regarded as "virtually changed and modified by practice." The same is also held according to Hindu law in other cases.⁴

But it has since been held that although she may not succeed as a sapinda, she may as a Bandhu.⁵

Similarly sister's sons were held to have no right to inherit.⁶ But 20 the opposite has been since held also in the same Presidency, though it would seem to be in his right as Bandhu.⁷ In another Madras case,⁸ the Privy Council give no decision as to the sisters succeeding as Bandhus, but observe that they "could only so succeed after the Sapindas, of whom there are several, had been exhausted."

In Lakshmibdi v. Jairam Hari and others,⁹ it seems to be held in 40 The Court assign three authorities for the above conclusion:—(1) Mitákshará (Colebrooke's Translation) ch. ii., sec. 5, para. 5; (2) West and Bühler, pp. lii, liii, (Introduction, 1st Ed.) and introductory remarks to Digest ch. ii., sec. 14; and (3) Visweswara's Subodhini extending the list of Sapindas mentioning the great grandfather's grandmother. In regard to grounds 1 and 3, I would refer to pages 360—364 above. The deduction made by Messrs. West and Bühler, and above relied upon, rests on cases at pp. 149—174 of the Digest, as to which see above pp. 372—377

Bombay for the first time, (no earlier case is there quoted,) under the Mitáksharā, that "the wives of all Sapīṇḍas and Samānodakas must be held to have rights of inheritance co-extensive with those of their husbands." This is very wide, and as at the best, the widows might take a life-estate, if they take at all, the term co-extensive can hardly be accurate.

In Bae Jeta v. The heirs of Haribhai Bhagvandas,¹ a wattan was held to be heritable by the daughter-in-law of the last male owner in preference to a male opponent of another and an entirely distinct branch of the family. It was found that the wattan had never been held by 10 the opponent's branch; but the decision was founded on the preceding case of Laxmibai v. Jayram Hari and others. In case of watan property, the tenure of which is regulated by usage controlled by the state, and is thus limited to a particular branch, the Hindu law cannot operate, except within that branch.

In *Lallubhai Bāpubhai and others v. Mankuvārbai and others*² the widow of a remote male sapīṇḍa was held to be entitled to succeed in preference to a more remote male sapīṇḍa. The decision is based chiefly on the interpretation of Vijñāneśvara. The distinction of different kinds of sapīṇḍa relationship which has been previously explained, is 20 there denied. But it was not pointed out that Vijñāneśvara had divided the work not only into Adhyāyas, but into prakaraṇas. Thus A'chāradhyānā is divided into several prakaraṇas (sections). Thus marriage forms one, and Śrāddha another (see headings in Part II. pp. 157—274). Out of a very large number who are all nominally Sapīṇḍas, some only enter the Śrāddha ceremonial. This is so stated in all the current ceremonial works. In marriage there are 2121 Sapīṇḍas by the texts of Yājñavalkya as interpreted by Śrīdhara, Anantadeva, Nāgojībhaṭṭa, and others. But these cannot come into the Dāyabhāga Section by any stretch of the imagination. Yājñavalkya, II. 185, which relates to the Sapratibandha 30 succession, contains the wife, daughter, and mother, directly mentioned. These are Sapīṇḍas of the deceased. But they do not take the dāya as Sapīṇḍas. The Mitáksharā, which relates to this portion, is complete in its rules, and requires no provisions from the marriage section to supplement it. Mitra Miśra is one of the best commentators of the Mitáksharā, and the passage translated elsewhere (pp. 362—364) is free from all ambiguity. No authority is given for holding that he used to quote from memory as is said in the Digest. The printed edition is not correct in several places. But this is easily righted by revising it with the aid of proper manuscripts and competent Śāstris. Sir W. Jones' translation of Manu, chap. ix., 187, is vague. Kullūka does use the words pūman-strivā (male or female). But he does this in order to justify the inclusion of the wife, daughter, mother and grandmother by special texts; he excludes the wives of the uncle and uncle's son; he ends the series under Yājñavalkya, II. 135, with the pitri-matā (father's mother), and says तदभावे अन्येपि सन्निकृष्टः सपिण्डः मृतधनं गृहीयात्. Translation :—In her 10 absence, another near sapinda [male] will take the deceased's wealth.

² Indian L. R., Bombay series, p. 388; this case is followed in Special Appeal No. 474 of 1874, decided on 17th October 1878; Printed Judgments p. 538. In this 40 last case the claim of the daughter-in-law of the deceased was preferred to that of the deceased husband's paternal uncle's son. Here the daughter-in-law has come in against the fixed order of Vijñāneśvara, the last member of that order being the grandfather's brother's son.

Those who would interpret Kullūka as laying down some Dharma (law) in opposition to the Śruti forget his own rules of interpretation, particularly those referred to in chapter ii., vv. 6—15. He distinctly denounces such interpretations as heretical (Manu-Smṛiti, leaf 15, p. 1, line 1). His words anyah, sannikṛṣṭah and sapindaḥ are in the masculine. The same-rule applies to Viśveśvara's interpretation of the word Gotrajaḥ in the Subodhinī. Yājñavalkya, II. 136, uses the expression sarva varṇeshvayam vidhiḥ. Translation :—This rule [is] among all classes. Colebrooke's Translation (Stokes' H. L. Books, p. 20 427, line 10) '[and persons]' is wrong.¹ So also, Mr. Colebrooke's translation of sarve into tribes and classes (Stokes' H. L. B. p. 427, para. 1, line 3,) is incorrect, and paragraph 4 on the same page is loose. Mayūkha and Mitāksharā are two of the exponents of Āryan law, but they are not all the law. These works themselves contemplate the use of other works—Vedas and Smṛitis. Mr. Steele enumerates the works consulted in Poona, Khandesh and Southern Marāṭha Country. As a fact the people consult all works contemplated by the Mitāksharā before they decide upon anything.

It is said that the definition of Sapinda relationship in the Āchārā-

30 ¹ Viśveśvara's passage is quite clear (see Mitāk. ch. ii. leaf 57, p. 1, line 3) :— सर्वेषु मूर्खोवसिकादिष्वनुलोमजेषु सुतादिषु प्रतिलोमजेषु वर्णेषु च ब्राह्मणादिषु अयं दायप्रहणविधिः Translation : 'Among all [s. e.] among the anuloma [classes] like the Mūrdhavasikta and others, and *pratiloma*s like the Sūtas and others, and amongst the classes, like the Brāhmaṇas and others, [3 classes], this is the rule for taking Dāya.' On this Viśveśvara (in the Subodhinī) says :—सर्ववर्णेष्वयं विधिरित्यत्र सर्वशब्दो न वर्णविशेषणं अपि तु स्वतन्त्र एव तथाच सर्वं च ते वर्णोक्तिरिति समाहारे समासान्तर्गतशब्द इत्याह सर्वेषु मूर्खोवसिकेति ॥ Here Viśveśvara quoting the clause Sarvavarṇeshvayam vidhiḥ says :—'here the word sarva (all) does not qualify varṇa (class), but is an independent term; sarve (all) and varṇāḥ (classes) being joined' in a compound, the particle cha [used by Vij.] is included in the com-
40 pound; and hence Vij. says that the word sarveshu (amongst all) means amongst the *Mūrdhavasikta*s. So that there is no ambiguity in this expression whatever.

Besides, although an ekaśka compound of males and females is possible (Pāṇini I. 2, 67), a dvāśkaśka can only be adopted when the context necessitates its adoption (see Vīr.'s leaf 208, p. 2 lines 10—11). Here both the text and context are against such a construction. The whole text relates to a deceased male owner of wealth.

dhyāya of the Mitāksharā by Vijñāne-vara and in the Sam-kāra Mayūkha by Nilakanṭha agree, and the laws of the Hindus (Aryans) of succession and religious ceremonial are so blended, that a Sapiṇḍa for one purpose must be a Sapiṇḍa for another. The Aryan law is no doubt so framed that one influences the other; but succession and ceremonial are distinct subjects, and are separately treated, and must be so. The classification of Sapiṇḍas in the preceding portion and the authorities noted below will make it clear that a Sapiṇḍa for one purpose is not necessarily a Sapiṇḍa for another.¹ Wherever the Vīramitrodaya clears up, or supplies what is ambiguous, or not laid down in the 10 Mitāksharā, its authority is acknowledged by the people.² And when it interprets the law in consonance with the *Sruti*s and *Smṛiti*s, it must be obeyed, unless the authorities of the texts cited in met or explained away. [See Kullūka's Commentary on Manu, leaf 14, p. 2, and leaf 15, p. 1, and Mitāk leaf 1, p. 2, and leaf 2, p. 1.] The number of works consulted on Gotranirṇaya by the people is very considerable; to these however the court unfortunately was not referred, and Mr. Monier Williams' Dictionary was consulted as to the meaning of the term gotraja. The Dictionary is cited thus in the judgment:—"Mr. Monier Williams in his Dictionary (page 297, column 2) gives to that word 20 the two limited meanings of 'born in the same family,' adding, however, also the meaning of 'relation' or 'gentile,' he is careful to refrain from describing it as denoting any one gender more than another." Dr. Williams' information is however from Gaṇḍa sources, for he makes one of the gotraja attributes to be the giving of food and water oblations, and contrasts gotrajas with the Bandhus. His statement that Bandhus do not partake in the offerings to common uncestors is incorrect. As to the "gender" Dr. Williams gives the radical word gotraja, and immediately after the masculine, feminine and neuter affixes of as, ā, am, before giving the equivalents.

Mr. Justice West suggests that the school of Vājasaneyins may be regarded "as specially favourable to women" (p. 440). In support of this, the dialogue of Yājñavalkya and one of his wives, which Professor M. Müller has partly translated, is referred to. But that relates to an entirely different subject—namely, to use Prof. M. Müller's own language,³ to show "how largely this idea of the Ātman, as the Divine Spirit, entered into the early religious and philosophical speculations of the Indians." The whole relates to the emancipation of Ātman (self) from the fetters of this world, and to that end advises her that the

Atman should be seen, heard, thought of, and meditated upon.¹ There was no division of property made; and if it were made, it would amount to a gift by the husband to his wives bhartri-datta, a species of Stridhana contemplated by law. The original Upanishad question was put in order to find out what his wife Maitreyī thought on the question of Moksha (final emancipation).²

He proposed to try the minds of his wives, offering to cut off his relation with them by giving them his dravya (wealth). On this, Anandagiri observes³ :— द्रव्येति ॥ विदे तु न स्त्रीस्वातन्त्र्यमिति भावः ॥

10 Translation :—As to dravya (wealth) there is no independence to women in respect to wealth. Such is the meaning.

So that this authority too is, if anything, like that of Baudhāyana and Āpastamba, opposed to females.

Again, it is said that Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra allows to women the right⁴ of sacrifice as authorized by the Vedas (p. 441). The references in the note to Professor M. Müller's work (2nd ed.) do not contain any passages, but it may be stated that other *Sūtras*⁵ also, such as Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, Satyāśhādha and Āśvalāyana, authorize women to sacrifice in a similar manner, and there is nothing peculiar to Kātyāyana in this matter at all. In all Śrauta ceremonies, the wife has to take a certain part, and in so doing has to repeat certain Vedic Mantras.¹ Even now, wherever there are Śrauta fires preserved and worshipped, the Śrautins' wife must stay in the house and attend to the fires. She cannot leave the house except with the fire, although on occasions her husband may do so. This usage obtains amongst all Brāhmaṇas of the R̥g or Yajur Vedas.

Vijñāneśvara has brought in the daughter's son on the strength of the word śu in Yājñavalkya in order to make Yājñavalkya consistent with other writers quoted by him, and on a principle followed by him and other Āryan writers.² Why he introduced the father's mother he gives his own reasons.³

The Vīramitrodaya is arguing against and not for the widow of a collateral, although he is trying to show at the same time a certain inconsistency of Jīmūtavāhana in reference to the grandmother. In doing this, he is not interpreting Vijñāneśvara.⁴ In regard to practice, all the cases referred to have been already remarked upon. The cases above noticed are, so far as I am aware, the only reported decisions on this subject. I referred the point to the highest Áryan authority amongst the people of India, the celebrated Paṇḍit Bál Śāstrí of Benares, and his conclusion as to the views of Vijñāneśvara is as follows :—

“ तस्मात्पितुर्मतित्यस्य प्रपितामहाद्युपलक्षणत्वेन सप्तमुरुषपत्नीपर्यन्तानां धनाधिकारस्य सिद्धत्वेऽपि स्नुषाभ्रातृपत्न्यादीनां प्रतिपदमनुक्तानां न कथमप्यधिकार इति मिताक्षराकरमित्रोदययोः सिद्धान्तः । ”

Translation :—Thus although the right of inheritance is established in the case of the wives of ancestors, up to the seventh, in consequence of the term ‘ father’s mother’ being taken as illustrative of the grandfather’s mother and the like, yet by no means [does such] right exist in the case of the daughter-in-law, the brother’s widow and the like who have not been expressly mentioned [as entitled to inherit]. This is the conclusion both of the Mitāksharā and the Vīramitrodaya.

N.B.—I have followed Kamalākara and other writers in discussing Sapīṇḍas under three sections. There is another department of Āchāra (ritual)—namely, Śrāddha, with which Sapīṇḍa relationship is in some cases connected. The Śrāddha ceremonial however is entirely religious ; and the details, though instructive in a social and religious point of view, are so extensive that I have no space for them here. On questions of partition and succession generally, some of these details might prove useful ; but I cannot make room for them in this treatise.

CUSTOMARY LAW.

SECTION I.

Marriage.

General observations on the subject of marriage have been made in the Introduction. In this Section I propose to treat of the subject by itself. Marriage is one of the earliest of human institutions. But it appears now clear that there was a time when such an institution was unknown, at least in some portions of Bharatavarsha.¹

The account given below is a dialogue between Paṇḍu (father of the five great Pāṇḍavas of Hastināpura), and his wife Kunti. Paṇḍu tells his wife that at one time women consorted with men like cattle; until Śvetaketu, son of the Rishi Uddālaka, introduced the rules of marriage. He then gives instances in which niyoga had formerly taken place, and advises her to raise issue to perpetuate the line, as he was incapable of doing so himself in consequence of some curse which had been pronounced upon him. There is no evidence in this passage as to the precise time when, and the country where, the practice of such promiscuous intercourse prevailed. But the story points to times anterior to the compilation of the Vedas. For even in the earliest Veda, marriage appears to have become a well-established institution.

- It is true that the term pati occurs in the passage given in the note ;
 10 but the accounts which follow show that it is not used in the sense of a husband but of a protector. This is so from the context, and the interpretation is further supported by the mode in which the term pati is elsewhere used in that same portion of the Mahābhārata whence the extract is made. Various instances might be referred to. The most noted is that of the dialogue between Dīrghatamas and his wife (see Mahābhārata Adiparva, Adhyāya 104, vv. 30—35, leaf 133, pp. 1, 2). That the marriage relations, if there were any, were so loose as to amount to nothing, may also be shown from the intercourse between Brihaspati, the religious preceptor of Indra, and the mother of 20 Dīrghatamas and their attendant circumstances. These disclose a condition of society quite unlike ours, and more like that of the present community of Malabar.

Dr. J. Muir translates six out of the forty-four verses given above in the note (see his Sanskrit Texts, vol. II. pp. 333—334, 1st Ed., as an indication of the morals of the people). Mr. Mayne (Hindu Law and Usage, p. 54) thinks the passages quoted by Dr. Muir prove looseness of manners rather than polyandry. To me the whole chapter shows that the Northern Kurus were then what the Nairs in Malabar are now; so that a man did not know his own father. Paṇḍu tells his wife the story related in the above chapter, and seemingly suggests, by way of comparison, that the niyoga connection he is advising her to submit to, is not so bad as what was once current: and that she ought therefore to listen to him.¹

I am aware that the connection of Súryá (the daughter of the sun) with the twin-gods (Ásvins) is advanced as an argument for the existence of polyandry in the Vedic age. It is not certain which Súryá it was; for another Súryá (also mentioned in connection with the Ásvins) is definitively spoken of as given in marriage to Soma, as shown in the Aitareya Bráhmaṇa. The original Rig-veda verses which I have examined, are often doubtful, and sometimes figurative. At any rate, seeing that when the Vedas were compiled, the marriage-rite as it now exists, as shown further on, was fully established, any such stray verses may be the remains of old traditions of loose connections, or, as is more probable, they are used in a figurative sense.²

I am sorry I cannot understand another example quoted by Mr. Mayne from Wheeler's History of India (vol II., p. 502) on the question of polyandry. Mr. Wheeler himself at p. 502 refers to p. 241 of the same volume; but on going over the original of the passage supposed to be translated from the Rámáyana, (Aranya Kāṇḍa, Adhyáya 2—4, leaves 2—6) there is no such expression as "Give up your joint wife," (p. 242) as the historian makes use of in his work to support his theory of polyandry. I have also read over the whole story of Viráḍha to which Mr. Wheeler refers, in the Adhyátma Rámáyana (Aranya Kāṇḍa, ch. i., vv. 17—46; leaves 2—3), but that too does not contain such a passage. The notice of the verses about Súryá and the Ásvins I have already mentioned above; and that at the best is very doubtful, if not positively well explained. I think such facts as influence the history and laws of a people in important matters ought to be more correctly ascertained by those who, like Mr. Wheeler, seem to have no access to the original. So much for polyandry and promiscuous intercourse in that age.

As I said above, since we have had the Vedas in their present form we have the institution of marriage settled, as we find it now. Whether it was polygamy or monogamy, which first prevailed, may be difficult to ascertain. But from texts given below,¹ monogamy would appear to have been at one time the rule, to which polygamy was the exception.

Dr. John Muir supports the monogamic theory by citing Vedic texts,² showing that the word 'husband' is there connected with the words 10 patnī or jāyā (wife) in the singular. But this is not in my view a secure basis on which to ground such a proposition; for in the texts which he himself quotes further on in the same volume (see pp. 457, 458), the same words occur in the plural—namely, patnyah (wives), and sa-patnyah (co-wives). On the other hand, the word dampati, being always dual in number, denotes, as I said before, the existence of monogamy.³ And although polygamy is now legal by usage, still if a person has to invite a dampati (husband and wife) for a religious purpose, he will invite only a man who has married one wife and who is living. In many parts of the country, a man marrying a second or a third wife will not be ordinarily 20 invited with his subsequent wives to join particular ceremonies; thus he will not be allowed to hold the antahpaṭu (the cloth suspended between the bride and bridegroom at the time of marriage); nor will his second wife—whose marriage is regularly the first marriage, (and is held to be quite right and proper,) be allowed to participate in various customary auspicious ceremonies, although she will be otherwise treated as a śuvāsini, or a married woman whose husband is living. The punarbhū (or the remarried female) is unknown to strict Hindu law,—but custom, as I shall show hereafter, has admitted her into the community amongst various lower classes, and the Indian Legislature has legalized a second marriage by a widow throughout all classes and castes.

While the occurrence of the word dampati throughout the Vedas clearly supports monogamy, other texts support the sacredness of the marriage tie. Thus the pair is compared to the Āśvins (the twin-medical deities) in the Vedas.¹ The word Āśvinau is always in the dual, and the two are known as inseparable. Such passages would suggest that marriage was even then looked upon as an indissoluble transaction, which, when completed by Saptapadī and the Virāha homa, it continues to be to this day, except where usage has laid down a mode of divorce, 10 held binding by the castes to which the parties belong. Where there is no Saptapadī and no Virāha homa, it is not correct to call the marriage as one celebrated according to the text law at all. It must be regulated by caste customs alone.

Although the existence of more than one wife is recognised by the Vedas,² it seems that such a custom was looked upon with disfavor; for there is no one word signifying a husband with many wives, corresponding with dampati (a man and his wife) which occurs so frequently.

A few more Vedic facts are useful, and may be here noted. Thus is 20 the admission in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa, that a man may have more than one wife; but one wife cannot have more than one husband at one time.³ The word is Sahapatayah (rival husbands). Along with this, however, appears the unequivocal position of the wife as a Sukhā (friend).⁴ This appears to have been preserved at the time of the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva Adhyāya 813, v. 64, l. 307 p. 2). Again, it is generally taken for granted that when a man becomes a widower, he must marry again, as he cannot sacrifice in a single state. This is not correct. Even now there is a vidhura vidhāna (ceremonial for a widower). In this respect also the Aitareya Bráhmaṇa is specific.¹ I will have to refer to this hereafter.

As regards marriage customs much cannot be directly gathered from the Vedas. But the following summary would represent the practices as therein recorded so far as they can be made out.

It would appear from the Vedas that in that age females were sometimes allowed to choose their husbands²; that the question of preference among competing suitors was at times determined by the winning of a certain stake;³ that on marriage the bride went over to the house of 10 the bridegroom;⁴ that certain clothes worn by the bride had to be given away;⁵ that presents of money had to be made on the occasion of the giving away of her clothes as mentioned above;⁶ that grasping of the hand was one of the rites connected with the marriage ceremony⁷; that Agni (fire) was requested to give long life and success to the bridegroom along with the bride;⁸ that Indra and Prajapati were invoked to bestow unswerving affection, progeny, and good character on the bride⁹; and that a joint prayer by the couple was offered to the Viśvedevas for the mutual enlightenment and devotion of their hearts¹⁰; and that all these things were done before a sacrificial fire kindled for 20 the occasion. It would thus appear that the rite was a simple one, and free from the symbolism which now prevails.

As the early Áryas, like their descendants, have always provided texts for the minutest details as far as they went, it may be inferred from the texts above given that the Vedic marriage ritual was very simple, and did not include anything beyond what we find laid down. If we had had any other Vedic Prayogas (rituals) prior to the Sūtras, they are not now accessible, and may be treated as non-existent for all practical purposes.

This much may be at once stated, that neither the Rig-veda hymns, nor the Mantra portion of the other Vedas, furnish materials for the complete marriage ceremonial as it now exists, and to which I have now to invite attention. Various changes upon the Vedic texts have been gradually introduced by custom. These in their first stage of innovation are evidenced by the Grihya Sūtras of the different Sākhās (branches). These Sūtras again show that the marriage customs, even in those early days, had undergone a considerable change, and also that they contemplated further modifications according to the usages of castes and countries. I shall therefore now begin with the Sūtra ceremonial¹⁰ for celebrating marriages, adding the present rites thereto. The Sūtra is the first stage next after the Mantra period; and it is the basis of the present ceremonies.

The Āryas profess to be guided by their own respective Sūtras; but they go on adding almost unconsciously on every conceivable occasion. So that the so-called present Sūtra ceremonial is a mixture; and as such it will here be given. According to this, the marriage ceremony now performed among the twice-born classes, consists of 27 principal observances.¹ Of these four are founded on the Grihya, twelve on the Grihya Pariśiṣṭa, and the rest derive their authority from custom alone.

The list above given will show to even a casual observer that a considerable advance in minute details has been made upon the Vedic rite. I have intentionally left out minor observances. The purely Sūtra rites are very few. To these are added the Pariśiṣṭa rites, and these latter are accounted equal to the first, and are held to belong to the Sūtra class. The remainder are customary, and these are again supplemented by many more, which I have not detailed here. Astrology, which came to the front in later times, now forms an integral part of the authorities governing marriages. The astrological provisions are set aside by a large number without practical inconvenience and with perfect impunity. A few, however, will seek their aid; and in such a case the auspicious and inauspicious signs and ceremonies play a very important part. These affect chiefly in reference to the stars ruling at the birth of the parties; 10 to the changes of planets; to the comparison of the twelve signs of the zodiac; to the parties' names; to the seasons of marriages; to preparatory sacrifices, &c. &c. As a specimen of good and bad signs, and their attendant ceremonies, I give one example. If the bride, while on her way to her new home, cries, it is a bad omen; but the ritual provides a ready cure. A symbolical mantra is recited, and the evil is allayed. This is a fair sample of the symbolism which now rules some branches of the Hindu ceremonial, even independently of astrological considerations.

The above, as I have said before, is the ceremonial laid down for the higher classes. It is based on Áśvaláyana Grihya Sūtra, and 20 Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa has summarized it with all subsequent modifications in his work called Prayogaratna, which is a current work, and is the groundwork of my summary. But even here there is a very wide interval between theory and practice. There are places where hardly a qualified Bráhmaṇa priest is obtainable, and parties have to improvise a ceremonial for themselves. This is done by distributing pan-supári, worshipping the household deities and the ceremonial pothi (book) containing the ritual. In the nature of things it cannot be otherwise; for although Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa wrote for all the three higher classes, all of them are not now to be met with in the state predicated 30 of them by Manu and others. I would not now enter into the vexed question of classes. But even taking the Bráhmaṇas as representing the three higher classes, statistics and daily experience show that thousands of Bráhmaṇas are only so in name.¹ To them the Vedas are a sealed letter. In such a case, whatever the theoretical ritual may be, its performance depends on the state of the people, and on their local and class usages. Indeed, this seems to have been present before the minds of the different treatise-writers themselves; for they distinctly base all the marriage ceremonial on custom. Thus in the Prayogaratna itself, Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa states the 40 fact as follows, giving the Grihya Sūtra as his authority:—

“ प्रयोगपारिजाते तु गृह्यपरिशिष्टानुसारेण कन्यादानतत्प्रतिग्रहजनिकापूर्वकमन्त्रवर्गनिरीक्षण-

The Dharmasindhu (parichchheda iii., 1st half, l. 50 p. 2 lines 2—4) comes to the same conclusion. Thus, while discussing the question whether in the matter of marriage, the limits of sapinda relationship laid down by Yājñavalkya in ch. i. v. 53 (see above Part II. p. 168 ll. 2 and 3) may not sometimes be further circumscribed, the author speaks as follows:—

10

“जनपदधर्मा ग्रामधर्माश्च तान्निवाहे प्रतीयात् । येनास्य पित्रो याना येन यानाः पिनामहा । नैन

No sin will arise out of such following.’ [A text of Vyāsa.]

The *Samskāra*kaustubha has likewise admitted the supremacy of custom on this subject; for after giving the ritual as deduced from texts, the author says (see l. 221 p. 1 line 8):—एवंस्वर्गपि सकलप्रच्याननाद्व्याचारानुसरण-मेवेच्छतां परितोषाय यथाचारमपि प्रयोगो लिख्यते. Translation: ‘Although it is so, I now write the ritual adopted by custom for the gratification of those who wish adherence to the custom in defiance of all treatises [on the subject].’ It is true this passage shows the author not to be favourably inclined to the advocacy of custom as against express texts. But I take this circumstance as strongly proving the general prevalence of the customary law against express texts, for it is not at all likely that the author with his dislike for the ritual he lays down, would have cared to do so, and thereby to give it some sanction, if the followers of such a ritual had been in a small minority. The truth probably was, that the author was aware that the ritual already laid down by him according to his notion of the veneration for texts was not likely to be accepted by the lay public. Indeed, such is now actually the case. For the old ceremonial has, in a great measure, been superseded by the new customary one.

From what Kamalākara says before prescribing the Punyādhavāchana ritual for Śūdras, (viz., तत्रादौ कर्माङ्गन्तारागुणाद्वचनमाचारानुसारेणोच्यते) it appears that he had also consulted the practices of the Śūdras before writing 40 his work, and wrote according to what he had observed (see his Śūdra Kamalākara I, 19, p. 1, line 1). But his work itself is now almost out of use. Each caste has its own ceremonial; and now while in some Śūdra castes the tendency is more and more to imitate the twice-born classes, in others it is to give up as much of the old ceremonial as possible.

The above authorities are, it seems to me, decisive. And they are consistent with what also appears clearly from the purely ancient writers themselves, namely, that the marriages of the Áryas were always regulat . by caste, family, country, and village customs.

It is curious to read some of the accounts in the English books. These were probably composed either from second-hand information or from obsolete prayoga (ritual) writers of particular districts. Some 10 portions of the ceremonial may agree with those now in practice, but that is simply a matter of accident. A ceremonial which lasts for 10 days together according to the text-writers now takes place, as I know from instances within my own experience, in two or three hours. The only matters that occupy a prominent place at present are the presents, the processions, and display generally, when the parties can afford. The simplicity of the Sûtras has gone away with their makers, the Rishis. There are cases where the new prayoga (ceremonial) is followed. But even there, except in very essential matters, it is considerably modified by local usage. This may be said of the highest class of Bráhmaṇas.

20 In other classes such a thing as a prayoga does not exist. A string of Puráṇic verses are repeated at intervals by a priest if one be present, and the ceremonial is conducted by the elders of the parties, particularly women, according to their own usages. Such things as Vishṇu-Sahasranáma (the one thousand names of Vishṇu), and Ráma-rakshá (prayer to Ráma) are often repeated. These have nothing to do with the ritual. But the parties, really speaking, do not stand in need of it. If the Jośi can say when the turmeric is to be applied, or the cocoanuts and beetle-nuts to be presented to the local deities, or the flower garland to be thrown, or the thread to be wound round 30 the pair, he serves for all practical purposes. If he is up in this mechanism, he fashions the marriage. But if he be wanting in this, no amount of Mantras (Vedic or Puráṇic) will do him any good.

In the Berars, one Tośi (astrologer) often acts as the director of marriage ceremonies for a whole village. He sits on a terrace with his *Ghaṭiká*¹ vessel set agoing for a particular propitious hour, which he notifies previously to the whole village. All the marriage parties are supposed to be ready for the appointed time, and this is announced from the central station taken up by the astrologer, by the clapping of hands or by other appointed signals to the community. Beyond this procedure 40 of the priest, who, I understand, often says a *Mangaláshṭaka*² or two on the same spot, no strictly religious ceremony is performed according to the books. But the marriages are otherwise duly solemnized by the people according to their customs and usages, and will, I have no doubt, continue to be so hereafter in the same manner.

Amongst a large class of Kūṇabis called the Leva and Kudra Kūṇabis of Gujarāth,¹ the marriage season occurs at an interval of twelve years; and female children even in the cradle must be married then, or remain single for another period of twelve years, which latter circumstance is considered derogatory to family dignity. This season itself extends over one day, or at the most a few days, and these days are believed to be dictated by the Mātāji or the tutelary goddess of the class. This is done by sticking some rice, wheat, or flowers, after steeping them in water, at the foot of the shrine, and asking the image to allow one on the right or the left to fall. As some grains or flowers must fall, the number of allowable days are said to be thereby indicated. The result of such customs often is what may be imagined. My purpose here is not to describe the social and moral consequences of these proceedings; but to show that marriages, celebrated in a mode so utterly opposed to all received works of authority, are still common and accepted as binding on the community. For they are sanctioned by custom, and are perfectly legal.

I must add here what I should ordinarily have reserved for another place; for the picture will be otherwise incomplete. As a matter of course, many cases of widowhood occur in such a community, and although remarriage is an accepted customary institution amongst the Śūdras, the caste usage of these tribes is so peculiar, that a girl so circumstanced must repair, as it were, by stealth to the house of her future husband, and be married by nature without any ceremonial whatsoever. Similar instances occur in other parts of India: the Dhokā and Dāng marriages of Kuch-Behar² are nearly like the present. Such is the customary law of this large, important, and influential community in Gujarāth.³

¹ The Bombay Gazetteer, by J. M. Campbell, C.S., vol. IV p. 36. (1879) gives their numbers at 123,697. My friend Rāo Bahadur Becharidas Ambédkar, C.S.I., belongs to this caste, and he has given me this account in person. The worthy Sett, who has done so much for the Ahmadabad community, wishes to try his best to reform these customs, but hitherto his efforts have failed. The only example I can find in this volume of a marriage resisted by the caste is noted at page 107; and it is a marriage with a widow. See also Bombay Government Selections, No. CXLVII, New Series, 1875, chiefly pp. 13-40.

² Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal, vol. X. p. 377.

³ "The most respectable part of the population [of Broach]," says Mr. Campbell, "and the principal cultivators of the highly tilled and fertile district of Broach are the Kūṇabis." They used formerly to seek alliances in Kaira, but owing to heavy expenses, they have now resolved "to intermarry among themselves." (Bombay Gazetteer vol. II. 1877, p. 373.) See a similar custom in the Panch Mahals, and the origin of it (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. III., p. 225).

I draw particular attention to this example. For it must be noted that this caste is one of the richest in Gujaráth. It consists of landlords, hereditary district and village officers, bankers, merchants, farmers, and artisans. One of its members, Ráo Bahadur Bechardas Ambáidass, C.S.I., who was lately one of my worthy colleagues when I was in the Council of His Excellency the Governor of Bombay for making laws—is a gentleman noted for his philanthropic deeds. He has done his best to bring about a reform, and the Government themselves have acknowledged his services. But so deep-seated is the power of custom, that it 10 has defied all the Rishis and Vedas, and will do so, until the moral and religious growth of that class of the community begins from within. I cite this instance to show that it is not to insignificance in rank or wealth, that the existence of these customs is due; but that they arise independently, and follow their own laws.

With a view to bringing within a short compass some of the curious marriage customs in different parts of India, I have thrown them into a short summary at the end of this Section. Where there is no published authority, I have indicated my source of information. Where such is not given, the statements rest on my own enquiries. The summary 20 gives a variety of cases; but it can be lengthened by further enquiry and researches. The customary ceremonial is as diversified as the countries and peoples in India. In outlying districts like Sindh and such other places, there is often not even the semblance of a priest. Amongst other tribes the priest serves a barely secular purpose. In others—notably amongst a sect of Kolis along the coast—it was customary at one time to strip the priest naked, so as to excite laughter; and a marriage was not reckoned quite auspicious if the victim of popular ridicule eluded the grasp. Again, where as amongst the Mánbháus, the mere tying together of the wallets of the man and woman constitute 30 marriage, the element of text laws entering into the transaction is nil: custom rules everything.

I now pass on to the supersession of the traditionary old law in specific instances. According to the Smṛiti law, a man may marry as many wives at any one time as he pleases.¹ Usage still sanctions such connections. Manu contemplates polygamy as an exception.² Usage however has converted this exception into an ordinary practice, which however has not entered into some castes. Thus in the Vāḍana-gara Nágar caste, I understand a man cannot marry a second wife if his first be living. If he does, social excommunication follows, and so far 40 as his caste is concerned, he is civilly dead.

² Manu, ch. ix. vv. 77—83.

By another caste usage it appears that in the case of a husband taking to himself another wife, his first wife can obtain a divorce from him, which, according to the text-writers, can never be done. I give below the report of a very curious case in the Gándharva caste in Gujarath on this question from 2 Borradaile's Reports pp. 524-528.¹

Muhashunkur Khooshal Appellant, versus

Ahmadabad
Udant.
Dr. Greenhall,
Registrar.
Gundhuhron
caste.

His wife Mt Ottum, and others Respondent

Claim by a wife for a divorce from her husband or repudiation of his second wife.
Divorce granted.

The action was laid on the 15th June 1922 in the Ahmadabad Court by Respondent Ottum, daughter of Girdhar, and her guardians being her mother Narbhee and Dikshanka her father's brother, suing her husband, Appellant, in damages Rs. 200, to obtain divorce from him. It was stated in the plaint that after the marriage had been celebrated, Appellant contracted Natra 1, about seven months ago with another woman, and brought her into his house. He complained on the criminal side against Respondent for not entering his house, and on the trial Respondent was ordered to cohabit with Appellant. It was to obtain relief from this order, that she now sued, praying the Court either to grant a divorce if Appellant persisted in adhering to his second marriage, or to oblige him to repudiate the second wife, since it was a positive rule in their caste (the Gundhuhron or musicians and singers that no man should marry a second wife during the life of his first unless she were barren, or blind, or had other material defect, and that he must repudiate one or the other, since bigamy was not permitted in their caste Respondent said that Appellant was also under excommunication by the caste for this offence, but if he chose to take home her, his lawful wife, and to repudiate the other, and could get re-admitted to caste, she would enter his house, but not otherwise.

Appellant did not deny the fact of having married a second wife, but pleaded that the investigation on the criminal side was decided on the Vyavastha of the Shastree, and was a bar to the present action. The order passed on that occasion was that he should allow Respondent, his lawful wife, to reside in his house, and keep the second wife in a separate lodging. He was ready to obey this injunction, but pleaded that he could not be obliged to repudiate the second wife, as Natra was permitted in their caste.

Respondent replied that the custom of country and of caste was paramount at all times to the Shashtra, and the Court would find that the custom was in her favour.

Appellant rejoined that he could produce examples of second marriages in this caste, and that Respondent's only claim lay against him for maintenance in case he neglected to give it. His claim against the caste was foreign to the subject at issue, and ought not to have been introduced by Respondent in her pleadings.

The Court asked the Hindu Law Officers, if any person should without good and sufficient cause take a second wife for his own pleasure, whether he could keep both the first and second wife in his house or not.

The Shastrees said: In the First Book of the Yājñavalkya Smṛitee (the Mitāksharā) in the first line of the second page of the 9th leaf, on the reasons for a man's second marriage, are these words: "When a wife is either drunken, long diseased, mischievous, barren, expensive, abusive or bears only daughters, let her be superseded by another; also if she be inimical to her husband. (The commentary declares the word "drunken" to apply "even to the wife of a Shoodr, for the half of his body, whose wife drinks, becomes impure, wherefore to all alike it is forbidden"; the phrase "let her be superseded by another" to signify the taking of another wife.) Eight reasons for marrying a second wife are laid down, but where not even one of these reasons exists, the taking of a second wife, by the laws of the Shastra, is not proper. Again, should it be done, it appears from the Shastra, in the same line, that even then the first wife must be maintained, for on failure of that, to him will be a great sin. So that even if he take a second wife, the wife who first received his hand must be made glad continually with presents, honor and proper acts, &c. and be taken care of; should he fail to do it, a great sin is denounced against him the husband and against the prince. (2) In the present case this person having one wife alive, and without any of the eight above-mentioned reasons existing for a second wife having taken another wife, has acted improperly, but since he has made a second marriage, let him constantly please his first wife in the manner laid down in the Shastra.

I quote the entire report, as it throws considerable light on caste privileges.

Respondent urged that the Shastra did not apply to their caste, who would all declare the rules to be against having two wives.

The Court determined to summon the whole caste, of which there were only twenty-four more members. Three of these were under expulsion; the fourth was not in a fit state to appear in Court. Of the remaining twenty, nineteen declared on oath, that if there were cause, a man might keep two wives, but not so if no reason existed for doing it. If both the wives agreed, he might keep them both, if not, the husband must grant a divorce (Farigh khat) to the dissentient one. Natra was practised in their caste.

The twentieth and last deposed that the custom of the caste permitted a man to have two wives; if either of them did not agree to live with the other, still the husband might keep them both, unless he chose of his own accord to let one separate, but he might not grant her a divorce (Farigh khat). Appellant was the son of this witness's maternal first cousin.

The Court, on the general expression of the caste, decided that Respondent was entitled to a divorce unless Appellant should comply with the terms required by the caste, and he, being called on by the Court to state what steps he would pursue, replied that he would not grant a divorce to either.

The Court therefore declared a divorce between the parties husband and wife, and gave Respondent full power to act in every respect the same as if no contract had been made with the Appellant, who was to pay costs of suit.

When the suit came on for hearing Appeal, it appeared that Appellant was now willing to put away his second wife, but as the caste had taken up the matter, and expelled the Appellant for his conduct in the business, it became necessary to allow him time to satisfy the caste, by proceeding to the formal repudiation of his second wife, and recovery of his privileges of caste. For it was understood that this his first wife, Respondent, in that case would waive any right to a divorce under the decree, and would consent to the re-establishment of conjugal rights and duties between them. The case was therefore laid over for a month. At the expiration of the time, Appellant's Vakil informed the Court that his client had a Farigh khat to his second wife, but had not been able to obtain re-admission to caste, as many of the members were absent from Ahmadabad. Respondent's Vakil represented that no intimation of the Farigh khat had been received by Respondent, and that there was a sufficient number of members of the caste present at Ahmadabad to absolve Appellant from his excommunication if he had sincerely wished to settle the dispute, wherefore he payed the Court for judgment.

The sitting Judge held that further time ought not to be granted, since Respondent was averse to it, and on the grounds shown in the proceedings by which the usage of divorce in the caste of the parties had been proved, the judgment of the Register was affirmed against Appellant.

I now proceed to note in what manner the text-law has been broken through. I must at once state here that my statements are not exhaustive, but rather indicative of what has taken place, and of what is going on. Marriage amongst the Āryas, whether it takes place according to one of the eight traditional forms, or according to mere popular usage, is a customary religious ceremony. When once celebrated, it cannot be dissolved, even if it has been irregularly performed. In cases where the Saptapadi and virāhahoma are completed, it is an unalterable transaction.¹ It may be that the caste may have voted against performing it, because in their view the girl should have been bestowed on another. The mother may have done it in defiance of the father; but if it has been duly solemnized, it can never be set aside. This is a caste question, and since the passing of Bombay Reg. II. of 1827 ch. I. sec. 21 clause 1st, it cannot directly form the subject of a civil action. Even when marriage questions did once come into Courts, our tribunals as a rule consulted each caste, and regulated their decisions according to their received usages.²

I now propose to describe the restrictions imposed on Ārya marriages and their removal.

² This is very amply illustrated by the case of Krishnee in Borrolah's Reports, vol. 2, pp. 138-40, of which I give a short abstract. This was a suit for enforcing celebration of a marriage agreed upon between Respondent and Appellant Krishnee, which the other appellants, uncles of Krishnee, wished to set aside. The matter was referred by the Zillah Judge to the caste, and the majority being in favour of celebrating marriage, a decree was given in respondent's favour, and affirmed by the courts of Appeal and the Sadr Adalat.

But all these decrees availed nothing. The girl Krishnee persisted in her refusal, and her uncle preferred to pay the penalty entered into in the Zilla Court. The rest is thus reported :—"The Sadr Adalat consulted its Law Officer, under date 19th May, how a mungnee pronounced valid by the majority of a caste, and confirmed by the Courts of Justice, but to which the woman to be betrothed refused to conform, by denying consummation to the husband, and attempting to marry with another, is to be enforced? He replied, "a mungnee pronounced valid by the caste cannot be set aside, and the woman on refusal to celebrate the marriage should be compelled by the caste in whatever manner they think proper to consummate it, and orders should be given to the caste for the purpose. For Bruhaspatee ordains that the sovereign shall cause all religious rites to be observed as they have been of old, respecting country, caste, and people." (1) Before the Vyaousha was given, even the marriage of Krishnee with Motee Jutah was clandestinely celebrated by appellants on the 29th April, and the caste having been examined, declared this last marriage legal, so the Sadr Adalat left respondent to seek redress if he chose, letting him find out the proper course for himself; he had already received the damages sued for, Rs. 1,183 and all costs, and the amount of the penalty bonds Rs. 2,000, was carried as a fine to account of Government."

See further in regard to caste-questions Narotam Bhagwan v. Mithalal Kāhāndis and 42 others, Printed Judgments of Bom. H. C. for 1878, page 235.

The Vedas are apparently silent as regards the restrictions now imposed. Āśvalāyana recommends the Kula (family) of the girl to be examined on the father's and mother's side, in order to see (so says the commentator), that they have not committed any of the Mahāpātakas (great sins), and have not had any taint of apasmāra (epilepsy), &c. Further, the girl should be qualified by her talents, beauty, and disposition, and be free from disease.¹ In the Gṛhya Parīśiṣṭa,² the field of selection is more restricted. The sapinda and sagotraja are not to be married, so also one of a Viruddha-sambandhā (of contrary connection). The whole however is governed by a passage in the text directing the observance of the usages of the peoples and villages in marriages.³

Other Smṛiti texts as given below seem to bear on this subject. Manu⁴ omits the pravara altogether, nor does Kullūka incorporate it in

⁴ Manu III., 4 and 5:—

20 गुरुणामृतः स्नात्वा समावृत्तो यथाविधि ।
उद्वेहत द्विजो भार्यां सवर्णां लक्ष्म्यान्विताम् ॥
असपिण्डा च या मातुरसगोत्रा च या पित्रुः ।
सा प्रहस्ता द्विजातीनां दारकर्मणि नैयुते ॥

Sir William Jones's translation (Grady's edition p. 40) runs thus:—

4. Let the twice-born having obtained the consent of his venerable guide, and having performed his ablution with stated ceremonies, on his return home, as the law directs espouse a wife of the same class with himself and endowed with the marks of excellence.

5. She who is not descended from his paternal or maternal ancestors within the sixth degree, and who is not known by her family name to be of the same primitive stock with his father or mother, is eligible by a twice-born man for nuptials and holy union.

30 N. B.—This description of the sapinda relationship does not accord with that of Yājñavalkya, in respect of the mother's side, where it extends only to the fourth degree instead of the sixth, see above Yāj. ch. i. v. 52, (p. 168 l. 2).

The words 'within the sixth degree,' although not italicized, appear to have been incorporated into the translation from the gloss of Kullūka. But it seems to me that Kullūka is not quite accurate here; for he mentions the seven degrees of relationship from a verse from Manu ch. v., v. 60, which refers to impurity on account of death, and his comment thereon shows that on that account he had in his mind the sapindas on the father's side through males only (see Manu I. 86 p. 1).

40 It has also to be noted that the restriction of the gotra of the maternal grandfather, mentioned in the above translation, is now confined to the followers of the Mādhyan-dinī Śākhā. See the Dharmasindhu parī. iii. 1st part l. 57 p. 1 lines 3, 4; ब्राह्मवि-होदापुत्राणां तु सर्वेषां मातामहगोत्रं न वज्येत् । किन्तु माध्यन्दिनीयानामेव । मातृगोत्रं माध्यन्दिनीयानामि-ति सत्यावावचनम् । तथैव सर्वत्र सिद्धाचारात् । Translation:—"In the case of bridegrooms, born of [mothers], married according to the Brāhma rite, it is not all that have to avoid the gotra of their maternal grandfather, but only such as are followers of the Mādhyan-dinī Śākhā: for Satyāśāśva says: 'the gotra of the mother [is to be ob-

See to the same effect the Samakarakāustubha l. 196, p. 1, ll. 2—4, and the Gopīnātha Bhaṭṭi. The Nirṇayasindhu (part. iii., 1st part, l. 30, p. 2), which thinks the restriction applies to all, is refuted by the Samakara-kaustubha.

N.B.—I have translated above the words pitribandhūbhyah and mātṛibandhūbhyah into 'on the father's side' and 'on the mother's side' in accordance with the comment of Hāradatta. In such circumstances it becomes imperative to enquire into the circumstances of the people, before any text or texts are applied for the government of their most important family relations. Have all the twice-born classes Gotras and Pravaras; or are we trying to square Áryan society in India into the circle of certain texts, and fit it to them according to certain preconceived notions? We have four great classes. Have they all got Gotras and Pravaras? The first are Bráhmaṇas. Many of them have no Gotra, or if they once had, it is not now known. If the Gotra is not known, the pravara cannot be known; for the one essentially depends on the other.¹

I know the existence of Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas has been questioned. But that there are both classes still existing is, I think, proved by cotemporary history and current statistics.²

At the same time, it is no secret that they have neither gotra nor pravara. This is on the authority both of old texts, as well as of current history.³ Indeed thousands of Bráhmaṇas themselves in different parts of the country can be said to be any hardly better. Hence they are told to borrow a gotra from the Āchārya or the Purohita for the occasion. On this point I must quote the following from Kamalākara⁴ :—

known, Jamadagni should be resorted to [i. e. his gotra should be accepted].”

This shows to what lengths Hindu society had gone in Kamalākara's time. Since then the confusion and ignorance has become greater still. What is the criterion for settling the validity of these marriages, nay and of Brāhmaṇa marriages too? The Purohita is the officiating priest, and the Āchārya is one who teaches one Veda (Manu, chap. ii. v. 140). Both these are necessarily changing elements; and even if they were constant, it would be ridiculous to determine the marriage relationship of the parties, from the gotras and *pravara*s of 10 entirely distinct persons. For even if the parties continue in one place, the priests may change, but if they move to different places, the priests must be necessarily different. Besides such cases—(and they are thousands and lakhs)—are provided by no texts at all. A marriage between persons so circumstanced is a good marriage when accepted as such by the people according to their own usages.

Applying these remarks to particular classes of cases, I would refer to the Sapinda Section,¹ where the later writers have themselves recorded how far in their times usages had upset the Sapinda provisions of the Smṛitis. The following passage from the Samskāraustubha 20 shows that it is allowable to contract the Sapindaship if usage sanctions such a step. Thus :—

“अतः सिद्धमेतत् कलत्रपि येषां कुले देशेनृकन्यत्वेन सापिण्ड्यसङ्कोचः परम्परया समागतः तेषां तादृशसङ्कोचेन विवाहे न दोषः। अस्ति च भार्यानीत्यतिः। अन्येषां नःसह व्यवहारे निर दोषः। सर्वं नृसकुलदेशविद्युत्सापिण्ड्यसङ्कोचेन विवाहे भवत्येव दोषः न च भार्यानीत्यतिः। दृश्यन्ते हि सर्वे सापिण्ड्यसङ्कोचेन विवाहमकुर्वन्तोऽपि तादृशसङ्कोचेनासकुञ्जातविवाहेभ्यः कन्याः स्वीकुर्वन्तस्तत्पुलीनान् आक्रादौ भोजयन्तश्च बहवः शिष्टाः। अतएव मातुलकन्योद्वाहिनां हेमाद्रादौ आक्रान्तिष्वपि सकुलदेशे परम्परया नागतसापिण्ड्यसङ्कोचकृतविवाहविषय एवेति बोध्यम्”।—(The Samskāraustubha l. 175 p. 2 lines 2—8.)

Translation :—“Thus it is established that even in the Kali age, marriage within the prohibited degrees is not sinful, if it takes place in families or countries where the alternative of the narrowing of the sapinda relationship has prevailed through several generations, and if it is in accordance with such usage. The state of the wife is also superinduced [on the bride so married]. There can be no sin in others associating [with such a family]. There will of course be a sin in a marriage within prohibited degrees where such marriage is opposed to [the usage of] the family or the country; nor will the state of the wife be superinduced [on the bride so married]. Several bīshṭas (learned men), who themselves do not marry within the prohibited degrees, are 40 seen accepting [into their family] brides from those who have more than once contracted such marriages, and feeding the descendants of such a family on an occasion like that of Srāddha (an offering to the manes). Therefore, the prohibition [laid down] in Hemādri and the rest in regard to [the entertainment of] those who marry the daughters of their maternal uncles, at a śrāddha (an offering to the manes) should be understood as applying to those who marry within the prohibited degrees without such usage having prevailed in their family or their country through several generations.”

The entire passage from the Kaustubha is given elsewhere.

- 10 In cases where the *Pravaras*¹ of both parties are the same, marriage is said to be improper. Very few do this knowingly. But if it be done, marriage cannot be dissolved. Some hold that a girl so married should be maintained like a mother. But there are hundreds of families notorious for such connections. They were once accounted inferior in social position, and even now some sticklers will not contract alliances with such families. But the majority do so, and even those who will not contract matrimonial alliances with them, treat them in all respects as well qualified members of their communities. The question of a proper or an improper marriage is therefore always one of usage, to 20 be determined according to the people's āchāra (practice), and not by mere texts of greater or less antiquity.*

Other instances of the supersession of text law by new usages are not wanting. The *Samskāra*kaustubha (l. 196 p. 1 lines 9 and 10) cites a text of Nārada² to show that a pratyudvāha (the marriage of a brother and sister in one family with a sister and brother in another respectively)

² See the texts quoted by *Nirpaya*sindhu part. iii. 1st half, leaf 30, page 1.

- 30 The Chaturvimsatimata says :—यस्तु देशात् कुलमार्गेण चोद्धेत । नित्यं स व्यवहार्यः स्वा- इदमेतत्प्रवृत्तये ॥—Translation :—‘He who marries in accordance with the usage of his country or his family may always be associated with, [for] this [rule] is supported by the Vedas.’ The Chaturvimsatimata again :—यस्मिन्देशे य आचारः पारंपरिकमागतः । वर्णानां किल सर्वेषां स सदाचार उच्यते. Translation :—Where a usage has prevailed through [several] generations in a [particular] class in a [particular country], that [usage] is named Sādāchāra (practice of the learned).

Bṛigu says :—यस्मिन्देशे पुरे ग्रामे वैदिके नगरेपि वा । या यवविहितो धर्मस्तं धर्मं न विचालयेत् ॥
Translation :—‘That usage which prevails in a country, a city, a village, a community of trividyas (people learned in three Vedās) or a town, should not be disturbed.’

- 40 * The text runs thus :—

प्रत्युद्वाहो नैव कार्यो नैकस्मिन्पुत्रितृयम् ।
न चैकजन्ययोः पुत्रोरैकजन्ये तु कन्यके ॥

Translation :—Pratyudvāha (exchange in marriage) should never be done; two daughters [should not be given] to one [individual]; so also should two daughters of one man not be given in marriage to two sons of another.

is prohibited. But custom has now decreed otherwise; and it is a common occurrence in these days in our society, even in the highest class, and is known in Maráthi by the name of Badalárana (exchange). It will be seen that the above text is thus clearly superseded by custom.

As regards the marriage of one person with two sisters, the text is in some districts respected by usage only to this extent, that their marriage as coterminous wives is held improper. But on the death of one wife, her sister is married without the least objection being raised as to the propriety of such an alliance. Probably it was on seeing the force of this growing custom that Nárāyaṇabhaṭṭa, the author of the 10 Muhūrta Mārtaṇḍa, had in Śake year 1493 to record in v. 51¹ of his chapter on marriage (l. 39 p. 1), that such marriages were permissible under exceptional circumstances. In some provinces, however, such marriages freely take place; two and even three sisters marrying one individual.

Again, referring to the second hemistich of the above verse, I may say that the marriage of two sisters to two brothers is sanctioned by custom. Instances of such marriage in the highest families will be found in Bombay and other centres of the population.

As regards Viruddha sambandha (contrary alliances), they are 20 permitted as a matter of course. Thus, two sisters are given in marriage to a nephew and his maternal uncle: on the other hand, a girl and her mother's sister are married to two brothers.

The question of the marriage of a man with the daughter of his mother's brother was once considered debatable by some writers. Usage has however sanctioned such marriages amongst the Dekkani Brāhmanas of various denominations. Thus, amongst various sections of the Deśastha Brāhmanas and amongst the Kahrādas such connections are very frequent; and it is said that if a man can get such a bride, he will often have no other. On this point I give the opinions of 30 different modern writers, which will also furnish useful information on the customary law generally.

The Dharmasindhu (part. iii., 1st half l. 50 pp. 1 and 2), approving of Anantadeva's view on this subject, summarizes it thus:—

कोस्तुमे तु ॥ उद्देशेऽप्राप्त्याहर्षं तदभावे तु सप्तमीम् । पञ्चमीं तदभावे तु पितृपक्षेऽप्यर्थं विधिः ॥

Translation :—As for the [Samskāra] Kaustubha it says :—‘ Since in works like the Chaturvimsātimata and the Shaṭṭrimśānmata, there are seen texts like the following :—(‘ One should marry a [bride] beyond the seventh [degree] ; failing her, one of the seventh degree ; failing her, one of the fifth degree. This rule holds even on the paternal side ;’ ‘ Śākatāyana says there is no sin in marrying a bride of the seventh, the sixth, or the fifth [degree]’ ; ‘ even [a female of] the fourth or the third [degree] on either side may be married according to Manu, Pārāśarya, Yama, and Āṅgiras’ ; ‘ he who has married in accord-20 ance with the usage of his country or family, may ever be associated with, as appears from the Veda’); and since marriages by the contraction of Sapinda relationship are seen in several countries, [it follows] that a marriage by contraction of the Sapinda relationship is not sinful for those in whose country or family such contraction of Sapinda relationship as an allowable alternative has prevailed through generations ; but that it is sinful for those who perform such marriages by contraction of the sapinda relationship against the usage of the country or the family. For, in respect of marriage, such Sāstra (text law) alone has to be followed as is not repugnant to the usages of one’s country or family, in 30 accordance with texts like the following :—‘ The usages of the country should be observed in marriage ;’ ‘ one should follow that path as the path of the good, whereby one’s forefathers and grandfathers have gone ; [for] in going by that path, he will be committing no sin.’ Accordingly, in the case of a marriage with the daughter of one’s maternal uncle, such marriage may be done by those in whose family the espousal of a maternal uncle’s daughter has descended through generations ; for Smṛitis like the following, (viz., ‘ one marrying the daughter of his maternal uncle, or a daughter either of the same gotra as the mother [or rather the mother’s father], or having the same pravara [as the 40 bridegroom] should abandon her, and observe the chāndrāyana penance,’ are overruled by such indications from the Vedas as the following :— ‘ [They] offered thee as thy portion the vāpā properly dressed ; as [they do] the daughter of the maternal uncle or the daughter of the father's sister.' That text too in reference to prohibitions in the kali age, which forbids the marriage with the daughter of a maternal uncle, viz., 'marriage with one of the maternal gotra, or with a sapinda, and the slaughter of a cow [are prohibited],' applies [only] to those in whose family or country, marriage with the daughter of a maternal uncle is not performed; since such marriage is deducible from various Śruti and Smṛiti [texts]. Therefore the prohibition about inviting at a brāddha those who have performed marriages with the daughters of their maternal uncles applies to those who have so married in opposition to their family usage; it being usual for the learned to invite at a brāddha feast 10 men who have married according to the said contraction of sapinda relationship. Much has been said in this way.

Mādhava in the following passage distinctly sanctions such marriages, both on texts and customs in the Dekkan and other Southern countries:—

Translation :—In this way the dispute in regard to one's marriage with the daughter of his maternal uncle is also set at rest ; for those 20 texts that prohibit it refer to [brides] born in Gāndhārva or a similar [form of] marriage, owing to the absence of the termination of the sapinda relationship in such marriages ; while the Śruti and Smṛiti texts and the usage of the learned which support it apply to [brides] born in Brāhma or the like form of marriage, owing to sapinda relationship ceasing in such cases. The prohibitory texts are [as follows] :—
Śātātapa [says] :—‘ having married a daughter of the maternal uncle, or [a bride] of the mother's gotra or of the same pravara, a twice-born shall perform the chāndrāyana [penance].’ Paithinasi too [says] :—
‘ The daughters of the father's or the mother's sister, and the 30 daughter of the maternal uncle [are] properly sisters ; it is understood that they should be avoided [in marriage].’ Sumantu also :—‘ All fathers' wives [are] mothers, their brothers maternal uncles, their daughters sisters, and the issue of such daughters [are] sister's children. Otherwise there will be [a prohibited] intermixture [of races].’ Vyāsa :—‘ Sapinda relations of the mother should be carefully avoided by the twice-born [in marriage].’ Now [if it be asked] how these texts, which contain no limitation, can be restricted in application, we answer ‘ in virtue of several texts [indicating the necessity of such restriction].’ Thus Manu (ch. xi. vv. 171, 172)— 40 ‘ Having married the daughter of the father's sister, the daughter of the mother's sister, and [the daughter] of the mother's brother who is *āpta*¹ (a sapinda relation), who are all sisters, [a man] should observe

¹ Kullūka's reading of this word is तनया instead of Mādhava's आतस्य (see Manu I. 204, p. 1).

the chândrâyaṇa [penance]. A wise man should not marry these three females.' The term Bhagini (sister) qualifies the patrishrasyi (daughter of the father's sister) and the rest. [The term] âptasya (of a sapinda relation) qualifies the matur-bhrātuh (of the mother's brother). Here the term sulām (daughter) is understood. âptasya means of the nearest sapinda relation; [so that the maternal uncle here meant] is the brother of the mother, who has been married according to the Gândharva or a similar [form of marriage]. Even in the case of the daughter of the father's sister, that father's sister, who being married according to Gândharva or a like [form of marriage] 10 has her sapinda relationship [with her father's family] uninterrupted, is here meant: for in such a case [alone the term] Bhagini (sister) could be properly applied. In the case of Brâhma and a like [form of marriage] the word Bhagini (sister) could not be used, as there the sapinda relationship [with the family of birth] ceases. This same explanation applies in the case of the daughter of the mother's sister. Therefore a prohibition which [apparently] was without a limitation, is restricted to a particular sphere, in virtue of the [said] text of Manu, containing the words Bhagini and âpta. It may be said that in the case of a marriage according to the Gân- 20 dharva or a like [form], the daughter of the mother's sister would be eligible for marriage just as the daughter of the mother's brother [is held to be]. [But] that [can] not [be]; for the condemnation [of such a marriage] by the learned will lead to the inference [of the existence] of a [special] prohibitory text [to that effect]. Yājñavalkya thus lays down the rejection of what is condemned by the learned:— '[One] should not practise that which, though ordained, is rejected by the people, and can [therefore] not lead to heaven? Although marriage with the daughter of a mother's brother is condemned by the learned men of the north; yet it is accepted by the learned men 30 of the south. So such [a marriage] will be a reprobated practice on the part of the northerners, but not so on the part of the southerners. [Such marriages] in the case of the southerners cannot be imputed to wantonness; for they are [often] made by people versed in positive and negative [ordinances]. The marriage with a daughter of the mother's sister is, on the other hand, condemned by the unrebated practice of the learned. Śruti texts and the like supporting the marriage with the daughter of a mother's brother are [as follows]:—Of them the Śruti text [runs thus]:—' Oh Indra, come to this sacrifice of ours by famed routes; and accept thy portion of the dressed omentum which [the 40 sacrificers] have dedicated [to thee] as the daughter of a mother's brother [and] as thy daughter of a father's sister.' The meaning is:—Oh Indra, do come to our sacrifice by famed routes; and having come, do accept the portion offered by us [sacrificers] who have renounced in

- your favour an omentum well dressed by clarified butter and the like. There are two similes [here adduced, thus :—] Just as the daughter of the mother's brother is the portion of the daughter's son,¹ that is to say, is marriageable by him, and as the daughter of a father's sister is the portion of the son's son,¹ that is to say, is marriageable by him; so is this bearing the name of vapá (omentum) your portion. So also in the *Vájasaneyaka*² :—' From the same man are born both the enjoyer (male) and the enjoyed (female). ' They say to each other :—' counting from the common ancestor, we shall unite either in the third or in the fourth
- 10 [degree]. ' The meaning is—[Here Mádhava's commentary is not translated because it contains nothing more than what appears in the translation of the text just given]. Although this proposition is [apparently] an *arthaváda*³ (a corroborative sentence), yet it is by itself obligatory as not being repugnant to any kind of proof, the prohibitory texts having been stated to refer to [the case of a bride] who is a sapiṇḍa relation of the mother. Therefore it is possible here to infer a specific commandment based on an arthaváda, which is contradicted by nothing, as is done in the case of the placing above [of the oblation on a Samidh]. In [the ritual about] the cremation of a deceased, it is stated
- 20 [in a Vedic text] :—' Holding a samidh (a small stick) below, [the performer of the obsequies] should move forwards, with an [article of] sacrifice to deities supported on [the said stick]. ' Here the holding of the stick below the offering to the manes after [recitation of] holy texts, being [first] enjoined, the holding the offering on the stick for [dedication to] deities is referred to in the latter part of the sentence. Now the question is, whether this last statement is an arthaváda or an ordinance [by itself]. The objector's proposition is that it should be taken as an arthaváda, commending the ordinance of the holding below [of the stick], so as to treat the whole as one sentence. [But] commendation is
- 30 properly made by something which [itself] is well-known; and the holding above [of the offering] is not so well-known anywhere. So it being impossible [to take the statement] as commendatory, the splitting up of the sentence should be accepted, and it should be construed as laying down an independent ordinance. Similarly in [the sentence] ' we shall unite in the third degree, ' a statement being made of something not mentioned before, an ordinance [permitting] the marriage with the daughter of the maternal uncle may be inferred [therefrom]. Thus this [kind of] marriage is favored by the Śrutis. As sapiṇḍa relationship ceases in the Bráhma and the like [forms of] marriages, 40 ¹ This is said in reference to the common ancestor of the bride and the bridegroom.

² The Sátápata Bráhmaṇa in the chapter on Darsarádāha.

³ The definition of arthaváda given by Bhaṭṭojí Dīkshita in his commentary on Páṇini II. 1, 33—स्तुतिविन्द्याकलनं अर्थवादवचनं अधिकार्यवचनं (an arthaváda sentence contains [either] a commendation [or] censure as an additional predication), the [existence of] Smritis too may be inferred from the [aforesaid] Śruti text favoring the marriage with the daughter of a maternal uncle, and the practice of the learned of the south should be styled as unrepudiated. Some think that even in the Asura and the like [forms of marriage], the marriage with the daughter of a maternal uncle may be lawful, and cite texts [in support thereof]. Thus Baudhāyana [says]:—‘There is a dispute on five points. In the south the partaking of food with a boy who has not had his upanayana performed, or with one’s wife, and the eating of stale food, and the marriage with the daughter of the maternal uncle and the daughter of the father’s sister, 10 [are allowed]. In the north, the sale of wool, the drinking of wine, trading in [animals with] teeth on both sides, the bearing of arms, and travelling by sea [are allowed]. These done by one of another country produce sin; but not [when done] in a country [where they are allowed]. An inhabitant of the north in drinking spirits in another country, i.e. the south, commits a sin, but not [in doing so] in his country in virtue of the country [usage]; the meaning being that a usage followed in a country is binding. So Devala [says]:—‘A usage which prevails in a particular country as consistent with equity should be observed in that country alone according to the Smṛiti of Bhṛigu. That which is accepted as 20 dharma (duty or correct practice) in a [particular] country, city, village, a community of traividyās (persons learned in the three Vedas) should not be disturbed.’ It may be said that if the practice of the learned should be [held to be] binding, then marriage with one’s daughter might have to be allowed on the example of Prajāpati. It is on this account that Baudhāyana says:—‘That which has been done by gods, and that which has been done by sages, should not be done by [ordinary] men, who should follow what has been laid down by them.’ Thus from what has been said in regard to Brāhma and the like [forms of] marriage, and the difference of countries, the marriage with the 30 daughter of a maternal uncle is established from the aforesaid text itself, viz., asapindaṁ [the bride should not be a sapinda relation].

Translation:—“ In the Rîg-Veda hymn, viz., Ayâhi Indra pathibhih (oh India! come by paths, &c.) daughter of a maternal uncle and the like [females] are spoken of as portions belonging to a sister's son and the like (males), in this manner—‘They offered [to thee] as thy portion & dressed ornament, even as a daughter of a maternal uncle or a daughter of a sister of the father.’ Thus this indication too from the Vedas is favourable to a marriage with a daughter of one's maternal uncle, or a like [female] by contraction of the sapinda relationship. While com-menting on the Vârttikas relating to the question which texts are of 30 greater weight than others, the Nyâyasudhâkara says that the above Vedic hymn has greater authority than the following Smṛiti text: ‘Having married a daughter of a maternal uncle, or a female belonging to the same Gotra as his mother, or a female whose father has the same Pravaras with himself, a man should undergo a chândrâyana.’ Again, in the text, (‘men should always keep intercourse with him who marries according to customs handed down in the country, or accord- ing to ways established in his family, this being inferable from the Veda,’) the pronoun etat (this) refers to the narrowing of sapinda relationship in the manner mentioned in the first hemistich, in accord-

40 ance with the customs of one's country or family; and thus again it is inferable that the adherence to such custom is sanctioned by the Vedas. Thus Rîg-Vedins have written a hymn, viz.,—“ May you who are of this sort save us, protect us, pronounce benedictions upon us. Do not lead us far off from the path of our forefathers or those approved of by Manu. Do keep us away from circuitous ways." Here pitṛyāt signifies 'handed down from forefathers'; Mānurdāt signifies 'approved of by Manu.' For he says:—"He who follows the way which his father followed, or the way which his grandfather followed, shall attain to the path of the righteous. If he incurs censure on that account, he is not to be treated as censurable." From the aforesaid prayer to gods, viz., "carry us not away, [from the path of our forefathers]" (offered by devotees) on account of their transgression from the path as described above, it is to be inferred that adhering to the same way, alone is proper. Again, 'oh ye gods, who are destroyers of enemies, are thirty-three [in number], and are worthy of an offering from Manu, may you be praised by us.' Hence from the conjunction cha (and) in the expression Vedāt cha (and from the Vedas this is known), the Smṛiti of Manu is also to be included. Here just as [the text] 'The death of an old man by [a fall from] the precipice, fire, and fasting and the like [is prohibited]' occurs in the prohibitions for the Kali age, and yet that prohibition is accepted as applying to [a person's throwing one's-self into] waters other than the confluence of the three rivers [at Allāhabād], because of the self-drowning at the said confluence being supported by Smṛitis and Śrutis like 'those who throw their bodies,' &c.; so here, the marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle in accordance with the custom of one's country or family, being established in the aforementioned manner from Śrutis and Smṛitis, it follows that the prohibition of such marriage in the Kali age, which appears in the Brāhmaṇa text cited by Mādhava, viz., 'marriage [with a female who is] of the same gotra with or a sapinda relation of the mother, should be held to apply in the case of such a marriage where it is opposed to the custom of one's country or family. Thus Baudhāyana having commenced 'there is a dispute on five points,' and having stated that in the south the partaking of stale meals, the marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle and the like, and in the north the drinking of the wine, &c. [are allowed], says "that must be [practised] there; in another country it will be a sin. A wrong practice in a wrong place [will be sin] owing to the binding force of the customs of different countries. Gautamasays ' [all] this is wrong'; so both may be disregarded as opposed to the [practice of] the learned and the Smṛitis." Here in consideration of [that portion of] the text beginning with mithyāyat, &c. the [earlier] portion ending with the word pramāṇyat should be held not to apply to the partaking of stale meals and the drinking of spirits and the like, and should be restricted to the marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle and the like; for in the case of such a marriage which, as stated before, is supported by the Śrutis and Smṛitis

- such as 'this is inferable from the Vedas,' it is not possible to allege any opposition with Smṛitis. [On the other hand] in the cases of the partaking of stale meals and the like, there is neither Śruti nor Smṛiti indicating the doing [of such things], and therefore the text mithyāitat, &c. (this is wrong, &c.) should be held to apply to them. Thus wise men may interpret the text. Hence it is established, that where the custom of optionally narrowing the circle of sapinḍa relationship is handed down from generation to generation in a country or a family, the people of that country or that family do not incur sin, even in the
- 10 Kali age, by narrowing the sapinḍa relationship in that manner. There springs up the relation of (husband and) wife. Others do not incur sin by keeping intercourse with them. When a man marries by personally narrowing the sapinḍa relationship against the custom of his own family or country, he certainly incurs sin. Nor does the relation of wife and husband spring up (in the latter case). Surely there appear many respectable men who, though they themselves never marry by narrowing the sapinḍa relationship, marry maidens from families in which marriages by narrowing the sapinḍa relationship have more than once taken place; and who feed at śrāddha ceremonies, and the like men sprung
- 20 from such families. Hence it should be understood that the prohibition, stated in the works of Hemādri and others, to the effect that those who marry daughters of their maternal uncles should not be fed at a śrāddha ceremony, refers to those men who marry by narrowing the sapinḍa relationship in spite of a contrary custom handed down in their family or country."

The Smṛiti Chandrikā in its comment on the word asapinḍam (a bride who is not a sapinḍa relation), raises the question of the validity of a marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle, and concludes a long discussion on the subject in the following words:—तेन श्रुतिः स्मृतेरा-

- 30 चात्तुलदुहितृपैतृश्वसेयीपरिणयनमिति सर्वं निरवद्यम्. Translation:—'Thus marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle and with the daughter of one's father's sister is established in accordance with Śruti, Smṛiti and the usage of the learned. So everything is unobjectionable [i.e. explained].' The section ends thus:—इति मातुलदुहितृपरिणयनसमर्थनम् (Thus ends the proof [of the validity] of the marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle.)

- The Nirṇayasindhu recognises the existence of the custom, but considers it improper. In defiance of Kamalākara, however, the people have accepted it. In regard to this, Gopināthabhaṭṭa, in his Saṃskāra-
- 40 ratnamala, quotes Baudhāyana, Brihaspati, Devala and other authorities, and holds that such marriages are quite proper, because [सदेवनिबन्धनत्वाद् भाचारप्रासाध्यत्वात्] Translation: 'the authority of usage is binding [in reference to people of] the country where it arises.' In the countries south of the Narmadā (which is always the dividing line) such usages are binding; and if the Southerners go to the North, they take their usages along with them.

The above authorities show that contracting the sapinda restrictions has been sanctioned from the earliest times and by the highest Rishis. It rests with those who attack marriage ceremonies publicly performed in accordance with caste usages and with the sanction of the caste people, to make out that such marriages are improper. They must satisfy the respective community and caste of the parties that such marriages are wrong.

Another important usage of the country is for a man to marry his sister's daughter. All the authorities whom I have consulted agree on the point. H. E. Sir T. Madava Rao, the Divan of Baroda, bears testimony to the prevalence of this custom. He says in answer to my enquiry:—"I am certain that in the Madras Presidency among the Desastha Brahmins it is customary and legal for a man to marry his sister's daughter." Rao Bahadur Trimulrao Vyankatesh Inamdar, a retired Small Cause Court judge now residing in Dharwar, writes as follows:—

"The practice of maternal uncles marrying their nieces, i.e. sister's daughters, in the S. M. Country and Mysore, and the surrounding coun- 20 tries, is quite general, both amongst the Brāhmins and the Śūtras of all grades. When people are rich the maternal uncles take their nieces in marriage out of affection towards them. When they are poor, such marriages take place out of necessity to both parties; i.e. the maternal uncles cannot get brides without much expense, and the nieces' parents have no dowry to give to a [strange] bridegroom. If the parents of the nieces are poor and maternal uncles rich, the former insists upon the latter's taking the nieces in marriage, as the mother of the bride, i.e. the niece, cannot bear to see her brother's riches go to a [strange] bride. I know of no marriage having been set 30 aside on the ground of maternal uncles having married their nieces, although disputes have arisen between some of such parties.

"In cases like the above A has been married to B, the sister of J and C, and C has been married to D, the sister of I and A. Such marriages 40 are called ಎದುರು ಕುಟುಂಬ ಕಲ್ಯಾಣ i.e. ಸೋದರ ಸೋದರ ಜೋಡಣೆ. A and C happen, each, to have one or more sons and daughters respectively, such as E and F, and G and H. A has an unmarried brother I, and C an unmarried brother J. A gives his daughter F in marriage to J, the brother of B, and C gives his daughter H in marriage to I, the brother of D. If B or D happen to die before F or H (or any other sister they may respectively have) is married, F (or her sister, if any) is given in marriage to C; because she is the daughter of C's sister B. For the same reason H is given to A.

"But cases of the latter nature are very rare, as few families will be found so related to each other.

"It is not however to be understood that all maternal uncles are obliged to marry their nieces.

- 10 "There are so many cases throughout the country of maternal uncles having married their nieces, that it would be very laborious task to make a list of such parties. I think that about 8 per cent of the population contract such marriages."

At the time Steele's Summary was compiled, both these usages (namely, that of marrying a sister's daughter, and the daughter of the mother's brother) and others were prevalent in some of the castes consulted by him or by his assistants and correspondents.¹ In some cases his information is derived from written replies, and the observations gathered cannot therefore be exhaustive either as to the castes or as to their ceremonies. Those who examine the Summary by the light of local experience will easily find out mistakes and omissions. Indeed he himself held the work to be merely a preliminary one.²

A good deal might be said about the origin of these usages. Thus whether the Bráhmaṇas borrowed them from the Śúdras, or vice versa; or whether they arose from local peculiarities or by contact with foreigners. We have examples of similar customs in ancient Indian History from which these may have been taken. There are also widely spread local usages sanctioning such marriages all over the country.³

30 These are very interesting problems; but I have no space to go into them in this work.

I regret I am obliged to be brief. For both the time and space at my disposal are limited. Outsiders can hardly form a correct notion of how present usage has so changed the old structure that but little remains of the old texts; and this change must in each case be carefully ascertained from practice. Even in matters most dear to the Bráhmaṇas and the other twice-born classes, usage has fearfully twisted the Smṛitis. Thus in marriages, the bridegroom should, it is laid down, be free from defect of limb; he should not be patita (fallen into sin), nor klība (impotent), and he should be free from the ten doṣhas (blemishes). Usage has however made a clean sweep of this. Even the marriage of an impotent person in the higher classes is held good and binding; and the wife can get no divorce. Again, a man born deaf and dumb can get married. For this purpose the most sacred Brāhmaṇical rite—the Upanayana—is successfully tortured by usage. This rite, as is well known, is necessary to make one a dvija (twice-born), and before he can be married his Upanayana is essential, or he must become a Vrātya, and lose caste. For the purpose of the Upanayana he must be able to repeat certain mantras, and be initiated 10 in the most holy mantra, viz., the gāyatri. The prayoga-writers therefore lay down that the officiating priest is to recite the mantras near the boy; and custom has further invented the following symbolical ceremony. The mantras (sacred verses) are written in water; that is, the reed is drawn over a quantity of water describing the letters of the mantras, and that water is poured down the boy's throat, and he is transformed into a dvija (or twice-born). There are scores of such cases; and writers of prayogas (ceremonials) have composed rituals for the occasion. Thus in Gopīnātha Bhaṭṭi, the ceremonial is what I have above described. But the saṅkūlpa (determination) is altered 20 from the usual form, sanctioned by the Sūtras and Smṛiti. (see part II., vv. 14, 15, pp. 16, 62), and made to fit cases where the future student cannot study from physical incapacity.

These deaf and dumb men are afterwards married in the ordinary mode, and the same mantras are recited. The answers which the bridegroom is supposed to give¹ are in this case repeated by the priest. Beyond animal instinct, there is no other element in such a marriage, and yet according to usage, such marriages are reckoned quite proper, and sanctioned by the community, although they are opposed to the old text laws.²

In the case of females, if they are deaf and dumb, lame, blind, or otherwise defective in limb, their marriage is discouraged by old writers.³

¹ I say this advisedly, for the ceremonial is in Sanskrit, which is not generally understood by the people; and when the married are children, they are simply the objects of a show which they can hardly understand.

² I say so because in the qualifications of the bride all old-text writers say she must not be feeble or defective in limbs. (See Yājñavalkya ch. i. 52; Manu ch. iii v. 4; and Viṣṇu ch. xxiv., p. 109 Cal. ed.). Again, the marriage rite contemplates the recitation of certain texts which, as containing the pledges to be made by the bridegroom on marriage occasions, are of the essence of the rite. Again, the prayoga writers say that in the case of the dumb and the idiot, everything relating to the marriage rite is to be done by the priest, save the acceptance of the bride, which is to be done by the bridegroom. But how can an idiot be capable of accepting a bride? And yet the marriages of such idiots appear to have been contemplated by Yājñavalkya when he declares that the blameless sons of idiots are qualified for inheritance (see ch. 2 v. 141).

³ Yājñavalkya, ch. i. v. 52.

But custom now compels a father to get such a daughter accepted in marriage; although it is with difficulty that somebody is induced even to go through the ceremonial. Usage however is apparently quite content with this empty show, for such a marriage generally amounts to nothing more. The girl is thrown back on her father's family, and dies there from age or neglect.

The only department that now remains to be noticed is that of divorce. This, as I have said before, is not known to the Smṛiti writers. But usage has superseded texts in the case of all the lower 10 castes of which I have given one or two examples before. In the summary given below, I have collected a variety of other examples. I shall therefore content myself by giving two more from our immediate neighbourhood Gujarat.

The first is from the Gujaráthi Kásara caste, wherein a wife, it seems, can get a divorce from her husband on the ground of ill usage. One Kasiram sued his father-in-law, complaining that he neglected to send his wife Itcha with her dower to his house. It was alleged that ill usage had compelled her to leave her husband. A decree was passed directing her to return; and this was upheld in appeal. But 20 "on a petition from Itcha complaining of ill usage, the court of appeal called up the Patels of the caste, some of whom declared that ill usage was by the rules of the caste a valid ground, which was practised from the oldest time." This was opposed by the husband and by some Patels; but the court finding the ground to be sufficient pronounced a divorce.¹

In another Gujarath case,² one Kasee sued to get possession of his wife, who pleaded that a divorce had been made between herself and the plaintiff by the caste in consequence of the latter's drunkenness and depraved conduct. And the Court held that the divorce pronounced 30 by the caste was a valid one. It is thus clear that caste sanction according to some usages suffices for a divorce, and it is reasonable that it should be so.

Before concluding this section, a few observations on some cases decided in the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras and Bombay in regard to marriages are necessary. The first case is a Bombay case, namely, that of Karsan Gójá and Báí Rúpá, (Bombay High Court Reports; vol. II., p. 124). In this case the Reporter's head note runs as follows:—

"Held that a custom of Talapda Kolf caste, that a woman should be 40 permitted to leave the husband to whom she has been first married, and to contract a second marriage (nátrá) with another man in his life.

time and without his consent, was invalid as being entirely opposed to the spirit of the Hindu law; and that such marriage was void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband, and therefore punishable, as regards the woman, under section 494 of the Penal Code; and that the man with whom the woman so married, having had sexual intercourse with her, was guilty of adultery under section 497."

The charges against the accused were as follows:—"The prisoners Karsan Gojá, aged about twenty-two, and Báí Rupá, aged about fifteen, Hindus of the Talapda Kolí caste, and inhabitants of the Urpár Parganá in the Surat Zilla, were charged before the Court of Sessions, 10 the first (Karsan), under section 497 of the Penal Code, with adultery, in having had sexual intercourse with a person (Báí Rupá), who was, and whom he knew, or had reason to believe to be, the wife of another man (Jayarám Kesheva); second (Báí Rupá) under section 494, for having, while having a husband living, contracted a marriage which was void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband." Of these they were severally found guilty, and sentenced to suffer certain punishment.

In Karsan's case, the first marriage of Rupá was proved; so was the nátrá marriage with the accused Karsan proved. The defence was 20 that as a matter of fact there had been no intercourse during the three months after the nátrá marriage; and if there were, it would not amount to adultery as the parties had contracted nátrá. As regards the first point the trying judge held that the accused had had sexual intercourse, and on the second point he held that Rupá had not been divorced from her first husband, that she could not get such a divorce without his consent; that the Hindu law was applicable to the Kolí caste; that the caste rules, which were produced, and which showed that nátrá marriage regularly contracted should not be set aside, did not affect the point under consideration; that even if it were presumed 30 that the general Hindu law in such a case had been superseded by custom, no circumstances were proved showing under what circumstances a divorce like this could be obtained; and he therefore held the second husband to be guilty of adultery, and the woman to be guilty of bigamy. The parties appealed to the High Court on the ground that Karsan had contracted nátrá according to the rules of the caste, and was guilty of no offence. The Court referred to the Sessions Judge for enquiry as to custom, and although it was found proved, they adjudged prisoners guilty, and sentenced them to reduced terms of imprisonment.¹

Before deciding the case, the Court called for the finding of the Sessions Judge on the following questions:—

(1) Is it permitted to a woman in the Talapda Kolí caste, for any and what reasons,

In another case in 1876, the Bombay High Court appears to have gone a step further, and ruled that "Courts of law will not recognise the authority of a caste to declare a marriage void, or to give permission to a woman to remarry." This was in a Telí caste from Khandesh.¹

to leave the husband to whom she has been first married, and to contract a second marriage (nátrá, with another man in his lifetime and without his consent?

(2) Is the permission of the caste necessary as a preliminary to such second marriage (nátrá), or is such permission ever given subsequent to the contract; and if so, what is the mode in which it is given, and what is the effect which, when given, it is considered in the caste to have?

(3.) Quote any instances which may have occurred in the caste, within your own experience, in which a woman has contracted a second marriage in the lifetime of her first husband and without his consent; and mention the position which such a woman has occupied in the caste since such second marriage.

The Session Judge reported as follows:—"My finding on the first question is that it is proved by the depositions of the witnesses recorded that it is permitted to a woman in the Talapda Koli caste to leave the husband to whom she has been first married, and to contract a second marriage (nátrá) with another man in his lifetime without his consent.

20 "My finding on the second question is that the permission of the caste is not necessary as a preliminary to such a contract of second marriage (nátrá); that permission is sometimes given or withheld subsequently to the contract, i. e., on the complaint of the first husband; if she restore to him any property she may have acquired by her first marriage, she does not lose her position in the caste.

"My finding on the third issue is that the instances quoted support the view contained in the two preceding questions."

On these findings being received, their Lordships passed the following decision:—

30 "Per curiam.—Karsan Gojá has been convicted of committing adultery with Rupá, the wife of Jayarám, and Rupá has been convicted of contracting a marriage with Karsan, which is void by reason of its having taken place during the lifetime of Jayarám. The defence in the case of each prisoner is the same, namely, that a nátrá marriage has been solemnised between Karsan and Rupá, and that it is the custom of the Talapda Koli caste that a woman may without the consent of her husband leave him, and contract a valid marriage with another man. We are of opinion that such a caste custom as that set up, even if it be proved to exist, is invalid as being entirely opposed to the spirit of the Hindu law; and we hold that a marriage entered into in accordance with such a custom is void. The convictions must be held up, but as the Judge has found the custom set up by the prisoner to be proved, we reduce the punishment awarded to Karsan Gojá and Bál Rupá to three months' and one month's rigorous 40 imprisonment respectively."

¹ Indian Law Reports, I. Bombay series 347. The judgment in appeal says:—"The Court does not find it established that there is any valid custom by which a woman of the caste of the first accused can claim a right to marry again, because her husband is a leper, and without having obtained a release from him. The Court does not recognise the authority of the caste to declare a marriage void or to give permission to a woman to remarry. The wife in this case, and the appellant who performed the ceremony of remarriage, probably acted in a bona fide belief that the consent of the caste made the second marriage valid; but though that circumstance may be taken into account in mitigation of punishment, it does not constitute a defence to a charge 50 under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code, or under that section combined with Section 109 of the Code. The Court confirms the conviction; but as the Appellant has already undergone imprisonment for 25 days, it remits the remainder of his sentence."

Two issues are raised by these cases; first, what is the law applicable to the tribes and castes concerned in respect to their marriages, and secondly, what is the tribunal which is to enforce obedience to that law. On the first point I think the facts and authorities which have been above adduced, and others which will be succinctly given further on, make it clear that it is not the text law of the Śrutis or Smṛitis that applies to these castes.¹ They are Ati-Śūdras at the best. But even were they Śūdras, the result ought to be the same. For in regard to Śūdras, the Āryan authorities are very unfavourable to their reception into the Vedic circle. A Brāhmaṇa must not teach a Śūdra.¹ He is commanded not even to hold converse with him by some writers. For the touch of a Śūdra, no end of penances are prescribed. Even when the privilege of performing certain rites was conceded to Śūdras, it seems to have amounted to little more than the performance of the mere ceremonies without the recitation of texts.² And here again, a kind of distinction appears to have been drawn by which the Śūdras were divided into two classes. But if one examines narrowly, very little substantial difference is to be perceived. They are still the servile class³

N.B.—The cases noted in the foot note at page 349 which are connected with the subject are—2 Bom. H. C. Rep. 117 (2nd Ed.), 124 (1st Ed.); Reg. v. Manohar Rai 2 (5 Bom. H. C. Rep. 17 Cr. Ca.); Khemkor v. Umiasankar (10 Bom. H. C. Rep. 381); Rahi v. Govind (Ind. L. R., 1 Bom. 97).

¹ Kīrāta seems to be the old name for the people who now go by the name of Kolis. They appear to have been considered out of the pale of the four classes from their being called Dasyus (see Mann ch. x., vv. 44, 45). There is also a caste whose occupation is that of fishermen, and who are called Kolis. In that case too they would be out of the pale of Āryanism as being Antyajas, see Yama Smṛiti v. 54 (p. 565) and Āngirasa Smṛiti v. 3 (p. 554).

Again, a Teli (oilman) is described as a pratiloma offspring of a Śūdra from a Vaiśya woman (see Auśanasa Dharmasāstra vv. 22 and 23 p. 498). An oilman is placed on 81 a par with the manufacturers of wine and Antyas in the Bṛihatparāśara ch. vi. v. 240 (pp. 203 and 204, 2nd part).

² Śūdra Kamalākara (I 32 p. 2 line 6):—

एते संस्काराः सच्छूद्राणां । एवं वक्ष्यमाणमाह्निकायापि तेषां नियतं असच्छूद्राणां विवाहमाह ॥

Translation:—These rites are for sachchūdras (superior Śūdras). Similarly the daily observances which will be hereafter laid down, are for them alone. In the case of the inferior Śūdras the marriage alone [takes place].

³ In Laghu Viṣṇu Smṛiti, vv. 103 and 106:—

शूद्रस्तु द्विविधो ज्ञेयः आह्नी चैवेतरस्तथा ॥

आह्नी भोज्यस्तयोक्तौ सभोज्यो हीतरः स्मृतः ॥

Translation:—A Śūdra is known to be of two sorts:—Śrāddhi [unauthorized to perform a Śrāddha] and others; of these, food may be taken from the Śrāddhi, but not from the others. In the Auśanasa Dharmasāstra v. 50 (p. 501) runs as follows:—

शूद्रदेव तु शूद्रायां जातः शूद्र इति स्मृतः । द्विजशुश्रूषणपरः पाकयज्ञपराश्रितः ॥ सच्छूद्रं तं विजानीयाद-सच्छूद्रस्ततोऽन्यथा ॥ Translation:—One born from a Śūdra of a Śūdra woman is termed a Śūdra. If he is devoted to the service of the twice-born and the performance of the Pākayajilas is termed a Sat-Śūdra. One not such is an Asat-Śūdra.

In the Garuḍa Purāṇa, Jambudvīpa prastāna section it is said:—

पूर्वं किरालस्तस्यान्ते पश्चिमे यवनाः स्थिताः ॥ आन्ध्रा दक्षिणतो दक्ष वृक्षका अपि शोचरे ॥

standing on the borders as it were of the Ārya community, but not forming an integral portion of it. They were indeed provided for in a speculative way by the Ārya Code; but they had the ban of their class as a mark of exclusion from the regular Āryas. There were various rules laid down to mark their degradation, the principal being in the matter of intermarriages, the non-performance of Vedic sacrifices and ceremonies, and the descent of property to illegitimate members of families as of right. It is true that the division into four classes is older than Manu; for Manu notices it, and in his time the mixed 10 classes, both Saloma and Viloma, had acquired considerable importance. But still there seems to be a clear line of demarkation between the first three classes and the fourth. And this must not be lost sight of by the historian and the administrator.

In our present social scale, there are classes below the Śūdras, viz., the Bhils, Kolis, Mahárs, Mánga, &c. These are popularly called Ati-Śūdras—meaning, exceeding even the Śūdras in lowness, &c. It seems that Mahárs are probably Mahāharas (great thieves), and belong to that class of people termed the Dasyus, the enemies of the Āryas.

Some writers would place Dasyus among the Pratilomas (see Me-20 dhātithi on Manu). The Śūdra Kamalākar notices the division by some Smṛiti writers into the Śat-Śūdras, and the Asat-Śūdras, to which I have alluded before. The latter class would be the Ati-Śūdras, who are likewise termed Antyajās.¹

Rāpa Nārāyana, quoting the Bhavishya-purāṇa, thus speaks of the worship of Vindya by the different tribes of Mlechchhas and Dasyus:—"In this manner, that cruel [goddess] sacred to the *Kirātās*² is worshipped by various thievish tribes of Mlechchhas, without mantras" [Śūdra Kamalākar, Bombay Edition, leaf 10 p. 2 line 8]. This shows what mixture there has been.

30 The nonregenerate class thus seems to form a group by itself; and its internal economy is not specially provided for by the ordinary Ārya writers on law. For when we come to consider what law is in the view of the early writers, we find that the Śūdras are always avoided

Translation :— On its borders live the Kirātās in the east, the Yavanas in the west, the Andhras in the south, and the terrible Turashkars in the north.

Pryāchitta Mayākha thus quotes Apastamba :—

by the twice-born classes.¹ Mann puts the Kolis amongst the Dasyus² (thieves). Kamalākara says (see note p. 37) that there are not even ceremonies for the Asat-Sūdras; but mere marriage. The Mahābhārata in giving the law for kings prohibits the performance of the duties of the Brāhmaṇas³ by any other class, and especially by the Sūdras. Further on Vyāsa himself, as interpreted by his commentator, limits the religious acts for the Sūdras or Dasyus to making gifts to the twice-born alone.⁴ While all that is thus left to Sūdras is to make gifts to Brāhmaṇas, the Brāhmaṇas are commanded not to accept their gifts on pain of becoming Sūdras by such acceptance.⁵ 10

Such being the state of the Sūdras and the Ati-Sūdras in respect to the performance of religious ceremonies according to the old Āryan writers, I now proceed to examine into the Smṛiti-texts, if any, applicable to their marriages. In both the cases above mentioned, there are no texts cited which govern the present marriage practices of the Sūdras and of the Ati-Sūdras. And the Ārya Law (or the Hindu Law as it is now called) has, if I may with deference say, nothing to do with them. They are regulated by usages of the country and of castes and families, and these alone ought, it seems to me, to be always ascertained and followed so far as respects the first question with which I started. 20

As regards the second question, namely, the tribunal which finally decides these matters socially. So far as history goes, it appears that marriage and divorce disputes have always been decided by the caste Punchayats, or Mahajans, as the case might be.¹ Bombay Regulation II. section 21 cl. 1st, as far as it is yet unrepealed, does not permit of caste questions being litigated in courts.² The Bombay High Court have held that "it would be an interference in a caste question within the meaning of that section, if a court were to make a decree ordering the members of a caste to re-admit a member to a participation in caste communications and privileges."³

- There is happily no matrimonial court for Hindus, and according 10 to their usages and traditions it seems that, unless the Government deems it proper to invoke the aid of the legislature, it will be for the castes to decide whether their members are married or divorced according to the proper usages. According to the constitution of Hindu society, the Bráhmaṇas will take the lead; but in the case of other castes, they (the Bráhmaṇas) can only act as advisers. Agreeably to such usage, the granting of a divorce, or the recognising of a divorce as one properly made, is the duty of the caste. In some cases the mere will of either party or of both parties suffices, and there the caste can do very little, except to accept what has been done.
 20 Even Kamalákara recognises divorces made by either of the parties.⁴

² The unrepealed portion runs as follows:—The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts shall extend to the cognizance of all original suits and complaints of a civil nature, it being understood that no interference on the part of the court in caste questions is hereby warranted, beyond the admission and trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

A woman may, for the continuance of the line and not out of wantonness, take to another husband whether the first husband is alive or dead.' Nārada says :—'A Bráhmaṇī ought to await [the return of] her husband, who has gone abroad, for eight years; a woman who has become a mother, for four years, and one not a mother, for two years.' No period [of waiting] is laid down for a Śúdra woman, nor is there any transgression of duty [in her marrying again], particularly in the case of one not a mother. In the case of Steele's Summary likewise gives cases in which it is open to the parties to effect a divorce. The consent of the husband is not always contemplated. The sanction of the caste alone appears to suffice.¹ It would seem therefore that those who have to administer laws according to the usages of the country, must take such usages as they are. It would be very desirable if they were better. But we cannot, I say with all deference, help ourselves in this matter. In each case one must depend on the usages of the caste.

Thus in the case of Karsan Gojá, above mentioned, the trying judge said, he could think of no case of such irregular marriages save in the 10 province of Malábar. But general as well as Indian history afford numerous examples of the same kind.² It may be unfortunate that these things exist. It may equally be unfortunate that hundreds of such caste usages by which the people are guided in their daily transactions should prevail, but so they do mutatis mutandis in all countries; and unless the law is altered, I cannot conceive how people can be blamed for acting in accordance with what they know to be the law, and in accordance to which they have acted for thousands of years. Kolís and similar tribes are considered non-Áryan by several writers. Others have made attempts to include them within the scheme of 20 women of the remaining classes [viz., the intermediate two,] the period of waiting is one year. If [the first husband] is reported to be living, the period of waiting is double. This is the rule laid down by Prajapati for women in respect of procreation. Therefore, in resorting to another [husband under the said circumstances] there is no sin.

¹ Steele, p. 170 :—"Among the lower castes, widows and wives under certain circumstances are allowed to form the inferior contract termed Nikah, Pat (P.) or Oorkee (U.) These circumstances are if the husband proved impotent (76 C. P. S. K.); or the parties continually quarrel (72 C. P.); if the marriage were irregularly concluded; if by mutual consent the husband breaks his wife's neck ornament, and give her a chor chitte (K. P.) After which divorce, with the concurrence of the caste, the wife may form Pat 30 with another man, S. : sometimes even without their concurrence. And if after 12 years' absence a husband continue unheard of, his wife may form Pat : should he afterwards return, she must return to her first husband; or live with either at her option, the party deserted being reimbursed his marriage expenses, K. D."

Id., p. 174 :—"In the lower castes, besides adultery, &c. above mentioned, the husband's impotence or simple disagreement of the parties, even against the advice of the caste, is sufficient to cause a divorce, D. The husband breaks his wife's Mungalsootr, and tears her sarree, when she is at liberty to form Pat with another, K.P.D."

Āryan classes by either calling them Ati-Śūdras or Mlechchhas, or by adopting the fifth class, which was at one time in the contemplation of the Vedic writers. This would probably be the class whom Patañjali would call Niravasita-Śūdras. But for practical purposes, such as marriages, &c., the religious scheme of Hindu ceremonial has left them out altogether. Were it otherwise, all the nations of the earth would have to be included in the same class.¹

These low caste Hindoos, like Kolis and Telis, are not therefore within the ordinary pale of the Hindu law. Their family relations, their 10 ceremonies, and even their gods are determined by custom and usage. It is a matter of consideration, therefore, whether they can be punished civilly or criminally for disobedience to a law to which they owe no allegiance.

A few remarks on other criminal cases may not be out of place. The case noted below² of Sagūi wives in Behār as opposed to Bihāi wives resembles our nātrā in Gujarāth and Pātu in the Dekkan as opposed to lagna. The custom of divorce set up in this case does not appear to have been proved. But if the sanction of the caste by payment of a fine or otherwise had been obtained, I presume it would have been sufficient.
20 A marriage which is made by the application of a little red powder to the future wife's forehead, can surely be unmade by its being wiped off if the community to which the parties belong recognise the propriety of such a proceeding.

In another case³ (which came from Assam) wherein the husband sued for restitution of conjugal rights, it was pleaded that there was a divorce and a deed executed to that effect; the Munsif held the deed proved; but the District Judge ruled that the custom of Assam proved by the deed could not override the Hindu law, which forbade divorce. The

30 1st Ed. p. 124 :—

"The Moossalmans and other foreign castes (called Yewun) are inserted in this place by the Brahman compilers. Their origin, as fabulously told in several books, was from four causes :—From the Dyty, wife of Kusyap Rishhee, from the fifty sons of Wiswumit Rishhee who were cursed by him; from the cow Kamdhenoo given to Wasisht Rishhee by Brahm; from Parseemoond and Ardhmoond, sons of Sagur Raja, to whom Wasisht Raja presented the Sagur country (including Persia) to the westward; from Kahatriyas and other Hindoos who have from time to time lost caste (Wishnool Pooran).

"During the 4000 years of Kaleeyoog, the sects of Yewun have increased to a great number. They reckon several thousand prophets and saints whose tombs are endowed 40 with spiritual energy (Kurāmat) at the present day. The Chinese are a low caste of Yewun who do not refuse any kind of food," and "the Yewun of Bokhara are accused, like the Portuguese, of making proselytes by force."—"They distinguish three kinds of Yewun in Hindoostan, Parsee, Moossalman, and Iswee," including English, French, Portuguese, &c. These castes refuse no kind of occupation."

High Court corrected this, and sent back the case for a finding as to the custom set up. But it seems to me that when there was a deed, no reference need have been made unless the deed had been denied. For, so far as the history of Assam shows, there is but little Hindu law known there, and indeed in several divisions of Bengal and Assam, marriage customs are as different from those contemplated by Aryan writers, whether of texts or glosses or digests, as they can possibly be conceived. Half the world, it is said, does not know how the other half lives. In India, where intercommunication is still so slow, and mass education so defective, the people go on in their old 10 grooves, altered and fashioned by their local customs and usages, which have been sanctified by time and confirmed by habit.

Again, it is worthy of consideration whether it is just for courts of law to disregard well established customs and national usages on the ground of morality and public policy. The laws of marriage for the different castes are their own usages, and they can only be altered either by the castes or by the legislature.

Morality is a very elastic term. History shows that it is a very unsafe guide; and courts in India ought especially to be very careful. An example of morality working unequally may be seen by referring to 20 recent reports of two Madras cases, viz., Iracanni v. Ittāpu,¹ and Ohinnā and ten others v. Tegarāi.² In the first case a common Malabar squabble formed the subject of discussion; in the second, the rights of certain dancing girls attached to a pagoda establishment. As regards the morality of both classes, I should probably not differ at all. The one is a system of open and the other of clandestine prostitution. But I should be loth to impose my own moral convictions on two numerous communities, which have existed from time immemorial. In fact, my unwillingness to dictate would be in the direct ratio of the intensity of my convictions. The growth of customs may be slowly 30 changed, but it must come from within, and not from without, if the progress is to be genuine. And it strikes me in reference to the above two cases that when the judges speak of family quarrels, in the first case, the word 'family' is only used in the Malabar sense. For there can really be no family according to our notions when the relations of man and wife are perverted. Yet the courts do justice to the children of such people, and decline the duty in dealing with the temple girls on the score of morality. I confess I cannot see the difference between the two cases. And again, if the dancing girls had previously a legal position,³ when was it changed by a special law? They are 40 still the members of a religious establishment.

Moreover, unless the safe guidance of caste usages and customs be left untouched, I do not know what a state of confusion we may be landed into. Thus in a recent case,¹ one of the Calcutta High Court judges has held that—

“Marriage between parties in different subdivisions of the Śūdra caste is prohibited unless sanctioned by any special custom, and no presumption in favor of the validity of such a marriage can be made although long cohabitation had existed between the parties.”

In a Madras case² it has been held that a marriage between two subdivisions of the Śūdra class would be valid by Hindu law. In the course of his judgment, Mr. Justice Holloway observes:—“Further, I am clearly of opinion that the classes spoken of are the four classes recognised by Manu, and not the infinite subdivisions of these classes, introduced in the progress of time.”

This, I think, ignores Mann’s code itself. For the provisions of chapters ix., x., and xi. show that the whole system was speculative, and was never introduced anywhere as a whole. As a matter of fact neither Manu nor any other Smṛiti has had legislative force at any time as I have elsewhere explained; and before going into the wide, uncertain and unexplored field of Hindu law, we ought to seek for the parties’ customs in such matters. Our Elphinstone code rightly places the usage of the country (which includes caste and family usages) above the Hindu law. As usage goes, the Bengal judgment in the case of Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain, guardian of Jonardon, seems to be the correct one.

The last case I have to speak of is that of Ramangavdd and two others v. Shivaji Bayaji Patil.³ In this case the court hold that by Hindu law, the marriage of a man with his sister’s daughter is incestuous.

It does not appear whether the customary law on the point was 30 questioned by the opponent from the first. But looking to the testimony of such eminent persons as Sir T. Madava Row and others,⁴ I take that to be impossible. As a question of dry law, the above authorities resolve into two—thus the first¹ and sixth² are one and the same: namely, Manu, III., 5, which says that the bride should be “an asapinda of the mother.” Beyond this, the translation of Sir W. Jones is not quite accurate. Similarly, two,³ three⁴ and four⁵ are one and the same. Authority five⁶ refers to the subject of simple adoption and of Dvyā mushyāyana adoption, and the subject of marriage of the adopted with a bride from the families of the natural father and mother, is brought in from a text of Gautama to prove that there is a simple adoption as opposed to a Dvyāmushyāyana one. The seventh refers to four pages of Steele’s Summary of Castes and Customs.⁷ 10 It will be seen that the passages refer to different districts. So

⁷ I quote from the first edition of Steele the material passages which bear on the present question:—

“5. Intermarriage within the Sogotr Sapinda is forbidden, and with a female of another caste, P. O. (Mit.), and besides the Wirood Sumbund or prohibited degree of connexion within seven degrees, marriage is forbidden with the following Usogotr

- far as marriages like the one in question are concerned, it is stated that "Intermarriage with cousins and nieces is prohibited, but occasionally takes place" (p. 165). D. refers to Southern Maratha Country. It may be seen also that intercourse would be incestuous only where the marriage was between Sagotras or between different castes. Again, Steele is not correct in saying that the marriage is annulled even in such cases, for except where the parties belong to different castes, there is no annulment of marriage. If the marriage be of Sagotras, it stands—though it cannot be followed by intercourse. As regards Sapindas, no such restrictions appear. And Āśvalayana, Baudhāyana, Devala, Bṛhaspati and others distinctly direct local usages to be observed in regard to marriage and other matters. B. S., or Bhālachandra Śāstri, is one of the authorities quoted by Steele in respect to prohibited degrees. It is a pity his opinion in original is not given; because in Bhālachandra Śāstri's own caste, marriage with a maternal cousin is universal. In regard to this particular class of marriages, the law in the Southern Marāṭha Country, Mysore, and the South of India seems to be clear. It seems to be a pity that marriages like Ráyáji's, celebrated many years ago, and apparently with the sanction of the community, should be disturbed.
- 20 It is now conceded that even the Mitáksharā and Mayúkha are not binding as a whole, and that remark would apply with still greater force to Manu, Yājñavalkya and others, whose works are now almost obsolete, and have had no legislative force at any one time in history.

Supindu connexions : a parent's sister's daughter, a mother's brother's daughter, and a sister's daughter. (Page 33.)

Should the parties prove to be within the prohibited degrees of marriage (see paragraph 5), the wife must be repudiated with maintenance, and expiation performed. B. S. (Page 36.)

- The parties must be of the same caste and different Gotr or family stock, P. Brāhmanas are prohibited from intermarrying with all Supindu relations, and descendants of their Rishi's brothers, and connexions within 3 or 4 degrees, P. Intermarriage with cousins and nieces is prohibited (53 C. P.), but occasionally takes place from poverty, P. D. So with aunts and their children, Sugotras and Supruvhu, and of course with daughters, mothers and sisters, D. A brother's children may, however, marry sister's children not being Sugotr, D. First cousins intermarry in the Wys caste, D. Koutees give their children to nephews and nieces, D. Other exemptions in particular sects of Brāhmanas and other castes are mentioned, P. D. (Page 165.)
- 30

Among the Brāhmanas and higher castes, if it be discovered that the parties were of the same Gotr, or different castes, the marriage is annulled, the wife being maintained by the husband, but connexion would be deemed incestuous (the husband must maintain her as a sister), 2 C. P. S. D.

The woman and her children are permanently excluded from caste, D. Minor omissions of ceremonies are followed by penance only, D. In the lower castes, in which previous inquiry is not so strict, if the discovery be made before the girl's Shancee, or even before the birth of children, she may be married to another by Pat, S. D.

The marriage is not annulled by the discovery that the parties are of the same koolas, 10 C. P. (Page 168.)

SUMMARY OF MARRIAGE CUSTOMS IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF INDIA.

[In several instances, references alone are given, as the space at my disposal is limited.]

Southern India (including Berars, Central Provinces, and the Bombay and Madras Presidencies):—

The following are extracts from the Gazetteer for the Haidarábad Assigned Districts, commonly called Berar, by A. C. Lyall, Commissioner of West Berar : Bombay, 1870 :—

"The custom of widow marriages prevails universally among the agricultural communities, and perhaps more or less among all others, except the Bráhmans, the north 10 country trading classes, and the highest families of any caste. Divorce by mutual consent and deed of separation is also permitted, and the divorced woman marries again. These irregular unions are called pat marriages; but they are quite reputable, and the offspring is legitimate. Very primitive and grotesque connubial rites prevail among the Banjáras and Mánbháus, who have strongly coloured their ceremonial with that shade of mockery which still tinges slightly all marriage rejoicings" (p. 186).

Again :—

"In some castes, even Bráhmans, marriage is allowed with maternal uncle's daughter, and this concession grows more common as the social grades are descended. You may marry your deceased wife's sister, but not your dead husband's brother; 20 though among the Gonds this latter kind of match does occur, and even among some of the Banjáras.

"But, perhaps, the most curious incident of the system is, that in certain communities similarity of worship is a bar to connubium. Before concluding an alliance the Kunbi and other tribes look to the dewak, which means literally the deities worshipped at the marriage ceremonies; the fact being that certain families hold in honour particular trees and plants, and at marriage time branches of these trees are set up in the house. It is said that a betrothal, in every other respect unexceptionable, will be broken off if the two houses are discovered to pay honour to the same kind of tree. Follow this vein of inquiry lower down, and you find the custom more distinct among 30 the Gonds in their wilder state. In the Wún district the Gonds are divided into tribes, which are again sub-divided into Gotras. The Gotras have each a distinguishing name, or surname, to all members; while Gotras fall within one or another of four classes of worshippers :—

- | | |
|------|---------------------------|
| (1.) | Those who worship 4 gods. |
| (2.) | " " " 5 " |
| (3.) | " " " 6 " |
| (4.) | " " " 7 " |

"Now, a marriage cannot, of course, take place between two persons having a common surname; but it is also declared that neither is marriage allowed between two of 40 the same worshipping class, though surnames be different" (pp. 187, 188).

The following in regard to the Wún district shows that the Rákshasa form is still extant :—

"The males and females work separately and at a distance, and are never associated in their labour. A Gond male desiring to marry, gathers intelligence as to what lady of the adjacent villages he should make the object of his choice. This being done, he, attended by his comrades, resorts to jungles where his wife elect is working, in company with her female relations and friends. Coming in sight, the bridegroom, taking advantage of the unprotected state of the women, working as they do far away from their homes and male relations, pursues them. His friends will not aid him to carry away the bride by force, unless he, unaided, succeeds in touching the bride's hand before she finds a safe shelter in her village. Here it must be told that the women often fight every inch of ground with their pursuers, inflict the most serious hurt, and sometimes most shameful defeats. The contest continues even after the bridegroom has touched the bride's hand. If the fight is drawn to the skirts of the village, the male portion joins the females, and pursues the enemy back to their village. But the touching of the bridegroom once effected, the marriage contract is sealed, and cannot 10 be broken" (p. 188).

Marriages within the gotra and out of it are illustrated below (pp. 188, 189) :—

"The custom of marrying an elder brother's widow, which still survives among the aborigines, is supposed to be a lingering relic of the primitive system of polyandry or kinship through females. However, as society progressed, and these groups intermarried, paternal descent became more certain and trustworthy, for the system of capture gave way to peaceful betrothal, while property in womankind became more secure; and at that stage female kinship gave way to the latter law of agnatic kindred to the female head of each family or group. Here we get the Gotras or Gotes fully 20 developed out of the tribe, just as we see them throughout Hindustán to this day, and notably among the Rajpúts. When one of these Gotes or families departs from its country, and settles afar in foreign lands, it soon separates into different Gotes, by reason of the difficulty of obtaining wives from outside. Berar affords one or two instances of this process among the offshoots of up-country tribes which have migrated down hither. The emigrants were very soon entirely cut off, and alienated from the parent tribe left in Upper India; and whereas in their own country they must have gone to another tribe for wives, here they form a caste of their own, within which its members must marry, exchanging alliances between the different newly formed subdivisions. Of this process the Puars of Berár and the Nagpur province afford a good
30 example; and I believe that the Rajbansis, and all the other isolated settlements of Rajpúts in Berár and the Dakhan, follow the same rule. But the ancient family of the Jádow Rájás of Sindkher still intermarries exclusively with the clans of Rajputana" (p. 189).

Divorce and Second Marriages :—

"Widows can, on the death of their first husband, marry again by a pat marriage. A man can at one and the same time have only one 'lagan' wife alive; but he can have several pat marriage wives" (p. 201).

Again :—

"Except the Brahmanas, the Vaisya Sonárs, and one or two other castes, all Hindu 40 women here are allowed to make a second marriage. Some of the deshmukh families, who hold their heads high, forbid it also. There is this difference between a first and second marriage. In the former, if a woman goes wrong, her husband can give her a farkhattinámá or bill of divorce; whilst if he goes wrong, she has her redress. But in the second either may dissolve the marriage" (p. 211).

Curious customs of the Mánbháus :—

"The Mánbháus, though vowed to celibacy, have been accused of in chastity. Under full vows they are said to be allowed to marry, the ceremony being of two kinds. According to one rite the couple roll about before the mahaní until they touch, which touch unites them for life. According to the other, both persons go before the mahant with their begging wallets, which the priest ties together, and the marriage knot is fast" (p. 214).

The following account of a marriage in the Ellichpur district may be compared with similar ceremonials in other parts of India :—

"The boy and family go to the girl's village, and he and the girl are covered with haldi (turmeric), and then wash, and worship the Kulawami and the god Ganpati. In the evening Brahmanas hold a sheet up between them, and at the time fixed jawari is thrown on them by the people present; the sheet is let drop and the marriage is complete. The people are feasted for four days, during which time a string called 'kan-kan,' which on the first day is tied on the girl's wrist, remains there. Presents are 10 given to the bride and bridegroom, who then go to the latter's house, where they swear mutually to be faithful, and the husband to protect the wife, and the wife to be obedient. The bride remains eight days in her husband's house; then there is a festival in propitiation of 'Devi,' called 'goudhál,' and the bride returns to her parents" (p. 218).

CENTRAL PROVINCES.

In reference to these I would refer to the following :—

BOMBAY.

The following notes will explain some of the caste customs in the Bombay Presidency :—

" In Gujarat the Gotra relationship is observed when known. But it is said that in some castes of Bráhmans whose numbers are not increasing suitable matches are scarce. And in some cases the rule of relationship on the mother's side has been so far disregarded that first and second cousins have intermarried. Among the lower castes marriage is allowed if the families are not shown to be related within three generations."

20 There are different customs in regard to dowry. The grant of a dowry by the bride's father is to some extent held dishonorable. This is so in the Dekkan. But the usage is now quite common amongst the highest castes ; and all the details are settled generally by the boy's side with the cupidty of hucksters. Another mode is :—

" The return marriage system is called sátu or bargain. This arrangement is adopted to save marriage expenses, and gain brides for men of low family, and is common among Bráhmans, Wáníás, Kunbis, and other high caste Hindus. The simple case of a return marriage is when A gives his daughter to B, and B in return gives a daughter to A. If B has no daughter, a daughter of B's brother, sister or other relation is given. In other cases three families may join together to arrange a marriage. Thus A gives his daughter to a son of C ; C gives a daughter to a son of A. This form of bargain is known as tarakkhu or chokkhu if four families join."

In regard to second marriages the following information gives some of the current views :—

" To the men of almost all classes of Hindus a second marriage is allowed. But except in some families among the higher castes of specially good position, and in cases where the first wife dies or proves to be barren, a second marriage is unusual. On the question whether women may marry a second time, Hindus are divided. All except the higher castes allow and practise it. But the Bráhmans, Wáníás, Sonis, 40 and some subdivisions of Suthár, in fact all who wear the sacred thread, are strongly opposed to it, and visit with excommunication from their caste any one bold enough to break through the rule.

" Among lower classes the practice of giving divorce is in existence."

Bhil marriages in Panch Mahals [Gujarát]. After the bridegroom's reaching the bride's house the following ceremony takes place :—

"The bride is then led in by her mother, and seated opposite to the bridegroom. Their hands are joined, and the hems of their garments tied. Then while three women sing songs, the bride and bridegroom walk together twelve times round a branch of the salvora tree placed in the middle of the booth. When this is over, the bride and bridegroom feed each other with wheaten bread and molasses."

Again :—

"A man may marry a second or a third wife in the lifetime of the first. A woman marries again, not only if her husband dies, but if she gets tired of him, and can bring another man to take her and pay her husband his marriage expenses. The children, if there are any, stay with their father.

10

"A Bhil youth and girl anxious to marry, but unable to find the necessary £7 (Rs. 70) or so, not uncommonly arrange that he should carry her off on her way to or from some fair or wedding feast. She then lives with him as his wife, and when her parents come in pursuit, an agreement is made for paying the dowry by instalments, or in some other way suited to the bridegroom's means." [Campbell's Bombay Gazetteer, vol. III. pp. 220, 221.]

Náikdá marriages [Panch Mahals]—

"After dinner the bride and bridegroom are seated face to face in the square, or chori, in the centre of the booth, and by two old men, one from each family, called for the occasion priests or pujaris, have their hands joined and their skirts tied. Then 20 a sheet is thrown over their heads, and the old men give them some balls of flour and molasses. When each has twice fed the other, the cloth is drawn away, and the marriage is over. In many cases there is no ceremony of this kind.

"If a girl reaches the age of sixteen, and her parents have not betrothed her, she may go and live with any man she chooses, and if he agrees to pay her parents from £1 12s. to £5 (Rs. 16 to Rs. 50), no objection is raised. Again, if a woman deserts her husband, and goes to live with another man, he pays the husband from £1 12s. to £6 (Rs. 16 to Rs. 60). If the husband agrees to give up his wife, he is paid nothing. A widow may marry again. On such occasions there is no ceremony. The husband presents her with a new petticoat, bodice, and robe. He comes to her house, 30 and takes her away with him. But this must be done at night, for it is a common belief that if a widow is married in the daytime, the village will be burnt down. A man may have at the same time more than one wife. The Náikdás do not intermarry with any other caste. But if a Koli woman lives with a Náikdá or a Koli with a Náikdá woman, they are admitted into the Náikdá caste."—Id. Vol. III., pp. 224, 225.

MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

Malabar, Nair marriages :—

"The Nairs marry before they are ten years of age, but the husband never cohabits with his wife. He allows her oil, clothing, ornaments and food, but she remains in her mother's house, or after her parent's death with her brothers, and cohabits with any 40 person she chooses of an equal or higher rank than her own. In consequence of this strange arrangement, no Nair knows his own father, and every man considers his sister's children as his heirs." [Hamilton's History of Hindustan, vol. II. p. 280; see also page 293 of the same volume: also a more detailed account of the customs in Buchanan's "Journey from Madras through Mysore, Canara and Malabar," vol. II. pp. 410—412. The consequences of these extend to other castes, see pp. 423—427 of the same volume of Buchanan.]

In connection with these marriages a good deal of light will be thrown by the following Sixteen Rules, extracted from a translation of Bhūtālapāṇḍya's Law of Alyasantāna by B. Ramaswamy Naidu, B.A., Canarese and Telugu Translator on the Appellate Side of the High Court, pp. 20, 23, [Madras, 1872] :—

Sixteen Kuttāles or Rules.

1. If a question should arise as to how the line of a family governed by the Alyasantāna law may be continued in case the only girl of that family goes to see her husband, the answer is, the father and mother are not competent to give the girl (in marriage) to another; but the maternal uncle and others of that family may do so.
- 10 The father and mother have no power to make a gift of their girl by the ceremonial of pouring water, but they can touch the vessel with the water to be so poured.
2. If in that (Alyasantāna family) a girl loses her husband, such girl is called Buḍavaḷaṭi; if she happens, before she receives the Uḍigé (wedding cloth) to become pregnant by intercourse with a person of her own caste, Bhūtālapāṇḍya declares that she may be given to such person in Bodadhāre marriage on levying a fine from him. Bhūtālapāṇḍya adds that if the man be of a higher caste than the girl, she may be allowed to be kept by him; but if he be of an inferior caste, the Ballālas may sell such girl after exacting a fine from him.
3. If a husband leaves his wife and goes to a foreign country, Bhūtālapāṇḍya declares that she may, after the expiration of 5 years, be joined to another person with a gift of Uḍigé (cloth). He further says that if she become pregnant in the absence of her husband, she may be placed in the keeping of her paramour, with a gift of ornaments, provided he be of superior caste; if of the same caste, with a gift of clothes; and if of an inferior caste, she may be abandoned, fined, and joined to such caste.
- 20 4. If after such a woman has brought forth three or four children subsequent to her marriage, the husband goes to another country, she cannot be wedded to another person. If she should have connection with a person of equal caste, and becoming big with child before the return of her husband, she cannot be remarried. If in such case 30 the person be of an inferior caste, she should be abandoned (excommunicated).
5. Bhūtālapāṇḍya records a rule to the following effect: If a married woman find her husband to be an adulterer, and the husband find her to be adultress, and he take her and deliver her over to her parents, she may be wedded to another person. If the husband forsaking his wife takes another woman [into his keeping, and fails to treat his wife properly] the members of her family may recall her from her husband, and get her wedded to another person. Moreover, if the husband illtreats [the wife by striking and abusing her as he likes], a reconciliation may be effected between them three or four times; but should there be a recurrence of disagreement even afterwards, the members of her family may recall her from her husband, and get her married to 40 another person.
6. If a girl shall arrive at puberty, and become pregnant before marriage, such girl as well as the person that caused such pregnancy should be fined, and the girl may be placed in his keeping if he be of a superior caste, or abandoned if he be of an inferior caste.
7. If a girl who has arrived at puberty as aforesaid elopes with anybody before her marriage, she may be married to him if he be of the same caste, or abandoned if he be of an inferior caste, or placed in his keeping if he be of a superior caste.

8. If a married woman leaves her husband, and elopes with a man of the same caste, she may be wedded to the latter. If he be of a superior caste she may be placed in his keeping; if he be of an inferior caste she may be abandoned.

9. In respect of Kshatriya girls the custom of Kshatriyas should be observed. Among Kshatriyas and Brahmins marriages may be performed by the process of Kaidhāre (giving the girl in marriage, attended with the pouring of water by the hand). If the male be of the same or of an inferior caste, she shall be abandoned.

10. As regards the Jaina sect, if the male be of the same caste she may be placed in his keeping, but if she had connection with one of a superior or inferior caste, she becomes abandoned. 10

11. With reference to the women of Malavara class, if the male be of the same or superior caste, she may be placed in his keeping; if he be of an inferior caste, she should be abandoned and cannot be recalled.

12. Bhūtālapāṇḍya declares that among the two castes Nāyamīnar and Nāyar, there is only Kaṇṇakalyāṇ, or marriage of virgins, and not Svayanvaram, or marriage by the girl selecting her husband; but afterwards (the girl) may be allowed to be kept by persons of the same caste, or of a superior one, such as Brahmins.

13. As regards the Kadamba class and Kumāra Ballala, such girl may be placed in the keeping of a male of the same caste or of a Kshatriya, Brahmin, &c., but if of an inferior caste, she should be abandoned. 20

14. As regards Sthānīkas and Ambalavāsīs, if the male be not of the same or be of any inferior caste other than that of a Brahmin, she shall be abandoned.

15. Bhūtālapāṇḍya says that a girl of Padārthi or Horapoduvalū class may be taken into the keeping of a person of the same caste or of a superior one after Uḍigē cloth shall have been given to her.

16. In the case of Arasus (kings) the Brahminical marriage may be performed. As a (Anyata) gift is generally made to the children born of him (Arasa), Bhūtālapāṇḍya has declared that the marriage ceremony may be performed by (fixing) pillars and (placing) pots, &c.

If those Arasus are such as cannot afford to make gifts, it would not then be possible to celebrate the marriage according to the Brahmanical customs. Bhūtālapāṇḍya also declared that Chowtas and Baugeras have the same rules and the same auspicious and inauspicious ceremonies as Brahmins. 30

The following information is to be gathered from the Kalyāṇa Śaṭaṅku, or the marriage ceremonies of the South of India, by the Revd. J. F. Kearns [Madras, 1875] :—

About the Maravers (p. 33) :—

"Among very poor Maravers, few ceremonies only are performed. They simply have a feast for their relations, place the bridegroom and the bride on the Manavarei, and cause the bridegroom's sister to tie the Thālī; and thus ends the business. Wives 40 can be taken only from the relations of the bridegroom's mother; and never from the father's relations. Strangers are preferable to the father's relations."

About the Kuravers (pp. 34 and 35) :—

"In cases where separation occurs, the sum given as the nuptial present should be returned, and any one willing to pay the same amount may take her again in marriage.

"In this caste, children are espoused, even before their birth. Two men who wish to have marriages between their children say one to the other, 'If your wife should have a girl and mine a boy, or vice versé, they must marry.' And to bind themselves to this, they exchange tobacco, and the bridegroom's father makes a feast of arrack or toddy to the coming bride's relations. But if after the children are grown up, the Brahmin should pronounce the omens unpropitious, the marriage is not consummated, and the bride's father pays back the cost of arrack and other spirits used at the betrothal."

About the Kuluvars (p. 50) :—

"A girl is espoused to a young man before she becomes marriageable. On the day of the espousal, a person is sent to fetch all the other Kuluvars, wherever their huts may be; and in their presence the espousal is settled, and the bridegroom gives them a 10 feast of a fat pig and several bottles of arrack."

About the Naickers (p. 54) :—

"The rule with this caste is that the men shall marry the daughters of their sisters, i. e. their nieces. Marriages are consequently made by persons between whom there exists a strange disparity of age. Oftentimes the bride is a mere infant, while the bridegroom is a fullgrown man, and vice versé."

About the Reddies (p. 59) :—

"The Reddies, like the Naickers, are obliged to marry their sisters' daughters, i. e. their nieces. They have no fixed time for celebrating their marriages, but, generally speaking, their marriages take place before the bride has attained the age of puberty, 20 but having determined upon celebrating a marriage, an astrologer is consulted, in order to ascertain a lucky day for the event; and having ascertained it, a message is sent to the bride's friends desiring them to get all things ready."

(P. 62.) "N. B.—In this caste and also in the Naicker caste, polygamy of the worst description is legally practised. It is no uncommon thing to meet a man married to two sisters, and having a family by each. I know an instance of a man having three sisters to wife at the same time."

About the Koliar Pullars (p. 68) :—

"There are seven tribes or classes in this caste, and no man of the caste is allowed to take him a wife from his own tribe or class, because the women of his class are consi-30 dered his sisters."

INDIA NORTH OF THE NARMADÁ.

Bengal.—[The references in the portion relating to the different provinces of Bengal are to the Statistical Account of Bengal by Dr. W. W. Hunter in 20 volumes.]

Dr. Hunter, after describing Kulinism in Dacca, and the results of the enquiry instituted by the last Hindu independent King Laxman Sen, speaks of the division of the Kulin Ráhrí Bráhmaṇa families into two groups—mukhya (chief) and ganna (secondary). He then enumerates the mukhya Kulin families, and goes on :—

40 "Difficulties regarding marriages soon sprung up, and the status of the Kulins was again remodelled by Debí Sinh, a distinguished ghaták (marriage registrar), and he further classified the Ráhrí Kulins into thirty-two mels or families. These Kulins who had married their daughters to Srotriyas or non-Kulins, were degraded and called Bansa; while those who married the daughters of these lapsed Bansa Bráhmaṇs were ranked a step higher, and called Bhanga (literally broken). A Kulin, however, may marry a girl belonging to the upper class of Srotriyas without incurring any loss of caste. By marrying into a family of lower class Srotriyas or a Bansa family, he loses a certain amount of respect, but still retains his Kulinism."

There is no limit to the number of wives a Kulin may have. The Deputy-Collector reported to me in 1871 that there was then in Bikrampur a man of this class with upwards of a hundred wives, while his three sons had fifty, thirty-five, and thirty respectively. Those Kulins who make marriage a profession do not maintain their wives, but leave them and their children to be provided for by the respective fathers-in-law. They are, however, bound to provide dowers for their female children. The sons are raised to the father's rank, the daughters take that of the mother, and a portion is required to get them eligibly married. Few Kulins, however, have the means of endowing their daughters, and the consequence is that a large proportion of the female children of Kulins by Bansaj wives remain unmarried." [Vol. V. p. 55.] 10

Further on the following remarks occur in regard to marriages among certain Vaishnavas in this part of Bengal:—

"Owing to this disparity in the number of the sexes, a large proportion of the women have to remain single. The men often join the fraternity for the sake of concubinage. A man happens to fall in love with a widow or with a woman of a different caste. As a consequence they are both persecuted by society, and become Vaishnavas, when they can marry without molestation. The marriage ceremony is very simple; the man and woman exchange garlands, make a small present in money to the goswami, or spiritual guide, and a feast to the neighbouring Vaishnavas according to their means." [Vol. V. p. 57.] 20

Marriages amongst the Chakmas of the Chittagong Hills. The procession with the bridegroom comes to the house of the bride's father:—

"On arriving, all enter the house, and the bride and bridegroom sit down together at a small table. On the table are eggs, sweetmeats, rice and plantains, all laid out on leaf platters. The best man (Sowals) sits behind the bridegroom, and the bride has a representative bridesmaid (Sowali) behind her. These two then bind around the couple a muslin scarf, asking, 'Are all willing, and shall this thing be accomplished?' Then all cry out, 'Bind them, bind them;' so they are bound. The married pair have now to eat together, the wife feeding the husband, and the husband the wife. . . . After they have thus eaten and drunken, an elder of the village sprinkles them with river-water, pronounces them man and wife, and says a charm used for fruitfulness." [Vol. VI. p. 47.] 30

And again:—

"It sometimes happens that a lad and lass fall in love with each other, but that the parents will not hear of the match. In such a case, should the lovers elope together the girls' parents have the right to demand their daughter back, and take her home. If, notwithstanding this opposition, the lovers' intentions remain unaltered, and they elope a second time, no one has a right to interfere with them." [Id., vol. VI. p. 47.]

"If a man runs away with another man's wife, he has to repay to the injured husband all the former expenses of marriage, and is in addition fined from £4 to £6. Divorce is not difficult of attainment, and is awarded by a jury of village elders, the party adjudged to be in fault being fined heavily." [Id., vol. VI. p. 47.] 40

Among the Tepperahs of Chittagong:—

"At a marriage, a pig is killed as a sacrifice to the deities of the woods and streams; the girl's mother pours out a glass of liquor, and gives it to her daughter, who sits on her lover's knee, drinks half, and gives him the other half; they then crook together their little fingers. This concludes the ceremony.

Lewin instances one case which he witnessed himself, in which a divorce was sued for by the wife on the ground of habitual cruelty. The jury deliberated, and found that the cruelty was proved, and that the divorce should be granted." [Vol. VI. p. 52.]

Among the Kumis of Chittagong :—

"A marriage among the Kumis is simply a festive occasion, and does not appear to entail any particular ceremonies." [Id., vol. VI. p. 55.]

Similarly among the Lushais or Kákis :—

"Marriage is a civil contract, that may be dissolved at the will of both parties, and is celebrated only by feasting and dancing." [Id., vol. VI. p. 61.]

10 In regard to the Noákalí district it is said :—

"Widow marriages take place among the Chandáls, barbers, washermen, fishermen, and shoemakers of the district. They are marriages of mutual inclination, and require no ceremony; but though excommunication is not incurred thereby, and the children are considered legitimate, such marriages are exceedingly rare." [Id., vol. VI. p. 282.]

In vol. X. Dr. Hunter describes the marriage ceremonies among the Koch or Rájbandi tribe in Kuch Behar :—

(1) Gandharba Bibába :—

"The only ceremony performed on such occasions is the placing before the girl of the chalan báti, before described, and the presenting her with a new cloth and shell 20 bracelets (Sankh) to be worn on the wrist. The lower garlands are also exchanged between the bride and the bridegroom. The services of the Brahmans are not brought into requisition, as no religious ceremony is performed. The chalan báti, which seems the main part of the ceremony, is placed before the girl by young married women whose husbands are living. This kind of marriage is seldom resorted to by the lower orders of the people, but it prevails extensively amongst the higher classes. It is not held in very high consideration, although it is binding on both parties" [pp. 374, 375].

The next form is called Bráhma. It resembles the same form in other parts of India; but many ceremonies are omitted. Even the saptapadi and the vivahahomam are omitted, and probably instead of 30 the first the bride is seated on a board, and carried round her husband seven times, a barber holding an umbrella on her head. The third form is the widow marriage, which is thus described :—

"Widow marriage.—This marriage, if it deserves to be called by that name, takes place without any ceremonies whatever; but the children of the union are acknowledged as heirs and successors to the property of their father. Such children, however, are not recognised as legitimate children in Hindú society, and the women are always looked down upon even by the Rájbandi. The peculiar circumstances under which widows are received by men as wives have given rise to different names by which such women are known, such as dangá wife, dhoká wife, páshuá wife.
40 Dang means a stick or a blow felt with a stick; when a widow lives by herself and a man goes to the house with a Dang or stick in his hand, and strikes a blow with it on the roof of the house, and so enters in, and takes possession of the woman, such women are called a dangá wife. This mode of union is naturally only resorted to under previous arrangement between the parties. Dhoká means 'to enter into'; when a widow of her own accord enters the house of a man, she is denominated a dhoká wife. Páshuá or pash means 'afterwards'; a woman that is taken afterwards, that is, after she has been once before married is called a páshuá wife.

Among the Santals:—

"On the day fixed for a marriage, the bridegroom with his relations proceeds to the bride's father's house, where they are seated on cots and mats; after a repast the bride's father takes his daughter's hand, and places it in that of the bridegroom, and exhorts him to be loving and kind to the girl that he thus makes over to him. The groom with the little finger of his right hand marks the girl on the forehead with Sindér or vermilion, and linking the same finger with the little finger of her right hand, he leads her away to his own house. Polygamy is allowed and practised, and if a man dies leaving several widows, they can become the wives of his brothers or cousins, but only one to each. In regard to tribal or other restrictions on marriage, I find no information, except that a man may not marry a near relation." [Id., vol. XIV. p. 298.] 10

And again:—

"No priest officiates at a Santal marriage. The social meal that the boy and girl eat together is the most important part of the ceremony. By this act the girl ceases to belong to her father's tribe, and becomes a member of her husband's family." [Id., vol. XIV. p. 316.]

Marriages among the Birhors of the Lohárdagá district:—

"Their marriage is of the most primitive form, stimulating the chase and forcible abduction of the bride by the bridegroom. As soon as a young couple have agreed to 20 marry, the elders of both families collect all available resources for a feast. Roasted pig, stewed monkey, herbs cooked in fat, and all sorts of roots, make up the bill of fare, with plenty of rice-beer, or, if that cannot be obtained, the intoxicating liquors made up from the plants Káús and Khasuná. When the feast is ready, the members of the two families sit down in a line opposite one another, and the father of the bridegroom addresses the bride's father, to the effect that his son is swift of foot, and is calling on the bride. The girl's father then turns to her, and tells her to run and show her lover how fleet she is. On this, she gets up, and runs into the jungle, and after a minute's interval her lover follows to catch the bride. During the chase the assembled company chant a kind of song, in which one side praises the speed of the bridegroom, 30 and the other that of the bride. The song goes on till the shout of the boy, as he succeeds in catching the girl, is heard, when silence follows. The marriage is consummated at once in the jungle, and the girl on returning to the company is dressed by the women in a new sári, of coarse country cloth, the bridegroom's present." [Id., vol. XIV. p. 258.]

Among the Uráons of Lohárdagá:—

"A bower is constructed in front of the residence of the bride's father into which the bride and bridegroom are carried by women, and made to stand on a currystone, under which is placed a sheaf of corn, resting on a plough-yoke.

"In Uráon marriages the bridegroom stands on the currystone behind the bride, 40 but, in order that this may not be deemed a concession to the female, his toes are so placed as to tread on her heels. The old women under the cloth are very particular about this, as if they were specially interested in providing that the heel of the woman should be properly braced. Thus poised, the man stretches over the girl's head, and daubs her forehead and crown with the red powder, sindér; and if the girl is allowed to return the compliment (it is a controverted point whether she should do so or not), then, by some arrangement, vessels full of water, placed over the bower, are capsized, and the young couple and those who stand near them receive a drenching shower bath. They now retire into an apartment prepared for them, ostensibly to change their clothes, but they do not emerge for some time, and when they appear they are saluted as man and wife." [Id., vol. XVI. p. 286.]

Among the Bhuiyas in the tributary state of Bonai, a child is named generally after the grandfather, and—

"There are no religious ceremonies after this till marriage, which cannot take place till the parties are adult, and the parents have very little to do with the selection of partners." [Id., vol. XVII. p. 171.]

There appear to be no ceremonies.

Among the Muasis or Kurns the following appears to be the chief ceremony:—

"A vessel full of water and a lighted lamp are placed near the pole, and also a currystone, on which is arranged seven little heaps of rice and turmeric. When all is ready, the chief bridesmaid and best man lead the young couple once round the post, then leave them to perform the remainder of the revolutions themselves; and each time as they approach the currystone, the bridegroom causes his bride to kick away one of the heaps of rice and turmeric. When the seventh is knocked off, the best man 20 seizes the pole, and violently shakes it, and on this the people all exclaim, 'it is done.' The wedded pair are then taken inside, and after spending some time together, come out to receive the congratulations of their friends and retire again to the chamber prepared for them." [Id., vol. XVII. p. 186.]

And among the Kurnis of Mánbhum,—

"The bride is now introduced into the assembly, with the rit prepared for her by her father-in-law, and the var presented. She is then taken to her friends to a Mahá ree, which she must wear, as the var wedded the mango, and she is brought back to the bower of Hymen in a basket. The var then applies the sindur to her forehead, making a red mark between the eyes, and the guests all shout 'Haribol Sindradán.' 30 In some places, as in Singbhum, they touch and mark each other with blood as a sign that they have become one flesh, and this is probably the true origin of the singular but very universal custom of Sindradán. They are now man and wife, and receive the congratulations of their friends, and next morning go home together on the Jahás, the bride sitting submissively at her husband's feet. The presence of a Brahma is not necessary to give validity to a Kurni marriage. They consult a Brahma astrologer as to whether the marriage is likely to prove happy and fruitful or otherwise, and he is sometimes asked to name a fortunate day, but his aid is not otherwise sought." [Id., vol. XVII. p. 294.]

Among the Juangs of Orissa:—

40 "The marriage ceremonies are very simple. The formal preliminaries are arranged by mutual friends; but this generally follows a private understanding, which the parties most interested have come to without intervention. After the bridegroom has made his election, the following gifts are bestowed in his behalf: To the girl's father, a bullock; to the maternal uncle, a bullock; to the mother, a rupee in money and a cloth." [Id., Vol. XIX. p. 240.]

And among the Bhuiyas of the same district:—

"Marriages.—Marriage is recognised, but is brought about in the simplest manner. If a young man fancies a girl he sends a party of his friends to propose for her, and if the offer is accepted, a day is fixed, and a load of rice in husk is presented on his behalf. The bridegroom does not go himself to the bride's house; his friends go, and return with her and her friends. Then they make merry, eating and dancing, and all stay and make a night of it. In the morning, the bridegroom dismisses the bride's friends with a present of three measures of husked and three of unhusked rice; and this is a full and sufficient solemnization. A man may have more wives than one if he can afford it, but no Juang has ever ventured on more than two at a time. They are divided into tribes, and are exogamous." [Id., vol. XIX. p. 247.]

HINDUSTHAN PROPER: RÁJPUTANA.

The following portions of the Rájputana Gazetteer, vol. I. (Calcutta, 1879) may be referred to, pp. 68—70. The existence of exogamy, as Mr. J. F. McLennan calls it, is here best illustrated. Examples of abduction; of marriages with maternal cousins; of the disruption of tribes into castes or sects.

Náthá marriages:—Brothers marry the widow of the elder brother in Ajmere (p. 80). So also in Banswara (pp. 120, 121); again the widow goes to any man she pleases, but he must be "of a different caste to her father" (p. 121); Rákshasa marriages (pp. 121, 122); sale of widows in marriage (p. 161); polygamy and left-handed marriage between different castes held binding (p. 161). 20

Marriages in the Ulwar State:—

"A good deal, however, is spent by the poorer classes on marriages; and though boys often remain long unmarried owing to poverty, few grow old single, for Meos allow concubinage without bastardising the issue of it, and the lower castes of Hindus can make daricka marriages, that is, marry the widows of their brethren by the marriage of their daughters. Even Baniyas now often do this."¹

Mairwara:—From Dixon's Sketch of Mairwara, the following may be gleaned. The Mairs consider themselves Hindus; but are regardless about forms and ceremonies. They worship some of the national deities. "Their marriages are conducted after the customs of the Hindus" 30 Their widows can marry a younger brother of the deceased, but not an elder. There is no form. The widow can select any one she likes² with the above single reservation.

SECTION II.

Adoption.

The first mention of adoption in the R̥ig-Veda is that of Śunahśepa,¹ 20 the son of Ajígarta, by Viśvámitra, who had a hundred sons living at the time when he made the adoption. Śunahśepa gave himself, and was therefore Svayandatta (self-given). Such instances still occur, and are sanctioned by custom. He is called Ajígarti, as having been the son of Ajígarta. In the R̥ig-Veda-Sarvānukrama he is styled “कृत्रिमो दत्ताभिर्देवरातः”—Kṛitrīma-Vaiśvámitra-Devarátah. As I said before, he became the adopted son of Viśvámitra, and he is now one of the Pravara R̥ishis of the Viśvámitra gotra under the name of Devarátā.² When Viśvámitra adopted him, he had a hundred sons living; of these, fifty disapproved of the adoption, and were cursed in consequence; 30 while those fifty who approved of it, and accepted Śunahśepa or Ajígarta as their elder brother, were blessed by that sage.³

The account given in note 10 by Mr. Sutherland (see Stokes' H. L. B. p. 533) is not correct, and is 40 opposed to that in the Aitareya Bráhmaṇa, which latter agrees with other Puráṇic accounts.

The next example I shall give is from the Yajur-Veda.¹ The Rishi Atri gave away all his children to the son of Urvá, who longed for a son. This is an example of the adoption of more than one son; and of giving away all sons.

The next example is from the Rámáyana, and it is that of the adoption of a daughter of king Daśaratha by Lomapáda, who gave her in marriage to sage Rishyaśringa.² In like manner Vasudeva gave his daughter Prithá to Kunti-Bhoja, who adopted her and bestowed her in marriage upon Paṇḍu, King of Hastinápur.³ These instances appear

He found this Chatúrátra [a Satra ceremony described in the Veda]. He adopted it, and sacrificed according to it. Therefrom, four sons were born to him—Suhotrí, Súdgaṭrí, Svadhvaryu and Susabheya, [the four sacrificing priests at a Śrauta sacrifice].

Translation :—There will be born in the family of the Ikshvákus a warrior by name Daśaratha, who will be rich and attentive to his duties. There will be friendship between him, and the noble minded king of the Angas. He will also have a fortunate daughter by name Śántá. The king of the Angas known by the name "Lomapáda" being childless will request Daśaratha as follows :—"Oh righteous, I am childless; let this handsome daughter Śántá be given to me by you with heart calm, in the place of a son." Then king Daśaratha, after considering in his mind, will give that daughter Śántá to the Lord of the Angas. Then that king with his anxiety removed and his heart delighted, taking her with him, will go with speed to his city. Then that mighty king will give her to Rishyaśringa." In the same work Daśaratha is said to have spoken to Lomapáda as follows :—"Oh warrior and lord of the Vaiśya, let that daughter of yours Śántá go with her husband to my city; for a great work is to be done." Again, in that very book these are the words spoken by Lomapáda to Rishyaśringa :—"This king Daśaratha is my companion and beloved friend, this handsome girl is given by him to me as my child; oh Bráhmaṇa, this Śántá is very dear to me, for having got her in gift. to have occurred before the time of Bṛiṅgu's Manu, whose text in regard to adoption is very general.¹ The adoption of a daughter simply as a daughter, or as a Putrikā, appears to have been general. There is no prohibition in the Kali Varjya Prakaraṇa (section describing things prohibited in the Kali age) as given by modern writers against the former of these adoptions. They are as frequently made at present, as they used to be in the times of old. The Saṅkalpa (determination) made before taking a daughter is different from that of taking a son, and is settled by the Prayoga (ceremonial) writers. In the case of a son, 10 the Saṅkalpa current in these parts assumes that the receiver has no aurasa son,² which according to the current view of the word son, includes the aurasa son's son and the son's grandson.

Looking at the Vedas and the Itihāsas (histories), and the Purāṇas, it appears to me that the system of adoption was older than Mannu. The present text in that Smṛiti simply declares the practice as it was then found in that part of the country where the work was compiled. No restriction as to age or number is there given. The only limitation is that the person adopted should be Sadṛśah (similar). The rest of the distinctions and provisions as they now appear in some 20 writings are comparatively modern, and they are not observed by the people; except that a sonless man alone at present adopts a son.

The object of having an adopted son is double, spiritual as well as worldly.

Manu³ :—|| भयुनेण सुतः कार्यो यादृक्तादृक्प्रयत्नतः | पिण्डोदकाक्रियहेतोर्नामसंकीर्तनाय चेति ||

Translation—A sonless man should adopt, with efforts, a son of any description whatsoever, so that he may offer him the Piṇḍa, perform his obsequies, and perpetuate his name.⁴

It will be thus seen that adoption is advocated for two objects :—
1, the performance of ceremonies consisting of giving piṇḍa and water, 90 and 2, the perpetuation of the name. The first secures salvation or heavenly bliss; the second perpetuates the family. The merely spiritual or religious consideration of obtaining Moksha (salvation) can however be attained according to the Śāstras by various other means, some of which are held to be even more efficacious than the begetting or adopting of a son. These are :—(1) *Svādhyāya*⁵ (or the study of the Vedas); (2) appropriate gifts;⁶ (3) resort to tīrthas (holy places;

² Some limit this to an aurasa son.

(4) *purāṇa-Śravaṇa*¹ (hearing the Purāṇas recited); (5) the practice of Yoga² (meditation); (6) and accepting *sannyāsa*³ (the order of an ascetic). If a man has no son, he can perform his own Śrāddha, and be thus absolved from that obligation. The Śrāddha so performed is called *Jīvat-śrāddha*⁴ (i. e. śrāddha performed while in life). Hemādri and other authorities think that this is to be performed by a man who has nobody else to perform it; but Baudhāyana is of opinion that a man having such relatives, &c. may yet perform his own śrāddha,⁵ but that he cannot perform his own Sapīṇḍana. While the above is undoubtedly the Dharmasāstra as regards sal-10 vation, the popular tradition and belief joined to immemorial usage is strong that the begetting of a son is a moral obligation⁶; and failing that, adoption is desirable.

The above considerations in regard to the performance of śrāddha and its substitutes will show whether adoption is or can, according to strict Dharmasāstra law, be a peremptory duty in the sense in which such a thing is now understood by our Civil Courts. So far as the performance of the śrāddha is concerned, adoption cannot be said to be a peremptory duty; because there are so many other ways to attain the same object as that for which the performance of a śrāddha is 20 intended.⁷ It is true that when a son is born or is adopted, he is enjoined to perform śrāddha as one of his religious duties.⁸ But if there be no son, the same object can be otherwise sufficiently attained. So that when a man gets a son either by marriage or by adoption, that son is by his religious law bound to perform his parent's śrāddhas—both of his father and of his mother. But conversely a man or his wife is not religiously bound in the same manner to beget a son or to adopt one for the purposes of the performance of their or his bráddhas alone. Both marriage and adoption are ceremonies to be performed according to the usages of the people. The mode of performance of both depends on custom; and both are irrevocable when once duly performed.

It is sometimes loosely said that a childless Hindu is bound to adopt a son if at all anxious for his own salvation, and that what is required to be done for that end is not optional with him, but an imperative obligation.¹ But this is a very superficial view of the Hindu Law. Atri's text² and the other two passages (one from the Aitareya Bráhmaṇa, and the other from the Taittirīya Kṛishṇa Yajurveda) are merely arthaváda (phrases declaratory of the virtues, &c. arising from particular things); otherwise these texts being literally followed, we may have to go below the Nairs of Malabar!

Again, if it were an imperative obligation, adoption would, like the upanayana, be one of the nitya (certain) ceremonies. But it cannot be so. For even marriage from which an aurasa (natural born, lit. fed from the breasts) son is expected is not a nitya ceremony. Nárāyaṇa-
20 bhaṭṭa in the Prayogaratna says :—

अत्र गर्भाधानाद्युपनयनान्ता एव सर्वेषां नियताः । न तु स्नानाद्याः । तेन ब्रह्मचर्यादेव प्रव्रजेदित्यादि न विरुध्यते ॥

Translation :—From the Garbhádána up to the upanayana [the ceremonies] are appointed for all; not so the (ceremonies) beginning with Snána or samāvartana. Thereby the text "brahmacharyádeva-pravrajat," (from the brahmachari's state, one may become a sannyáśi) is not transgressed [l. 2 p. 1 l. 5].

Aitareya Bráhmaṇa; VII. 13, (Haug, vol. This is the broad well-trodden path on which those who have sons walk free from sorrows. Beasts and birds know it, thence they cohabit (even) with their own 40 mothers. Thus he told (Haug, vol. II. p. 462).

Taittirīya (or the Black) Yajur Veda, Ashṭaka VI, Prapáñhaka III, Anuváka
10 :—

Translation :—A Bráhmaṇa on being born becomes a debtor in three obligations to the holy saints, for the duties of a Brahmachárin; to the gods for sacrifice : to his forefathers for offspring. Or he who has a son, is absolved from debt.

Again, Nīlakaṇṭha in the Samskāra Mayūkha speaks to the same effect :— अथ औपनयनान्तानामावश्यकत्वं न स्नानादीनां । तेन यमिच्छेत् तदावसेदुन्नक्षत्राद्यदि प्रज्जेदित्यादि संगच्छते ॥ Translation :—Hence the essentialness of [ceremonies ending with] the Upanayana, and not of the Snāna and the rest [arises]. Therefore [the 'texts'] that which he wishes he may enter, or 'from the brahmachārīn's state he may become a Sannyāsin, &c. are consistent with one another (p. 9, l. 80).

The Vedic passage from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has not been properly translated by Mr. Sutherland,¹ and the preceding remarks of Nanda Paṇḍita also require revision. Thus पुत्रोत्पादनविधेर्नित्यता is rendered into "for the precept enjoining the production of a son being 10 positive." This is not correct. It should be the "rule for begetting a son being nitya (constant or invariable)." The word positive is misleading. We can now at once see whether what follows are Vidhi vākyaṇi (rules), and in what sense, and further whether they are obligatory or optional will be the next question. All the above verses from the Vedas are a part of the story of Rājā Harischandra, and they are pure arthavāda (commendatory verses); and they are in no sense a vidhi (rule), either nitya (every-day act), or naimittika (act to be done on certain occasions). Both these kinds of actions are in one sense nitya (certain), as opposed to kāmya (done for a particular 21 object). Thus sandhyā (the daily prayers) is nitya (of daily occurrence), while uparāgaśnāna (bathing during an eclipse) is naimittika (on account of a certain event). But both are certain, and therefore nitya in one sense though not in another. Marriage is purely kāmya (with a particular object), and as Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa and Nīlakaṇṭhabhaṭṭa and other authorities have stated, its performance is perfectly optional. Thus the Bhāgavata Purāṇa² distinctly rules that abstinence or celibacy is desirable, although inasmuch as sexual desire is nitya (natural),³ its regulation is to be effected by marriage. The same conclusion is also clear from the fact 8 that among the twice-born classes, the performance of the upanayana is essential, and if it be not performed up to a certain time, the man becomes a Vrātya,⁴ and he must perform Vrātya-stoma sacrifice for his redemption.⁵ Such is not the case with marriage. Both on the texts, and on the authority of digest-writers as well as on general principles, it is thus clear that marriage is a kāmya rite which may be performed at the option of the individual.¹ If this be so, adoption, which is but a secondary mode for attaining the same end, is necessarily a kāmya and not a nitya ceremony, in the sense in which Nanda Paṇḍita uses it; and it is therefore not essential or peremptory. The Dattaka Mañjari² after discussing the whole question arrives at the conclusion that the making of putra-pratinidhi (a substituted son), such as a Dattaka son, is essentially a kāmya ceremony.

In its very nature therefore it cannot be obligatory in its performance in the sense in which it is now understood by European writers.³

² The Dattaka Mañjari (a work of Bālkrishna, son of Devabhadra Dīkshita, surnamed Paṇḍitkara) concludes this subject in the following words:—

तस्मादन्वयव्यतिरेकाभ्यां निरुक्तपिण्डोदकक्रियाहेतुकः दत्तवाक्यैर्वहितः पुत्रप्रतिनिधिः काम्य एव ।

Translation:—Therefore both by an anvaya (an affirmative proposition) and Vyati-
20 reka (a negative proposition), [the act of securing] a substitute of a son enjoined by the said texts for [securing] the offering of the necessary [libations of] food and water, is optional. The motive in the present case should be taken to be the desire [of the adopter] that the offering [the libation of] food and water to three ancestors, including himself, may be made by the succedaneous son, who will have priority over persons like the widow authorized [to perform funeral rites], and who will possess the qualities mentioned in texts like [the following]: 'The sonship [or filial duty] of a son [lies] in three [things]; obeying the commands [of the father] during his lifetime, feeding [the Brāhmanas] on the anniversary of his death; and offering [a libation of] food at Gayā.'

30 The same result is deducible from the remarks of Krishnabhaṭṭa, commentator on the Nirṇayasindhu, namely, that an adoption is for a perceptible object. Thus in discussing the question of the necessity of permission to a widow in the matter of adoption, he adduces the following argument in support of his conclusion that the permission refers to a wife, and not to a widow, thus:—किञ्च पुत्रदानं नादृष्टार्थमिति स्पष्टमेव पुत्रप्रतिनिधीनाहुः क्रियालोपाप्मन्नीषिणः इति वाक्ये क्रियाङ्गप्रभयात्मकहेतुपादानात् । Translation:—Again, it is clear that the gift of a son is not for an adṛishṭa (unseen or spiritual) purpose; for in the text '[These] the wise declare to be the substitutes of a son [to be accepted] out of the fear of funeral rites failing,' there is a reason assigned [for securing succedaneous sons], viz., the fear of funeral rites failing.

40 ³ For this well known proposition of the Dharmasāstra, see the following amongst other authorities:—

The Bhagavat-gītā chap. xvii., v. 2:—

काम्यानां कर्मणां न्यासं संशयसं कथयो विदुः ॥ सर्वकर्मफलत्यागं प्राहुस्त्यागं विप्रकथाः ॥ २ ॥

Taittirīya Śraṇyaka, 10th Prapāṭhaka, 10th Anuvāka, 21st Rich. (pages 816, 817, Calcutta ed.) —

न कर्मणा न प्रजया धनैर् न त्यागेनैके अमृतत्वमाप्तव्यः ॥

Adhyātma Bāmānyaka, Uttara Kāṇḍa chap. v., v. 21:—

आ तैत्तिरीयवृत्तिराह सादरं न्यासं यज्ञस्तामिलकर्मणां स्फुटम् । एतादित्याह च यजिनां वृत्तिर्मानं विमोक्षाय न कर्मसाधनम् ॥ २१ ॥

This being so on the authorities, it would be useful to look at the matter in its other aspects. If the rite of adoption were obligatory, a husband could not, so far as his worldly interests go, prohibit his wife from adopting. But it is now held that he can do so.¹ For a man being held free to dispose of his property by will, he may so far affect the descent of that property, that by prohibiting his wife to adopt, he may prevent a son adopted after such a prohibition from succeeding to his own property. It seems clear however on the authorities that the effect of his prohibition cannot go further. Because, above all authorities, rises the religious authority ; and, as will be seen further on, 10 the husband's prohibition in regard to all virtuous acts would be nugatory. If therefore the wife or widow adopts, the gift and acceptance be completed, and the subsequent religious ceremonies be performed, the adoption will be good religiously, and will regulate the descent of the widow's property and also that of the collaterals. Again, if adoption were peremptory, or obligatory, as it is sometimes described, a widow could be compelled to adopt, where her husband should happen to have enjoined his wife to do so. But it has been held, and I think rightly, that a widow in such circumstances could not be so compelled.²

In regard to the question of prohibition, the matter may also be 20 usefully viewed from another stand-point. There are certain religious acts in regard to which the Hindu wife or widow would be bound to disobey her husband ; and there are other religious acts in regard to which she would be justified by the Śāstras, if she did disobey him. Thus, if a twice-born were to prohibit his wife from performing the Upanayana of a son, the wife would be bound by the Dharmaśāstra to perform the ceremony in defiance of her husband. The caste-usage would support her, and she could charge the family estate with defraying the proper expenses attendant on the ceremony. Because, if after a certain period, the Upanayana remained unperformed, the boy would 30 become patita (degraded), and be expelled from his caste ;³ or going still further, a twice-born Hindu would himself become liable to expulsion from his caste or class, if he left his son's Upanayana unperformed after a certain time.

But in regard to other religious acts like marriage, the performance of which though productive of religious merits is optional, she would be justified in setting aside her husband's commands in order to carry out those of their religion. Thus she could perform Śrāddhas, go on pilgrimages to holy places, or hear the Purāṇas read or distribute proper Dāna (gifts), even if she have been commanded by her late 40 husband not to do so. For, a Hindu, who would counsel his wife to disobey her religion, would be so far treated by the Dharmaśāstra as a man of unsound mind. In matters of adoption, it would be equally so ; for adoption in so far as it would directly tend to increase religious acts and ceremonies, would be a commendable act, the performance of which the Hindu religion would encourage.

In reference to this part of the subject, a few more facts must be noted. Marriage is a Saṁskāra, though an optional one, whereas adoption by itself is not a Saṁskāra but only an auxiliary religious ceremony, for creating a substitute-son. Yājñavalkya does not mention the begetting of a son amongst the things to be performed by a grihastha (householder) (chap. I. vv. 97—128) ; and the subject of adoption is treated by him in the portion relating to Vyavahāra (civil law), where he considers the substitutes of a natural-born son ; and he enumerates the adopted as one of them. Manu Smṛiti does the same. The subject of the adopted son is treated of there in chapter IX., whereas all the Saṁskāra ceremonies, whether essential or non-essential, are described in chapters 2, 3, 4 and 6.¹

To return : the next question for consideration is—Who can adopt ?
 20 My answer is that so far as the texts and usages go, any person, male or female, may adopt. Atri² and Manu³ counsel adoption for the performance of certain Śrāddha ceremonies and for the perpetuation of the name. A son so adopted is necessary for both the husband as well as the wife, because all the funeral obsequies are required for both. And if the object of the performance of those obsequies is to be attained by other means, those means are equally open to both : what a widow can perform for her salvation, the same can be performed by the widower. There is no difference whatever in that respect between the two. As regards Śrāddhas, the son serves both. The widow in making 30 the adoption gets a son, who stands to her in a filial relation as well as to her deceased husband. When both are living, the husband is the principal mover. The wife may or may not join in the ceremony. As between the husband and wife, the right of receiving rests with the former ; but if he be patita (fallen), or have become a Sannyāsin (an ascetic), it would appear that the wife would be competent to receive on her own authority just as after the death of the husband. If, however, the husband be neither a patita (fallen) nor a Sannyāsin (ascetic), the wife cannot take in adoption without his permission.

¹ See Vishnu Smṛiti, where adoption is spoken of in chs. xv. and xvii., while 40 Saṁskāras are treated of in chs. xxvii. to xxxiii. ; Vasishṭha Smṛiti—adoption is mentioned in chs. xv. to xvii., after the Saṁskāras in chs. vii. to xii. ; Gautama Smṛiti—adoption in ch. xxix., and Saṁskāras in chs. ii. to ix.

³ Chap. ix., v. 180.

What the wife may not do, the widow can do; for from the very necessity of the case, after the husband's death, the widow requires no such power from her husband. A text of Vasishṭha,¹ which apparently lends color to the opposite view, has been so construed by Gauḍa writers that according to their interpretation a widow can, under no circumstances, make an adoption except with the express anumati (permission) of her husband. This however is not correct. The text applies to the wife and not to the widow; and so it has been construed by the Nibandhakāras and other writers who are followed on this side of India. Thus Kamalākara in the *Nirṇayasindhu*² after quoting the above 10 text of Vasishṭha observes:—इदं च भर्तृसत्त्वे । अन्यथा दद्यान्माता पिता वा यं स पुत्रो दत्तमः स्मृत इति वस्तुमासवचोविरोधः स्यात् । दानं प्रतिग्रहोपलक्षणम् । Translation:—This [text applies] where the husband is living; otherwise there will be a contradiction [between this text and] the text of Vatsa, and Vyāsa [to the effect that], 'he is to be known as a given son, who is given by his mother or father.' Gift here is illustrative of acceptance.

Therefore his father and mother have power to give away, sell or abandon him. But no one should give or receive an only son; for he [represents] the continuity of the forefathers. Nor should a woman either give or receive a son without her husband's permission."

Here [i. e. in reference to this] it is said that inasmuch as the taking of a son [in adoption] by a female without her husband's permission is prohibited, a son 41 adopted by a widow whose husband died without giving permission does not become a

- [valid] dattaka (adopted son). [But] that cannot be; for even there, [i. e. in the case of the husband dying without giving permission], his [i. e. the husband's] permission being based on Śāstra (law) cannot be absent, inasmuch as the necessity of adoption by a sonless man who has no [prospect of] salvation is [expressly] enjoined. It cannot be said that in this way [the words] 'without permission' became nugatory, inasmuch as the permission based on law [i. e. arising out of a legal presumption] being imperative in all cases, [the above prohibition] will have no scope. For, that prohibition has scope in the case of the wife of a Mumukshu (one weaned from the world and wishing nothing but emancipation), or of one who has a son by another wife; there 10 being no possibility of the husband's permission [of adoption in such a case]. Such a woman cannot adopt without her husband's permission; because all that a son does, such as Śrāddha (oblation) and the like is [equally] done by the son of a cotemporary wife, who in accordance with the text "if one out of several co-wives get a son, Manu declares that the rest become mothers by means of that son," is useful to both [the mothers]. That son being legitimate is a principal one to the father, and a secondary one to her [i. e. the stepmother] just as an adopted son is [to the father as well]. Therefore the substance [of the prohibition] is that such a woman cannot adopt another without her husband's permission. In reality just as the Mitākshara and the Smṛiti Chandrikā have interpreted the text "if one out of several brothers get a son, Manu
 20 declares the rest to be fathers by means of that son," as enjoining that where it is possible to get a brother's son as the secondary adopted son, no other should be accepted as the substitute of a son; so, similarly, the words 'without the husband's permission' here mean that while the husband is alive, the wife should not on her own authority adopt a son not approved of by him [i. e. the husband]. After he is dead, the permission of those alone will be necessary upon whom [the widow is] dependent. In this way the prohibition is for worldly reasons. Therefore even though the husband died without giving permission, an adoption by the widow would not be objectionable.

Anantadeva in the Saṃskārakaustubha goes still further. He says:—

(Saṃskārakaustubha, leaf 45, pp. 1 and 2.)

Translation :—In reality this precept (viz., the text of Vasistha which says that a woman cannot give or receive a son without the command of her husband, should be understood by the intelligent not as a prohibition but as intended to require a command [of some one] for adoption in the case of a woman who has had no permission from her husband; inasmuch as there can be no prohibition of what has been commanded, [as the adoption of a son is], owing to the failure to adopt being declared sinful by the text, "there is no higher world for a sonless man," &c, and inasmuch again as [treating the precept] as a Paryuddesa (a negative proposition) would imply a Lakṣaṇā (metaphorical interpretation).

It cannot at all be objected that a childless widow can have no right to adopt a son 10 in so far as in the absence of her husband she is dependent on his kinsmen, in accordance with [the following words], "there is no independence to a woman;" and "in his absence kinsmen,"¹ &c. Yājñavalkya says:—"A female shall be protected by her father in her maidenhood, by the husband in her married state, by the sons in her old age, and in their absence by kinsmen. [Thus] a female is never independent"; and the author of the Mitākṣharā in commenting thereon says that the father shall guard his daughter until her marriage against the doing of something prohibited. Thus the meaning of the text as well as the comment shows that a female during the several guardianships at different periods of her life is restrained from the doing of something prohibited, and not that there is any restraint on her in respect of the observance of what 20 is commanded [by the śāstras]. In no country is a female's dependence on kinsmen ever allowed by any learned men to restrain her in the observance of Nitya and Kāmya Vratas; whereas according to the proposed interpretation, widows having no kinsmen would have no authority to observe Vratas and the like without the [previous] permission of the king in accordance with the text cited by the Mitākṣharā, viz., "on failure of both sides [that is kinsmen on the father's and husband's sides], the king is the supporter and lord of females." There is no distinction between Vratas and the like and the adoption of a son; but [in spite of this], much learning has been displayed on this subject by people devoid of any knowledge of the Dharmaśāstra.

Nor can it be said that want of authority results from the unfitness [to recite] the 30 Mantrās [required] for acceptance; for her right [to adopt] being determined to exist in the aforementioned manner, whether there be permission or no, she must be presumed [to be entitled] to recite mantras as in the case of the Rathakāra.² Thus [the allegation that] the adoption [by a widow] though she have permission is [void as being] without holy mantras is refuted. Therefore a son adopted by a widow does by all means become the taker of wealth, and Vṛtti. Further, he who destroys a Brāhmaṇa's Vṛtti [by withholding his assent to adoption] does so at his own risk in accordance with the text "he who acts adversely to [the continuance of] a Brāhmaṇa's Vṛtti shall be a prey for many years to insects feeding on filth." No more need be said 40 [on this subject].

In the Datta-Darpaṇa following Kaustubha it is said :—

तथाच भवेन्न्यायाः सधवायमेवोपहीनत्वादुक्तमकारेण कस्त्वस्वसत्त्वे वा विधवायाः पुनस्वीकारे न कान्यनुपपत्तिः ॥ fied [literally, exhausted] in the case of the wife, there is no difficulty in the way of the widow receiving a son, whether there is permission or not, as above explained.

The Dattaka Chandrikā of Kubera (p. 51, lines 8—11) holds that “the अनुमति (permission) is to the wife while the husband is alive; and she can adopt without such permission, when the husband is ‘proshita (gone abroad), or is dead.” Krishṇabhaṭṭa in his comment on the Nīrṇayasindhu supports Kamalākara by refuting the reasoning of the Gauḍa writers. The Mayūkha¹ follows Kamalākara.

The only work now quoted on the other side is the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita,² whose three arguments, if they can be so called, have been fully answered by the above writers. Besides, I have elsewhere shown historically that Nanda Paṇḍita’s work was not known to the Śāstris in this Presidency until 1827 as noted by Mr. Borradaile. That Nīlakaṇṭha and Kamalākara have not, in their numerous works, ever specially noticed it, shows that it was of no importance whatever in their time amongst the Dākṣhinātya (Southern) community. Anantadeva and his successors answer the objections of the Gauḍas: but even they do not notice the Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita by name. And I find that Surajrām Śāstri, so late as 1845, says distinctly while writing in reference to this very question, that though Nanda Paṇḍita’s Dattaka Mīmāṃsā says the widow has no right, still the aforesaid works (Vīramitrodaya, Mayūkha, Kaustubha, &c.) say that she has the right, and that the Vyavahāra (practice) is going on accordingly.

It appears to me that some confusion has been created by very loose and indefinite writing regarding the duties of a son; and the performance of Śrāddhas, &c. by the adopted son. Sir T. Strange says³:—“The better reason, therefore, perhaps is, that the necessity of a son to celebrate the funeral rite regards the man, rather than the woman, who depends less for redemption upon such means; so that, whenever 80 a woman, duly authorized, adopts, it is on her husband’s account, and for his sake, not her own.” Mr. Justice Strange goes further, and says:—“Unmarried males of whatsoever age, and females, whether unmarried or married, are not in danger of Put. No adoption on their account is hence necessary; neither would such adoption be valid.”⁴

For these propositions no authorities are quoted by Mr. Justice Strange. Sir T. Strange quotes Manu, chap. V., v. 160. But this verse is intended to dissuade a female who has lost one husband from marrying again or having recourse to nīyoga; and it has nothing to do either with adoption or the performance of obsequial rites. Colebrooke (468), who is referred 40 to next, does not refer to the subject of Śrāddha, &c. The note at page 91 of volume 2 of Sir T. Strange by Mr. Ellis, which is next cited, is equally loose. It says: "to render it [adoption] beneficial to the husband (for the widows can derive no advantage from it)," &c. All this is a very unsatisfactory mode of stating the Dharmaśāstra. The Gayā Śrāddha of the mother is as necessary as that of the father; and the two spots where that Śrāddha is performed, are distinct—the one is in Behar and the other in Gujarātha. The statement of Mr. Sutherland is also not correct. The Mahālaya Śrāddha and Tīrtha and such other Śrāddhas of both the father and mother must be performed together; but the annual Śrāddhas of the mother and the other two female ancestors must be performed separately on the anniversary day of the mother's death, just as those of the father, grandfather and the great grandfather are performed on the anniversary day of the father's death. Moreover, in the Nāndī Śrāddhas the mother's pārvana comes first, then the father's, and lastly, that of the mother's father. This confusion of the mother's position and her necessity as to Śrāddha has, it appears to me, led to a complete misunderstanding of the whole subject of adoption by females.

To sum up: a Śrāddha produces equal benefit to both the father and the mother. When there is a son, he must perform it for both, and 20 does so perform it, as all the Śrāddha works and our current practice shows. If there be no son, a man can follow several ways to get his own salvation, or may adopt a son both for getting his Śrāddha performed and for the perpetuation of his name. The same is the case with the man's wife. During his lifetime, her identity is sunk in her husband's. After his death, she may follow the several ways above indicated for her salvation as well as his, or both follow those ways and also adopt a son who will be her own as well as her husband's son.

A Brahmachārin would be competent to adopt, because he has the same interest in securing the performance of obsequies and the per- 30 petuation of his family name as a sonless married man has. There is nothing in the Dharmaśāstra to disqualify him from the performance of the rite of adoption, as there is in the case of a sannyāsin.

In the view of the nature of adoption already given, minority cannot be a bar to adoption; for, although adoption does confer temporal benefits, it cannot on that account be considered a matter of a civil contract. It is a ceremony like marriage, and it confers temporal as well as spiritual benefits.

The next question is, who is the proper person to give in adoption. This is answered by Manu chap. IX. v. 168.¹ The giver must be (1) 40

¹ Manu, IX., 168 :—"माता पिता वा दयातां यमङ्गिः पुत्रमापदि ॥ सङ्गं मीतिसंयुक्तं स ज्ञेयो दत्तः पुत्रः ॥"

Translation :—He whom his father or mother gives to another as his son, the donee being in distress, provided the boy be of the same class, affectionately disposed, is considered as a son given.

the father with the mother, (2) or the father alone, or (3) the mother if the father be dead,¹ or have given his assent, or be incapable of giving his assent. No third person seems, on the above authorities, to have the powers of giving.² It has been held³ that the power of giving may be delegated. But some question⁴ the propriety of this. Usage must decide, and it seems to favor delegation.

The widow's power of giving in her own right has, by some, been questioned, but, as it seems to me, on very insufficient grounds. In point of fact, even the texts by themselves are more clearly in favour 10 of her competency to give, than her ability to take, and all the Digests held authoritative on this side of India, are equally pronounced in her favour. Nanda Paṇḍita himself, though he would wish for permission for a widow to take, is obliged to hold that Manu's text being express in favour of the mother or the father being able to give, the widow has the right to give.⁵

The Dattaka Chandrikā too⁶ supports the right of the wife as well as of the widow to give on the authority of Manu and Yājñavalkya; but he qualifies the right by the prohibition of the husband, and supports the husband's authority to prohibit by the above cited text of Vasishṭha.
20 But as the text of Vasishṭha is opposed to Manu's text, it (the former) cannot prevail. For the Veda enjoins obedience to Manu above all other Smṛitis. Āṅgīras says⁷ that that Smṛiti which is opposed to Manu, is extinguished. All the digest-writers quoted by me above also apply the text of Vasishṭha to a Sadhavú (wife), and not to a Vidhará (widow).

⁵ Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, p. 19, Mr. Sutherland's note 12 (Stokes' H. L. B. p. 573) is not correct. The proper reading is Mānava and not Gāṛgī. This reading moreover removes all the inconsistencies in the three paragraphs noted by Mr. Sutherland. The story of Gāṛgī, a son of Viśvāmitra, who was offered for sale by his mother, and from whose sale, king Satyavrata induced his mother to desist, by offering her and her 40 children sufficient food to live upon, is given in the Devi-Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha, 10th Adhyāya. And it is useful as showing that in distress a mother could sell her children when her husband was away.

The father and mother in the above remarks must be the boy's father and mother. For Krishnabhaṭṭa says that no other person can give. A grandfather could not according to these texts give away his grandson. Nor could a man or a woman after once taking a son give him away.

The person to be adopted is the next subject for consideration. As already stated, it appears to me that selection of the adoptee has 10 always been a matter regulated by the will of the adopter. According to the Vedas and Manu, it is clearly so still; and the changes recommended during the middle period have nowhere obtained the binding force of law. Thus beginning with Manu (IX., 168), it is entirely a matter of discretion with the adopter whom he or she should adopt. The several restrictions that have since been suggested in works on that subject are later developments of Smṛiti-makers, who wished to liken the substitute son to the original son as far as possible according to their notions. Thus, the earliest law-giver, viz. Manu, has given no direction whatever to fetter the adopter 20 in the matter of selection, save that the adoptee should be sadṛśa (proper or worthy). I am not sure that the interpretation of this term as a person of the same Jāti (caste) suggested by Kullūka and others is the one contemplated by Manu; for it is not quite clear why, if according to Manu, a Brāhmaṇa could beget a Kshatriya son on a Kshatriyá wife, or a Vaiśya son on a Vaiśyá wife, he should not be able to adopt a son of either of those classes. Again, Manu (as interpreted by Vijñāneśvara)¹ recommends the adoption of the son of a brother without stating whether that brother should be of the same or of a different class. The restriction of jāti (caste) was unmeaning, so long as intermarriages 30 between the four classes were allowed by law; and the restriction only came to have a different meaning when such intermarriages began to fall into desuetude, and were ultimately discontinued.² It is clear that as we leave Manu behind, and approach our own times, the restriction as to Sadṛśa (proper or similar) has come to mean one of the same class; and that one of a different class is not considered proper for adoption. Within the class itself, some Smṛiti and Digest writers have laid down rules for regulating the discretion of the adopter in the matter of selection. Thus a brother's son is declared to be the first eligible adoptee. Failing him, a Sagotra-Sapinda, an 40 asagotra-sapiṇḍa, a sagotra-asapiṇḍa, and an asagotra-asapiṇḍa are said to be eligible in order. The recommendation of the brother's son is made to rest on a far-fetched reference to Manu ch. IX. v. 182,¹ which has nothing to do with adoption; and the order of eligibility after the son as above stated is evolved by digest writers out of Sāunaka's text,² which says that a sapiṇḍa should have preference before an asapiṇḍa. All these texts and comments, however, are simply deemed by the community recommendations, in no way obligatory on the adopter. To use the words of Sir T. Strange,³ "the selection is 10 finally a matter of conscience and discretion with the adopter, not of absolute presumption, rendering invalid an adoption of one not being precisely him who upon spiritual considerations ought to have been preferred." Mr. Sutherland says that the right of the brother's son to a preference is admitted, and may be regarded as a received rule of law. He cites no authorities for this position; and there is none in force in India. Happily the question has now been set at rest in conformity with the usages of the people by the Privy Council decision in the case of Śrīmatī Uma Devi v. Gokoolanand Das Mahapatra.⁴

Besides the above restrictions on adoption, there are others that have 20 been suggested. These may all be well grouped into four divisions, in reference to (a) the class, (b) the age, (c) the relationship of the adopted with the adopter, and (d) the status of the adoptee in his natural family.

I shall now consider each division separately, and trace their history, and show how far they are now observed by the people.

As regards class, it is said that the adopter and the adopted should both belong to the same class.⁵ This provision is regarded only so far that its violation would not nullify the adoption but would deprive the adopted of his right to inherit. Vṛiddha-Yājñavalkya directly counsels the adoption of one of a different class, when one of the same
30 class cannot be had. Such a son can only perpetuate the line, but he can neither inherit the property nor offer the Piṇḍa.⁶ Viewing this matter historically, one may here mark the gradual development of this limitation. Manu simply uses the word sudṛśa (worthy or similar) to qualify the son to be given: in the original text there is no reference to class. Vasishṭha says he should be ādāre bāndhavam, which Kṛishṇabhaṭṭa interprets by सन्निहितदेशवर्तिकादिकम् ज्ञातिकुलज्ञौ [Translation:—One whose father, &c. are residents of a neighbouring country, and whose family and character is known.]

⁶ See Dattaka Chandrikā, p. 49, lines 4—6.

Śaunaka¹ and Kātyāyana² say that the adoptee should be a savarna (one of the same varṇa or class). This would imply that the adopter had only to attend to the four divisions of the Āryāns. Yājñavalkya goes one step further, and introduces the word *Jāti*³ (caste), instead of varṇa (class). The Samskārakaustubha goes further still, and says that the adopter should not only be one of the same varṇa and Jāti; but one of the same sub-division of a Jāti (caste) based on the difference of domicile such as Gurjara, Mahārāṣṭra, &c.⁴ He is also followed by Gopināthabhaṭṭa and Krishṇabhaṭṭa. No specific text is cited for this extension; but the statement is perfectly consonant to 10 current usage.

A violation of the above provision does not, as I have said before, nullify the adoption altogether; but it only renders it less efficacious, and gives the adoptee a right to maintenance from the adopter's estate.⁵

As regards age, there is no restriction whatever. The only text restricting age is one said to be from Kālikā Purāṇa; but Nīlakaṇṭha considers the said passages to be spurious.⁶ Ananta-deva in the Samskārakaustubha also disbelieves their genuineness.⁷ But he goes further, and, assuming them to be genuine, shows how they are to be applied in support of the adoption. He concludes thus : अतः दूतसंस्कारोपि पञ्चवर्षाधिकबालोपि दत्तको भवतीति सिद्धम्.

Translation :—Therefore a boy above five years of age whose ceremonies have been performed, can become a Dattaka (given): this is established.

The Dattaka Mīmāṃsā favours the genuineness of the above passage (see pages 20—25 Dattaka Mīmāṃsā). The Dattaka Chandrikā like the Samskārakaustubha doubts their authenticity, but shows that when properly interpreted, they contain no restriction of age (see Dattaka Chandrikā, page 54, line 5 and p. 56 line 15.). Kamalākara in the Nirṇayasindhu says that a boy of more than five years may be given, if he be willing to be given in adoption. This shows that he 80 upholds such adoptions in spite of the Kālikā Purāṇa on the authority of the Vedic⁸ texts. In his Vivāda Tāṇḍava, the Sapinda relationship of one so adopted is laid down; and this assumes the adoption as being duly made. Kamalākara thinks, however, that the samskāras (ceremonies) of the adopted should not have been made before the adoption.

Krishṇabhaṭṭa, however, in his commentary on the Nirṇayasindhu clears up the whole question, and decides in favour of all such adoptions on general grounds. He shows that the passage from the Kālikā Purāṇa as above noted is spurious; but that even if it were genuine, he points out that as it is given by some writers, it is incomplete. He supplies the omissions, and gives the complete passage as he found it,¹ and states that it refers to a son to be adopted by a king as a successor in his sovereignty and not to an ordinary son. Such a son should, he says, have his samskāras (ceremonies) performed by the adopter.

- 10 But except the incapacity to succeed to a Rājā, if the ceremonies be not performed, the adopted is in no other respect a dāsa or a son of any inferior status than a born-son. Krishṇabhaṭṭa himself shows that according to the Vedas, a man whose upanayana has been performed, may be adopted. Śunahśepa was so adopted. His upanayana had been performed; for if it had not been so performed, he could not have become a dvija (twice-born), and would not have been able to repeat Vedic Mantras.² That he did repeat such Mantras may be seen from the Rig-Veda Saṁhita³ and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.⁴ As the Vedas themselves sanction this, and the practice has always gone on in conformity thereto; all such adoptions are perfectly valid.⁵

⁵ Krishṇabhaṭṭa's work is in manuscript, and I therefore subjoin the passage referring to this subject. He therein says distinctly that a son whose samskāras have been performed, and who has had a son born to him, whether he be of the same or of a different gotra, may be adopted :—

Thus it will appear that the highest authority of texts as well as of digests is against restricting the age of the adoptee to any particular year. It may be noted, however, that the people generally are inclined to favour the adoption of one whose Upanayana has not been performed; just as they would rather get their children married when children. But these are mere sentiments; for cases of grown up boys being adopted are common, and they are considered perfectly valid. The fiction of sonship would seem to demand that the adoptee should be younger than the adopter, so as to make the former पुत्रवृद्ध (one in regard to whom the idea of sonship would be worthy). 10

The next question is the relationship of the two parties, the adopted and the adopter. In regard to this, I regret to observe that some courts have fallen into most curious errors, in several instances following in the wake of two modern writers, whose writings themselves, it may further be said, have been misunderstood and mistranslated. Before proceeding to notice those errors, I may remark that the law on this subject is very simple. All that the people require is that the boy should look like a born-son. He should be a junior in rank and years to the adopter, so that when adopted, he may be

10 able naturally to take up his place in the Hindu family and behave like a son. If I were writing for a purely Hindu community, I should stop here. But such not being the case, I must enlarge to a certain extent on this point. A Hindu has to bow before his elders on stated occasions. He has to beg alms; he has to make namaskāras (low salutations); he has to observe certain forms in addressing letters, in taking seats, &c. &c. This is his position in the family so long as he is a junior in domestic rank. The son to be adopted must be such as to fall in naturally into his place when adopted. Thus, if he were the uncle (maternal or paternal), he would not be considered fit for adoption. For, his

20 position towards the adopter would be changed unnaturally. But if there be a younger brother, he can be adopted by his elder brother. Because the elder brother is looked upon as a father.¹ Such adoptions are considered as quite proper by the community. They have been so from time immemorial. In Mr. Steele's time, such adoptions were an accepted institution just as they now are amongst the people.² Since Mr. Steele's time, however, our courts have sometimes had their attention called to Mr. Sutherland's synopsis, and the deductions

² Steele's Summary, 1st Ed., p. 51. From my own knowledge of the greater part of the Hindu community of this Presidency, and from enquiries made during a long time, I can confirm every word of what Mr. Nelson writes in the following paragraph in regard to Madras :—

"Judging from my own experience, I do not believe that the people at large, including our Brahmans, have any the slightest knowledge of the existence of the doctrine under notice : and on the other hand, I do believe that, as a general rule, those tribes and castes of the Madras Province who practise adoption at all, adopt indifferently

The circle of Śāstris in Poona, learned in the Vedas and Śāstras, and revered by, and the ornament of, rulers.

The humble greetings of their protege Narayanarao Rāmachandra Chobhe, inhabitant of city Poona, Peth and Kasba [the same], whose request is as follows:—

My [paternal] grandfather Balaji Siddhēśvara adopted the eldest son of his father's brother's grandson Kāśī Bin Sonakopant Chobhe, otherwise called Kāśī Raghunātha Chobhe, [who was himself] the grandson of Dādopant, after the upanayana [of the said son was performed]. The name of that [adopted son] was Rāmachandrarao. His marriage and the rest of the ceremonies took place subsequently. He died on the

- 30 fourteenth lunar-day of the dark fortnight of Bhādrapada Śake 1774. In accordance with the injunction for adoption left by him, Jānakībāī, the senior widow of [the said] Rāmachandra Ballāla, after [performing] due ceremonies adopted me, who was the youngest son of Kāśī Raghunātha Chobhe, on Saturday the ninth lunar day of the dark fortnight of Āśvina [Śake 1774]. Now Rāmachandrarao, [originally] the eldest son of Kāśī Raghunātha, became, on being adopted by Bālājī Siddhēśvara, his [i. e. Kāśī's] Bandhu, [one of the rank of a brother, i. e. a father's cousin's son in the present instance]. At the time when I was adopted, I was [related] to Jānakībāī as her nephew. I was born after Rāmachandrarao was adopted out of his natural family; so that there was no relationship of brothers [between us]. This being the case, I
- 40 became the son and heir of Rāmachandra Ballāla according to śāstras; and accordingly in the proceedings now before the Meherban Judge of Zilla Poona, about the certificate of heirship, Mathurābāī and Lakshimbāī, the junior co-widows of Jānakībāī, have presented applications acknowledging me [as heir]. The past and present instances of the adoption [as son] of a brother in the original family [of birth] are:—[1] Nānāsahēb Sachivā adopted Vāmanarao Raosaheb, [2] Ābāsahēb Purandare adopted

Mádhavarao Nílakanṭha Purandare, who is still alive, and enjoying a Jahagira from Government, [3] Yaśodábái, senior widow of Tátyásahab Chandrachuda, adopted Yaśavantarao, after consultation of the śástras. Now [the questions are] [1] if such adoptions have taken place, are they repugnant to the śástras? [2] Can the son [so] adopted and the adoption be null? [3] And whether the [said] adopted son is entitled to all the rights in the immoveable and moveable property [of the adopting father]? Do consider these [questions] according to śástras, and state your opinions [supported] by authorities from the śástras, and subscribed [by yourselves]. Be this known. Dated Wednesday the 2nd lunar day of the bright fortnight of Márgaśíraha Śaka 1776 in the Samvatsara named Ananda [corresponding to] 2nd November 1854 A.C. What 10 more need be written? Be kind. This is my request.

(Signed) NARAYANARAO RAMCHANDRA CHOBHE

in his own hand.

Reply.

The first recommendation [in the matter of adoption] is that the son to be adopted should be one of the same gotra and a sapiṇḍa, and [preferably] a brother's son. This [i.e. the one under consideration] adoption has taken place in accordance with this [precept]. The adopted son [here] is like a brother's son. Looking in reference to the original family, he is a junior brother, and [even as such] like a son. In this manner the present adoption has taken place according to the śástras, and is unobjectionable. An 20 adoption effected in due conformity with the śástras cannot be annulled. The adopted son will be owner of the immoveable as well as moveable property.

Authorities for this [these are given in Sanskrit]. In respect of the adoption of a son, a brother's son is the first [in eligibility] in accordance with texts like [the following] :—'Of brothers born of the same [parents], if one should get a son, all these brothers become, by means of that son, fathers of a son. So said Manu.' After him, one of the same Gotra and a sapiṇḍa [is eligible] in accordance with the text, 'Brahmapas should adopt a son from among the sapiṇḍas.' Now, a junior brother who is included in [the class of] śyogotra sapiṇḍas (those of the same gotra and sapiṇḍas) is fit for adoption; because a junior brother is like a son as much as a brother's son 30 is, in accordance with texts like 'the eldest brother is like the father.' On the other hand, the eldest brother being like the father is not fit for adoption [by the junior brother]. Besides, no text either from Smṛitis or Purāṇas that is opposed to the adoption of a junior brother is cited in works like the Mayúkhya and the Mitáksharā. Furthermore, the eldest brother being himself an adopted son in the present instance, his junior brother in the original family [i.e. the querist] is like a brother's son, now [i.e. since the adoption of the eldest brother] his original relationship of a brother having ceased. Acceptance of him therefore as an adopted son is decidedly allowable. This adopted son obtains [in virtue of his adoption] the ownership of the whole wealth [immoveable and moveable.] 40

In like manner, is the adoption of a sister's son common amongst the Hindus in this Presidency, amongst all castes and classes. Still more common is the adoption of a dauhitra (daughter's son). These adoptions are perfectly in consonance with the immemorial customs and usages of the people; and it is only within a few years that doubts have been thrown upon them in cases which I shall notice hereafter. So far as regards the doubts and questions that have been raised about the validity of these and other adoptions on the ground of relationship, I must say that all the restrictions which are now being worked out, are 10 unknown to the Hindu law and the native community in these parts. To use the words of Mr. Justice Innes in a recent judgment, while "the consciousness of the people and the practice of every-day life," all tend to support such adoptions, some English writers, and also some recent judgments would make them invalid by wrong analogies and unwarranted generalizations founded on imperfect translations.

To make this clear, I will pass in review all that has been said on the subject by the writers just referred to. Mr. Sutherland, in the year 1821, laid down in his synopsis a rule on this subject to the following effect :—

- 20 "The first and fundamental principle is that the person to be adopted be one who by a legal marriage with his mother might have been the legitimate son of the adopter."¹

Sir Francis W. Macnaughten in 1824, writing in reference to Bengal, speaks as follows :—

"As to the three superior classes, the rule is that they cannot adopt a son whom it would be incest to have begotten, and conversely that they may adopt a son if without incest they could have begotten him."²

Sir Thomas Strange in 1825 adopts the proposition as laid down by Mr. Sutherland, and says :—

- 80 "One with whose mother the adopter could not have legally married must not be adopted; and the exclusion seems to hold applying the principle to the sex where the adoption is by a female."³

Mr. W. H. Macnaughten in 1829 observes :—

"The party adopted should not be the son of one whom the adopter could not have married, such as his sister's son or daughter's son."⁴

Mr. Justice Strange in 1863 says:—

“(84.) According to an original text, the child to be adopted should be such as may be looked upon as ‘the reflection of a son.’ This is held to mean ‘the resemblance of a son,’ or such a one as the adopter might have legally begotten (Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita, v. 16); that is one whose mother he might have legally married (I. 83; Sutherland 223); “(85) Pursuant to this rule a brother, a paternal or maternal uncle, or a daughter’s or sister’s son, could not be adopted (I. 83).”¹

Mr. Grady in 1868 merely reproduces Mr. Sutherland and Sir T. Strange.²

Mr. J. D. Mayne³ in 1878, while adopting the abovementioned rule, 10 notices with disapproval the introduction of another fiction that the adopting mother should be such as could have been married by the natural father of the adopted.⁴ If the original works to which I have referred in this section had been accessible to Mr. Mayne, he would, I feel sure, have demolished the fictions founded on the supposed relationship between the natural and adopting parents of the adopted much better than I have done.

It thus appears that the above proposition about relationship was first started by Mr. Sutherland apparently without any enquiry into the original sources of the law, or the customs of the people, and it was 20 adopted by all the English writers who followed him, except Mr. J. H. Nelson, Judge of Madura, who seems to stand alone in marking the mischief caused in practice by the adoption of the said rule.⁵ Mr. Nelson has successfully exploded the doctrine by showing that if it was at all supported by Sanskrit works, those works were never accepted as works of authority in Madras, “and have not served in an “appreciable degree to guide public opinion as to what ought to be “done and what ought not to be done in the matter of adoption.”⁶

While affirming in respect of this Presidency every word of what he has said in reference to the Madras Presidency, I go further, and hold 30 that the doctrine he speaks of in the above extract is entirely unsupported by authority, and is contradicted by the immemorial custom of the people of this Presidency. The authorities relied on by Mr. Sutherland⁷ in support of the above proposition are the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, sec. V., para. 16, et seq. and the Dattaka Chandrikā, sec. II. para. 8.

These two passages are comments of Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera respectively on the words पुत्रवत्पुत्रः (bearing the resemblance of a son) occurring in the text of Śaunaka cited in the Mayūka.¹ The original passage in the Dattaka Chāndrikā commenting on the above, runs as follows²:—पुत्रच्छाया पुत्रसादृश्यं नियोगादिना स्वयमुत्पादनयोग्यत्वमिति यावत्. Translation :—Putra-chhāyā (son's resemblance or reflection) means the resemblance of the son, or the fitness to be produced by self through niyoga, &c.

The Dattaka Mīmāṃsā on the subject commences by saying—पुत्रच्छाया पुत्रसादृश्यं तच्च नियोगादिना स्वयमुत्पादनयोग्यत्वम्. (Translation :—Putra-chhāyā (son's resemblance or reflection) means resemblance to the son, that is the fitness to be produced by self through niyoga, &c.) and dilates on this by introducing the idea of विरुद्ध सम्बन्ध (contrary relation).³

Speaking briefly, I may say, first, that the above passages are inapplicable to the present age; that they are opposed to the general principles of the law, especially that concerning marriages and adoptions; that there is no ancient authority, legal or historical, for construing Putra-chhāyā-vaham (bearing the resemblance of a son) in Śaunaka's text in the manner in which Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera have done in the above passages; and that there is no other Nibandha writer of note consulted on this side of India or anywhere in the south, supporting this interpretation; secondly, that this construction is opposed to Smṛiti
20 texts; to the distinct views of Nīlakanṭha and Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa and others, and to the known, recorded, and prevailing usages and customs of the people. But reading these passages as they stand, I cannot help remarking that, even assuming for a moment the correctness of the above comments, Mr. Sutherland's rule in the synopsis goes far beyond what he cites as his authorities. He seems to have confounded Niyoga with what he calls "legal marriage."⁴ I may observe, any marriage must be legal according to the Dharmaśāstra, otherwise it cannot be a marriage; so that the addition of the word legal seems superfluous. But leaving that aside, Niyoga is not a marriage at all of any kind whatever;
30 and further, Niyoga presupposes at the least a former betrothal of the woman with whom the said Niyoga is presupposed. Niyoga, strictly speaking, means the raising up of issue on the widow of a deceased by some one on appointment. As a practice, it has been reprobated by Manu.⁵ At no time in India's history was Niyoga ever exalted to the rank of marriage⁶; and it is now a mere fossilized relic of the past.

¹ See Part I. p. 40 line 11 and its translation, Part II. p. 52 ll. 32, 33.

² See p. 52 ll. 2, 4, Chhāyā literally means shade; and may be translated into resemblance or reflection.

³ See p. 26 ll. 6—20.

⁴ Stokes' H. L. B., p. 664.

40 ⁵ Chap. ix., v. 68; vv. 57 to 70 of this chapter give the history of the Niyoga practice which is condemned as fit only for cattle, and as unauthorized by the Vedic texts regarding marriage. See further Kullūka's Comments, l. 158, p. 2, and l. 159, p. 1.

⁶ See Mitākṣharā chap. ii., l. 54. p. 2 l. 13, and its translation by Colebrooke chap. i. sec. 10, para. 12.

Marriage is one of the principal Samskâras amongst the Hindus ; whereas Niyoga is neither a Samskâra nor even a mere inferior popular observance sanctioned by custom. At the best, it was according to Manu a beastly practice, reprobated by the learned, and expressly prohibited in the Kali age.¹ How Mr. Sutherland should have made the mistake of confusing Niyoga with "legal" marriage is to me inexplicable. One explanation that suggests itself is that in the printed original of paragraph 20 at page 591, the words यतः रनियोगः सम्भवति* (with whom sexual connection is possible) are incorrect ; they should be यन्मातरि नियोगः सम्भवति* (with whose mother Niyoga is possible). 10 Mr. Sutherland's para. 20, wherein the incorrect reading has been admitted, may have naturally led to the mistake of inferring marriage where Niyoga was intended.

After this brief digression to the synopsis of Mr. Sutherland, I now return to Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita, and proceed to show that both Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita are wrong in introducing the idea of a Niyoga into the question of adoption. They give no reasons to support their interpretation of the terms Putrachchhâyâ vâham, nor do they cite any customs.

They may probably have been led to suggest the idea by the fact 20 that a brother's son is recommended as the first among those eligible for adoption, and that a brother's widow happens to be mentioned as one, on whom, if childless, a son could at one time prior to Manu be produced. This, however, would be a very superficial view of the matter, and both the authors seem to have forgotten that Niyoga, if it was ever established as a legal institution by the community generally, had been distinctly prohibited in this Kali age.⁵ Vijñāneśvara has shown that the only case in which Niyoga was considered allowable in any age, is that of a maiden merely betrothed. Whatever was the practice on this subject in very early times, Vijñāneśvara's statement appears to be 30 correct at any rate so far as the period dating from the promulgation of Manu's code is concerned.⁶

See also Mādhyama, who says that पूर्वोक्तनियोगोपि वाग्दत्ताविषय एव अन्यस्य नियोगस्य मनुना विधिस्तत्त्वात् ॥ Translation :—The Niyoga [to be directed] by the Gurus (the preceptor and other (elders) refers to the Vāgdattā (given by speech) alone, because of Manu's condemnation of any other Niyoga.

Again, both Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita apply the expression "fitness to be produced by self through Niyoga" to all classes generally, for they cannot limit it, and have not limited it to the dvījas (twice-born). Such being the case, they have not explained how they reconcile their recommending the sister's son and the daughter's son, as the most proper for Śūdras; for even in the most degraded times no Āryan writer has even permitted Niyoga to a Śūdra with his own daughter or sister.

- Further, the theory of Niyoga as propounded by Nanda Paṇḍita and 10 Kubera seems to be inconsistent with other portions of their own work; for it excludes cases of eligible adoptees to which they could have apparently no objection. Thus the verse¹ of Manu which speaks of Niyoga says that it can be directed to a brother or a Sapinda relation alone. Yājñavalkya (chap. II., v. 128) says that that appointment may be made of a sagotra (one of the same gotra) or of some other person. Viṣṇāśvara, however, has so interpreted this apparently very general statement of Yājñavalkya as to exclude all but the husband's brother or his Sapinda. Thus taking Manu and Yājñavalkya together, it is clear that Niyoga cannot take place except in reference to the widow of 20 a brother, a Sapinda, or a Sagotra. If, therefore, Niyoga, as it once existed, is to be assumed as the test of selection, then it follows that the son of one who is neither a Sapinda nor a Sagotra of the adopter should never be allowed to be taken in adoption. And yet Nanda Paṇḍita himself, citing a text² of Śākala, declares that he is so eligible for adoption. Nanda Paṇḍita tries to get over these difficulties by saying—न चासम्बन्धिनि नियोगासम्भवः। वीजार्थं ब्राह्मणः कश्चिन्नैर्नोपनिमन्त्र्यतामिति स्मरणेन नियन्त्रणसम्भवात् Translation:—"Nor is such appointment of one unconnected impossible; for the invitation [of such persons to raise issue] may take place under this text: 'for the sake 30 of seed, let some Brāhmaṇa be invited by wealth.'"³ This answer of Nanda Paṇḍita, however, is only partial; for it may meet the said objection only in the case of the adoption of a Brāhmaṇa. The text cited by him authorizes the appointment of a Brāhmaṇa alone, when he is in no way related, and that impliedly, for all classes. No authority having been cited by Nanda Paṇḍita to shew that any one of the three remaining classes, who is not a husband's brother, a Sapinda or a Sagotra of the adoptee's mother, may ever be appointed to raise issue, it must follow that there can never be an adoption of a boy who is neither a Sapinda nor a Sagotra in the case of the other classes;
 40 whereas no such restriction is laid down in the above text of Śākala cited by Nanda Paṇḍita, and adoptions of asagotra boys take place every day amongst all classes.

Again, a niyoga is possible only in the case of a childless widow (see Mann ch. IX. vv. 69, 70), and that until one son is produced. Thus where a female has one son already, she can under no circumstances have another son begotten on her by means of Niyoga. This being the case, any son other than the first would be ineligible under Nanda Paṇḍita's dictum as not being producible by Niyoga. Similarly, the son of a living brother would be ineligible, for no Niyoga would be possible with a brother's wife during the lifetime of the brother. The above remarks 10 will, I believe, show that the test of producibility through Niyoga is a mere crude speculation founded on no authority, utterly inapplicable to the present age, and inconsistent with the law of adoption laid down by the said two writers and by all received authorities on the subject.

In the next place, the above theory is opposed to received texts, and is not supported by digests accepted in this Presidency. The *Sarasvativilāsa*¹ quotes a text of Yama which runs as follows :—

शैदिनेऽप्यतुल्येव शेषादिनियमो न हि । वादानादेव सिद्धिः स्यादित्याह भगवान्यमः ॥

Translation :—In the case of a daughter's son and a brother's son, the rule with regard to a sacrifice and the like does not prevail. [The act of adoption] is complete 20 by a verbal gift alone. So says the holy Yama.

I find this verse quoted in the Dattaka Darpaṇa of Dvaipāyana, who is a writer later than Anantadeva, the author of Saṃskāra-kaustubha, with the preamble, उक्तं च सरस्वतीविलासे (it is said in the Sarasvativilāsa). Later on still, I find this text has been adopted by the Śāstrīs of the Bombay Suddur Diwani Adālat in Huebutrao Mankur v. Govindrao Bulwant Mankur (II. Borradaile's Report p. 87).² The above text distinctly sanctions the adoption of a daughter's son, which is inconsistent with the rule laid down by Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita, Niyoga being impossible between a father and his daughter under any circumstances whatsoever. 30

I have thus far addressed myself to the common ground between Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita in respect of their theory of Niyoga. I shall next consider how far the attempt of Nanda Paṇḍita alone to fortify this theory by analogy from marriage is successful. It is in this connection that he introduces the idea of Viruddha Sambandha (contrary relationship), and says that it (Viruddha Sambandha) is to be avoided in adoptions as it is in marriage. He defines Viruddha Sambandha in connection with adoption to be निषेधादिना स्वयङ्मुखादनायोग्यत्वम्.³ Translation : 'Unfitness to be produced by self through Niyoga, &c.'⁴

² See Steele, p. 52. Instances of such adoptions without a homa (sacrifice) are known to have taken place at Benares and other centres of Hindu society.

⁴ See the Grihya Parīśiṣṭa of Āśvalāyana, Cal. Ed. p. 284.

This proposition is incorrect for many reasons: (1.) There is no text prohibiting adoption on account of Viruddha Sambandha as there is in the case of marriage. (2.) Secondly, there can be no justification in applying by analogy a text concerning marriage to the subject of adoption; for there is no analogy between the two cases. Marriage is a Samskāra, whereas adoption is not. Sapinda relationship and sameness of gotra, which are particularly prohibited between the bride and the bridegroom in the case of marriage, are as particularly recommended as between the adopter and adoptee in the case of adoption.¹ (3.) The 10 analogy which is assumed by Nanda Paṇḍita to exist is further stretched by him by giving to the words viruddha sambandha in adoption a sense more extended than the one it bears in the said Grihya Parīṣiṣṭa text on marriage.² Āśvalāyana's text on marriage prohibiting viruddha sambandha runs thus:—लक्ष्मण्यो वरो लक्ष्मण्यर्ता कन्या यवीयसीमसपिण्डमसगौत्रजामविरुद्धसम्बन्धाप्यप्यच्छेत्. Translation:—The bridegroom duly qualified should marry a duly qualified maiden who is younger in years, is not a sapinda, is not of the same gotra, and whose marriage does not involve a viruddha sambandha (contrary relationship).

A few lines further on Āśvalāyana defines viruddha sambandha, and 20 illustrates it by examples as follows:—दमन्तोर्मियः पितृमातृसाम्यविरुद्धः सम्बन्धः । यथा भार्येस्सुदुहिता पितृव्यपत्न्याः स्वस्र । Translation:—[Viruddha sambandha] is that sambandha (relation) which is viruddha (contrary or improper) owing to the relationship [existing] between the bride and the bridegroom [before their marriage] being similar to that of a father or mother. As for instance the daughter of the wife's sister [and] the sister of the paternal uncle's wife.

Thus there are three prohibitions laid down, the violation of which invalidates marriage, viz. Sapinda relationship, and Sagotra-ship, and Viruddha Sambandha (contrary relationship). Now Nanda Paṇḍita says that a sister's son would be excluded from adoption on the 30 score of his *Viruddha Sambandha*³; whereas a sister is declared ineligible for marriage not on the ground of Viruddha Sambandha, but on that of sapinda relationship.⁴ The Viruddha Sambandha of Nanda Paṇḍita would thus include the sapinda relationship. But Āśvalāyana in his Grihya Parīśiṣṭa mentions viruddha sambandha as a disqualification for marriage side by side with a Sagotra-ship and Sapiṇḍa relationship; so that he has evidently given it a limited sense which is also clear from the examples of wife's sister's daughter and the paternal uncle's sister, which he has adduced to explain the meaning of that term, but of which Nanda Paṇḍita in his natural desire to support his theory of Niyoga as far as possible has evidently lost sight.

I must observe that if it be deemed necessary to introduce into this subject the idea of Viruddha Sambandha (improper relationship), which is clearly an idea contrary to authority and immemorial usage, 10 it appears to me that that Viruddha Sambandha (contrary relationship) must be understood as existing between the parties to the act in reference to which it is said to be prohibited. Thus if in marriage, it is between the bride and the bridegroom, in adoption it must be taken as between the adopted and the adopter. If marriage between a man and his wife's sister's daughter is prohibited, because the former stands to the latter in relationship analogous to that of a father, (they being the parties concerned with the act of marriage), it stands to reason that any bar to adoption that can arise out of contrary relationship ought to arise out of that rela- 20 tionship as between the adopter and the adoptee, and not between the adopter and a third party who is not essentially concerned with the ceremony. In this view of the matter, the prohibition of a Viruddha Sambandha will not amount to anything more than the general rule of Manu that the son to be adopted should be sadriśa (similar), or that of Śaunaka, that he should be पुत्रवत्पुत्रवत् (bearing the resemblance of a son). It must also be remarked that there is not a single word of Viruddha Sambandha in such general works as the Mitāksharā, the Mayūkha, and Nirṇaya-sindhu, and Kṛishṇa Bhaṭṭi, and special treatises on the subject of adoption that I have consulted, viz. Dattaka Nirmaya, Dattaka Mañi- 30 jarī, Dattaka Darpaṇa, Laugākṣhi Bhāskara, and lastly the Dattaka Chandrikā. The Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Nanda Paṇḍita and the Samskāra-kauṣṭubha of Ananta-deva alone mention Viruddha Sambandha (contrary relationship), as something to be avoided in adoption; but they do not use that expression in the same sense. The Samskāra-kauṣṭubha uses it, as it appears to me, in the sense I have above suggested, and certainly not in the sense in which Nanda Paṇḍita uses it. I say so because Ananta-deva mentions it only in one place,¹ and there adduces as examples the cases of a brother [evidently an elder], and paternal and maternal uncles, stating distinctly that the Viruddha 40 Sambandha in their adoption consists in their being पुत्रवत्पुत्रवत् (unfit to be regarded as sons). His words are as follows:—विद्वत्समन्वापस्य पुत्रवत्पुत्रवत्तद्वन्मातृपितृव्यमातृवत्पुत्रवत्.

'Translation :—[All can be adopted] except a brother, a father's brother, and a mother's brother [whose adoption] involves Viruddha Sambandha (improper relationship) by reason of their being unfit to be regarded with the idea of sonship.¹

It may be said that in shewing the incorrectness of the Niyoga theory, I have not demonstrated the incorrectness of the entire passages of Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera, regarding the expression putrachchhāyā vāham; for they use the words niyogādina (producibility of the adopted by means of niyoga and the like). My reply is that vague words like ādi (and the like), can represent a class of objects similar 10 to the one mentioned immediately before. And if niyoga, which the said writers make the principal representative of that class, fails as a test of selection, all those that are like it must necessarily fail. The said authors seem to have been aware of the difficulties that would have arisen if they had put marriage instead of niyoga, and therefore chose a test which they thought was less open to attack.

The next restriction is one directed to two sons, whom nature points to as the best for adoption, and who in pursuance of time-honored usage recognized by eminent authorities are usually selected for adoption as the best amongst Asagotras by people south of the Nar-20 madā. They are the daughter's son and the sister's son.

Their alleged prohibition is based on the same footing in regard to both and on two grounds :—the dictum of Mr. Sutherland; and two Smṛiti texts. Most of the European writers on Hindu law found their objection on the first ground, and the only native author who lends some support to them is Nanda Paṇḍita.

Briefly stated, the result of my investigations on the subject amounts to this, that neither on any general principle of law nor on texts, nor on custom, is there any the least ground for supporting the alleged prohibition, at any rate so far as the whole of Western India is concerned.
30 With a view to make this clear I shall first summarize all that has been said on this subject by several European writers. Mr. Sutherland in his Synopsis places the above prohibition on the basis of his general rule, and says :—

"By the operation of this rule, a sister's son and offspring of other female, whom the adopter could not have espoused, and one of a different class, are excluded from adoption. In the present age, marriage with one unequal in class is prohibited."²

Sir Francis Macnaughten has laid down certain rules in his work; and of these Rule XII. runs thus :—

¹ See Observations of Yājñeśvara Śāstrī to the same effect in his Putra Kalpalatā 40 p. 38 para. 34.

² Stokes' H. L. B., p. 664, ll. 38—42.

"The son of a sister or of a daughter may be adopted by a Śūdra. As to the three superior classes, the rule is, that they cannot adopt a son whom it would be incest to have begotten, and conversely, that they may adopt a son if without incest they could have begotten him."¹

His quotation of Śaunaka in the succeeding paragraph is indefinite and inaccurate; for there is no text of Śaunaka supporting Govaridhan, who is no known authority in Dharma-śāstra, and has not been noticed by our standard writers. The whole paragraph appears to me to be a mixture of the Niyoga theory, with half a verse of Śaunaka, and a vague allusion to Viruddha Sambandha (contrary relation). 10

Sir T. Strange, though primarily basing the restriction on prohibited connection, cites Dattaka Mīmāṃsā sec. ii., para. 30, and the note thereon, sec. ii., para. 32 and note, and para. 102, and sec. v. para. 18.² Further on in his Appendix to chapter iv. he cites the elder Gautama as found by him in the Dattaka Kaustubha and the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā of Śrī Rāma.³ He however testifies to the said prohibition being set aside in practice by persons of all castes in respect of a sister's son.⁴ Mr. A. Steele, instead of noting any such prohibition, declares the daughter's or sister's son to be adoptible in the absence of a Sagotra. This statement is based on the authority of the opinion supplied by the 20 Poona college.⁵ A contrary opinion of some Poona Śāstris is also there noted.⁶ But he does not seem to have attached any weight thereto, for at p. 52 he notes the absence of necessity in regard to the sacrifice in adoptions of a daughter's son, a brother's son, or a younger brother. Mr. W. H. Macnaughten, after laying down the rule that the adoptee "should not be the son of one whom the adopter could not have married," cites the sister's son and the daughter's son as instances thereof. He strangely adds that 'this last rule, however, applies only to the three superior classes, and does not extend to Śūdras,' relying for his authority on Nārada as cited in the Dattaka Nirṇaya.⁷ 30

¹ See his Considerations on the Hindu Law as is current in Bengal, p. 150. In support of this rule Sir Francis has cited Śaunaka, but not accurately. For, the restriction as to sameness of class in respect of adoption, which he confines to three higher classes, is declared by Śaunaka to apply to the fourth class as well. Again, there is nothing in Śaunaka's text to support even inferentially the prohibition in regard to adopting the eldest son, or about prohibitions dictated by 'common sense' as in the cases "of a brother, a paternal uncle or a maternal uncle." Probably his Paṇḍit Govardhan knew little beyond the Gauḍa usages.

Mr. Justice Strange bases the prohibition on the rule laid down by him in para. 84, but also notes that that prohibition is disregarded by all classes.¹

Mr. Grady offers nothing new on the subject, but marks the inconsistency of Nanda Paṇḍita in first saying generally that adoption can only be made of one with whose mother the adopter might have legally intermarried, and in stating afterwards that a Śūdra could adopt his daughter's or sister's son.²

Mr. Mayne too lays down the prohibition to be absolute for the three 10 higher classes, as instances of a general rule about prohibited connection, although he notes its supersession in the Panjaub, towns like Delhi, Southern India and Western India.³ If Mr. Mayne reads the originals, and goes to the root of the matter, he will find that the fanciful restrictions are due to Nanda Paṇḍita and his translator's synopsis, and it is now being attempted to father them on the whole of India. In the Dekkan they are not known, and notwithstanding some recent judgments of our High Court, our religious life and convictions must with due deference remain the same.

From the preceding remarks it will appear that the alleged prohibition of a daughter's or a sister's son rests, firstly, on the dictum 20 enunciated by Mr. Sutherland, to the effect that the adoptee's mother should be marriageable with the adopter, and secondly, on the authority of two texts cited by Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera in their Dattaka Mīmāṃsā and Dattaka Chandrikā respectively.

So far as the mentioned ground of the prohibition is concerned, I have already shown above⁴ that the said dictum of Mr. Sutherland is entirely groundless. I shall, therefore, now address myself to the question as to how far it is supported by the authority of texts. This investigation may, to some, appear unnecessary; because usage of adopt-30 ing a daughter's or a sister's son has so long and so generally prevailed on this side of India with the complete approbation of the community, that no obsolete texts now revived and interpreted according to Nanda Paṇḍita in the matter of adoption, ought to be permitted to change, nor will they change the daily lives and the social and religious customs of the people. Nanda Paṇḍita lived more than 260 years ago, and not one ceremony or practice is regulated by the Dekkanis according to his doctrines to this day. I however enter into this investigation now, because I believe some recent cases have a tendency to unsettle the people's minds, and promote unnecessary litigation. To 40 return to the argument: out of the works consulted, the Dattaka

Chandrikā, the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, the Samskārakaustubha, the Dharmasindhu and the Dattaka Nirṇaya contain this prohibition. In all of these the prohibition is placed on a par with the prohibition as to the giving of the eldest son, and the rule laying down the order of the eligible adoptees, both of which have been on all hands admitted to be directory.¹

The Dattaka Chandrikā grounds the prohibition on a text of Śaunaka.² The Dattaka Mīmāṃsā bases it on the aforementioned text of Śaunaka³ (the latter half of which it also ascribes to Vṛiddha Gautama),⁴ and another of Śākala.⁵ The Samskārakaustubha relies on the aforementioned text of Śaunaka,⁶ and the Dharmasindhu cites the same text without referring it to any author.⁷ The Dattaka Nirṇaya attributes the same verse to Nārada; and I find it cited by Kṛishṇabhaṭṭa, who has ascribed it to Vṛiddha Gautama.

Thus the above five digest writers base their objections to the daughter's son and the sister's son on two texts, one attributed variously to Śaunaka, Vṛiddha Gautama, and Nārada, and the other to Śākala. My contention is first that these texts are of doubtful authenticity; secondly, that even if they be genuine, they have been wrongly interpreted; and thirdly, even assuming the interpretation of the said digest 10 writers to be correct, it leaves other texts and digests unexplained, and is further opposed to the usage of the country conformable to other texts, and existing for centuries. The first text runs as follows:—
 वैद्विभो भगिनेयश्च ब्रह्मैस्तु क्रियते सुतः । ब्राह्मणादित्रये नास्ति भगिनेयः सुतः कश्चिन् ॥ This verse, although found in the manuscript copy of Śaunaka Kārikās in my library, does not occur in that copy of Kārikās which was available to Dr. Bühler.⁸ Nor does it occur in the extract of the adoption chapter of the Kārikās made in the Samskārakaustubha,⁹ and in the ⁹ It is rather strange that the Kaustubha, not including this text in his extract from the chapter from Śaunaka, should still attribute it to Śaunaka; unless it be that its author was quoting from memory on the latter occasion.

Vyavahāra Mayūkha. These extracts correspond with the manuscript of Dr. Bühler. On the other hand, the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, the Dattaka Chandrikā, and my own manuscript of Śaunaka Kārikās do give the said text. I am, therefore, inclined to hold with Dr. Bühler that there were two versions of this chapter of Śaunaka, the one Māhārāshtra as he calls it, and the other the Gauda or Eastern.¹ That being so, it appears to me that we should follow that which has been practically adopted on this side of India, and that would be the version of the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, which I have above called the Māhārāshtra one.

- 10 That version contains the first half of the above verse, but that half does not establish a prohibition of the adoption of a daughter's or a sister's son among the three higher classes. This has been very elaborately and ably shown by Śāṅkara Bhaṭṭa in his Dvaitanirṇaya and by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha.² The Mayūkha's reading of the first line is slightly different from that noted above, which is Nanda Paṇḍita's. The Mayūkha's reading is as follows:—द्विद्वौ भगिनेयश्च द्यूतस्यापि च दीयते, which means that a daughter's son and a sister's son are given [in adoption] even to a Śūdra. The words च (cha) and अपि (api) in this line occur in the readings of this line in the manuscript of Dr. Bühler and in the
- 20 *Samskārakaustubha*³; so that the said line so read, not only contains no prohibition, but allows by direct implication a daughter's or a sister's son to be adopted by any one of the three higher classes.⁴ It is thus the latter half of the verse which, controlling as it is supposed to do the meaning of the first half, affords any ground at all for the prohibition. Mr. Sutherland translates the above text as follows:—"But a daughter's

³ See Dr. Bühler's notice of the Śaunaka Smṛiti in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, vol. XXXV. Part I. p. 159 (v. 12 with note on it).

⁴ Kṛishṇabhaṭṭa notices the above argument based on the words च and अपि, but does not consider it satisfactory in so far as according to him such an interpretation renders the text nugatory. He says: न च तच्चकारादप्येषामपि समुच्चयः कुतो न भवति एवं च तत्रापरवधारणार्थकत्वमपि न कल्प्यत इति वाच्यम् तथा सति एतद्वाक्यवैयर्थ्यापत्तेः सर्वेषामेव जातिस्त्वेन तदुभयमानेति. Translation: [It can] not [be said] 'why are not others included [in the text] owing to [the existence of the word] cha (and) there? In this way the word api (also) too cannot be taken as determinative [i.e. in the sense of eva]. For in that case this sentence will become nugatory, both [the daughter's and the sister's son] becoming eligible [for a Śūdra] by [the rule which requires] all [adoptees to be] of the same caste.

This objection of Kṛishṇabhaṭṭa is a reasonable one, but it has been satisfactorily answered by the Dvaitanirṇaya and the Mayūkha which interpret the text as laying down that preference is to be shown to a daughter's son or a sister's son by a Śūdra when selecting a son for adoption.

son and sister's son are affiliated by Śúdras. For the three superior tribes a sister's son is nowhere [mentioned as] a son."¹ This translation is neither in accordance with Nanda Paṇḍita's comments on that verse,² nor with the plain meaning of the Sanskrit text. Mr. Sutherland ought to have closely rendered Nanda Paṇḍita's language. For he was simply a translator. The correct translation of the verse as interpreted by Nanda Paṇḍita would be as follows:—'A daughter's son or a sister's son is adopted as a son by Śúdras alone. In the case of the three classes beginning with the Bráhmaṇa, a sister's son [and a daughter's son] are nowhere [mentioned as] sons.' I object to this ¹⁰ interpretation of Nanda Paṇḍita:—(i.) Because it is inconsistent with the text of Yama beforementioned³ sanctioning the adoption of a daughter's son; (ii.) because it necessitates the supplying of the word api (even) in the line, involves an unnatural rendering of the words kvachit, which qualifying násti (is not) must mean 'in some places' into kvachidapi Śástre, which means 'in any Śástra or law whatsoever,' and needlessly converts the word bhāgineya (sister's son) into dauhitra bhāgineya (sister's son and daughter's son); (iii.) because it ignores a distinct usage of the people to the contrary widely prevailing in all parts of India except Bengal; (iv.) because it does not stand to reason that the daughter's son or ²⁰ the sister's son who naturally deserve the first rank in adoption among the Asagotra-Sapiṇḍa relations (those that are Sapiṇḍa but not of the same gotra), should be prohibited when no such prohibition is declared to attach to more distant relations of that class, such as any of the átma-bandhus, or even the sons of the daughter's son and sister's son themselves.⁴

In reference to the first ground, I have to state that a Káriká should be so interpreted as not to be repugnant to an express Smṛiti. For if it be directly opposed to a Smṛiti, it will have to give way in accordance with the doctrine enunciated amongst others by Laṅgákshi-Bhāskara. ³⁰ This author deduces from the Smṛitis the doctrine that no ceremony beyond giving and receiving is necessary for adoption, and this conclusion being opposed to the Káriká attributed to Śaunaka, remarks *शौनकादिकारिकापेक्षया स्मृतीनाम् प्रावृत्त्यम् * * * इति न ह्यव्यनुपपत्तिः* : Translation:—'there is no inconsistency, inasmuch as Smṛitis are superior to Kárikás like those of Śaunaka.' Here I must not omit to mention that this text is attributed not only to Śaunaka, but also to Vṛiddha Gautama by Krishṇabhāṭṭa and by the Dattaka Nirṇayá to Nárada. It is difficult to say positively at present how far these references are correct ; as there are no critical editions of any Śmṛitis, save those of Manu and Yājñavalkya. While the Dattaka Nirṇaya refers the said text to Nārada, it is not to be found in Dr. Jolly's translation of it. If, however, the correctness of the two references be assumed, the result will be that there will be a text on one side allowing the adoption of a daughter's son, and another text on the other side disallowing it by implication. There are two ways in which our jurists get out of such a difficulty, one is to follow either text ;¹ the other is to hold that the two texts refer to different parts of the country. The Dattaka Nirṇaya quotes an authority for the latter mode of interpretation. He says : श्रुतेर्द्वयं स्मृतेर्द्वयं स्थलभेदः प्रकल्प्यते. Translation :—' When Śrutis or Smṛitis disagree [on any point], a difference of place [where they are adopted] is assumed [for the purpose of reconciling them.]' The existence of the prohibition in reference to some parts of India and the non-existence of it in reference to others is in my opinion the real solution of the whole question, and is, as I would presently show, what is intended by the said verse.

In reference to the second ground, I have to remark that the addition of Api (even), which makes a considerable alteration in the sense, is entirely unwarranted. Remembering the extreme tendency of our treatise-writers to reconcile conflicting Smṛiti texts, though apparently irreconcilable, I should have excused the introduction of that word, had it been done for reconciling the text in question with another which unambiguously contained the same prohibition. I am aware that Śākala's text quoted by Nanda Paṇḍita at page 18, line 14, may be cited as one such. But that is a very unsatisfactory text, as I shall have occasion to remark hereafter.² In regard to the metaphorical interpretation made by Nanda Paṇḍita, no authority or necessity for it has been shown by him. Finally, in regard to Nanda Paṇḍita's remark regarding the word bhāginēya (sister's son) as an upalakṣaṇa (an illustration of a class), I must say that Nanda Paṇḍita herein furnishes a vivid example of the way in which some writers are often found twisting words into unnatural meanings without any warrant whatever, and merely for the purpose of making a text conform to their own notions of Dharma as it should be. While granting that the conciseness of expression observed in our writers does sometimes require that a meaning more comprehensive than its ordinary signification should be assigned to a particular word, it is still regarded as the primary rule of construction that the plain meaning of every word should be given to it, unless the context absolutely requires otherwise. The simple fact that the daughter's son and the sister's son are named together when they are recommended for Śūdras, affords no warrant for holding that they should be so named together when they are to be prohibited for the three higher classes. Nanda Paṇḍita says that he considers the term bhāgineya (sister's son) as including a daughter's son, in order to avoid the splitting up of one text into several sentences. But he forgets that the splitting up of a text is not invariably a fault of construction, and has often to be adopted under particular circumstances. In the present instance, the facts that the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son is allowed in many parts of India, and that there exists a distinct Smṛiti text allowing the adoption of a daughter's son, are reasons why the text in question should be interpreted strictly, and why the apparent वाक्यभेद (the splitting up of one text into several 10 sentences) should be accepted as intended by the author. To show further how Nanda Paṇḍita has recklessly adopted the said mode of construction, I have only to draw the reader's attention to another interpretation which Nanda Paṇḍita has himself put on the word in the self same text when he happens to quote it in an earlier part of his work, as laid down by Vṛiddha Gautama.¹ He there says: भागिनेयपदं भ्रातृपुत्रस्य-पुत्रस्यैवम् (the term bhāgineya stands for a brother's son as well). If this sense be fitted to the word bhāgineya (sister's son) in his passage at page 17, l. 6, it will follow that according to him even a brother's son should be prohibited for adoption by any of the three higher classes. 20 This would be evidently absurd. Again, one of the conclusions which he has arrived at in his comments on a text of Manu (chap. IX. v. 182) is that a female can adopt her sister's son.² But in the alleged prohibitory text in question, the terms dauhitra (daughter's son) and bhāgineya (sister's son) must necessarily be taken in reference to the adopting party, whether male or female; so that if a sister's son is not to be adopted, he should be excluded whether he is the son of the sister of the adopting husband or of the adopting wife.

In regard to the third ground I must note that the existence of a time-honored custom, allowing the adoption of a dauhitra (daughter's 30 son) or bhāgineya (sister's son) is testified to in distinct terms by the Dvaita-Nirṇaya and the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, and also impliedly by Krishṇa Bhaṭṭa.³ I have made special inquiries on the subject, and I have no hesitation in stating that in this presidency such adoptions are common, and not the slightest taint attaches to them on account of such relationship.

The fourth ground is so self-evident that I need not say much in support thereof. But I would ask my readers to view the subject from another standpoint in reference to one of the two sons in question. The dauhitra (daughter's son) has in ages past been always regarded as himself a son 40 under certain circumstances, viz., when the daughter (his mother) had no brother, and she was given in marriage under an agreement that the first son born of her was to be taken by her father, as his son to perpetuate his own family.¹ The dauhitra was then called putrikáputra (son of the appointed daughter), and as such he enjoyed a rank above a dattaka son.² A notable example of this usage is supplied by the Mahábhārata. It is the adoption of Babhruváhana, son of Chitrángaḍá, by Chitraváhana, king of Mañipura and Babhruváhana's maternal grandfather.³ Chitrángaḍá was given in marriage to Arjuna under the above condition, and the son born of her succeeded her father. The commentator Nílakaṇṭha affirms the observance of this custom to this day in the country of Southern Kerala. He says:—अद्यापि पुत्रिकापुत्रस्यैव राज्यमिति दक्षिण-केरलेष्वाचारी दृश्यते. Translation:—To this day is the custom of principalities [descending] to a putrikáputra (daughter's son) alone observed in the Southern Keralas. Even where such special circumstances do not exist, a daughter's son is simply as such declared by Vishnu to be a pautra (a son's son); and this recognition of his status applies to the former as well as the present age.⁴ This past history of the dauhitra renders it unaccountable why by the adoption of a fanciful theory of Niyoga, &c. which is now positively illegal, he should at this time be so far degraded as to be declared ineligible for adoption, and it casts a considerable suspicion over the text of Saunaka or Vṛiddha Gautama in question.

Having thus attempted to show that even if the above text be genuine, its interpretation as implying a general prohibition of the adoption of a dauhitra or bhāginēya by one of the three higher classes is not correct, it becomes imperative that I should give my own translation of the said text. It is as follows:—‘Śúdrás [should] adopt a daughter's son or a sister's son. A sister's son is in some places [not adopted as] a son among the three [classes beginning] with a Bráhmaṇa. Thus rendered, the first half would record a circumstance that a daughter's son or a sister's son is the first eligible adoptee for a Śúdra just as a brother's son is for the twice-born; and the latter half would simply note a local custom prohibiting a sister's son. This is the correct translation of the said verse, and thus rendered the text does not lay down any prohibition in regard to the adoption of a daughter's son at all; and in reference to a sister's son it states that the sister's son is prohibited in some parts of the country, thereby clearly intimating that excepting those parts, there is no prohibition for the adoption of a sister's son in the entire country. The question whether a custom of so exclusive a character does exist in any part of the country, is one to be proved in each case by those who assert it. The correctness of my translation is supported by the following considerations:—I., that it is consonant to the interpretation of the preceding line of this same verse by Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa and Nīlakaṇṭha and also to the customs affirmed by them to exist; II., that it is more natural than the one proposed by Nanda Paṇḍita; III., that it reconciles past history and present practice to the text in question.

Having disposed of Śaunaka's text I now come to the second text, 10 namely, that of Śākala.¹ That text cannot be taken as universal authority, first, because it has been only used by Nanda Paṇḍita and Kṛishṇa Bhaṭṭa. The former no doubt uses it in support of his doctrine which has never been adopted by the people on this side of India; while the latter quotes it as a piece of information, and as one opposed to the doctrine propounded and the custom found by the Bhaṭṭas. Again, the Kārikās attributed to Śākala contain vratas, śāntis, and allusions to modern forms of Viṣṇu worship, and these seem to stamp it as a very modern production not to be compared with Manu, Yama, and other Smṛitis. This seems also probable from the fact that the verse 20 in question has not been noticed either by Viṣṇuśeṣvara or by the Bhaṭṭas. Again, as all Kārikās generally are, this Kārikā of Śākala must be a production not emanating from Śākala himself, but as one based on some work of Śākala now lost. Viewed in this light, the author of the Kārikās as now found cannot claim any weight such as to undo a long and well established usage or custom, and supported by such cogent reasoning as that of Śaṅkara Bhaṭṭa, Nīlakaṇṭha and others. Even an examination of his chapter on adoption shows that the compiler has executed the work of compilation rather perfunctorily, for he seems to lay down his law only for the twice-born classes, 30 and he does not contemplate adoption by Śūdras at all. Moreover, this writer stands alone in excluding a mother's sister's son from adoption, and he further does not show how he distinguishes a mother's sister's son from a father's sister's son, or a mother's brother's son.

The last matter to which I shall now allude in relation to this part of the subject is that of the adoption of a brother by a brother. The law and usage in this matter is that it is improper for a younger to adopt an elder brother. But it is quite proper and agreeable to law and usage of the country for one elder brother to adopt his younger brother as dattaka son, the giver being the father and mother or either of them, 40 or as Svayandatta when both the parents are dead. Some of the authorities on this head have been mentioned before;¹ and the rest are collected in the note below.² Yajñeśvara Śāstrī distinctly says that the elder brother cannot be adopted because he could not be looked upon as a son, whereas the younger is so looked upon, and he is therefore a very proper object for adoption; and, according to Yajñeśvara, he may become also a Svayandatta or Kṛtrima son.

Going next to the question of status, the first case for discussion is that of the eldest son. Can he be given? According to Vijñāneśvara³ 10 and his followers, an eldest son should not be given agreeably to Manu ch. 9 v. 106; and according to Anantadeva, Kāśīnātha Upādhyāya, and Bālabhaṭṭa, he should not be given because of the text which runs as follows⁴:—न च्येष्टं पुत्रं दद्यात्. Translation:—The eldest son should not be given [in adoption].

This moral advice, however, has never been regarded by our courts⁵ as anything more than directory; and the community view it only as a moral maxim which they set aside at their pleasure. That Vijñāneśvara has evidently so understood this passage is shewn by the Vyavahāra Mayūkha.⁶ Nīlakaṇṭha, however, goes beyond Vijñāneśvara, and 20 further holds that the text of Manu cited by the latter constitutes no prohibition at all.⁷ In regard to the text cited by Anantadeva, Kāśīnātha and Bālabhaṭṭa, the facts that Vijñāneśvara apparently knew no such text, and that Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha expressly declares his ignorance of it,⁸ and that it is cited by no other author, throw very great doubts upon its genuineness. The fact again that Anantadeva, Kāśīnātha, and Bālabhaṭṭa are unable to refer it to any particular author, lends strength to the above doubts.

The next subject I have to notice is the giving in adoption of an only son. A precept about not giving nor receiving in adoption 30 only son is found in some of our Smṛitis. But this, like that about the eldest son, has been always regarded as purely directory, or recommendatory. The usage of adopting such a son has been both ancient and general, and has been followed by the preceding Governments as well as by our own. It has been also generally upheld by our courts.¹ I should accordingly have not thought it necessary to say anything more about it, if it had not been for two recent judgments calling in question the said usago and a long and uniform current of judicial decisions. To this end I shall now first examine the texts bearing on this subject, and show how they have been accepted by the people. There are two texts bearing on this subject, one of Vasishṭha and the other of Saunaka. They are cited by the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, Part I., on page 40, ll. 16, 17, and page 42, l. 6,² 10 by the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā,³ the Dattaka Chandrikā,⁴ the Samskāra-kaustubha,⁵ the Dharmasindhu,⁶ and the Mitāksharā.⁷ Of these the last two note only the text of Vasishṭha. I maintain that the said texts must be regarded purely as laying down a recommendation based on obvious worldly reasons and nothing more. I begin with that of Saunaka. It runs as follows:—नैकपुत्रेण कर्तव्यं पुत्रदानं कदाचन । बहुपुत्रेण कर्तव्यं पुत्रदानं प्रयत्नतः Translation :—One having an only son should never give him in adoption; one having several sons should give a son [in adoption] with every effort.¹

Those who object to the above rendering of दातुं कर्तव्यं occurring in the first half into 'should give,' must make out why that expression is to be rendered in 'must give' in this place. For they can only do so if they are prepared to hold that a man can compel his neighbour having many sons to give one of them in adoption to him by a suit at law; or that the word कर्तव्यं (may be done) is one that can bear being put into that positive shape in this instance alone. The word कर्तव्यं which occurs 10 in the above verse is capable, indeed, of being translated severally into 'should be done,' or 'must be done,' or 'is proper to do.' But if it be once translated in one way when occurring in the first half of the verse, it must be translated in the same way when occurring in the latter half. This done, the gift of a son would, if the prohibition of an only son is to be regarded as peremptory, have, under particular circumstances, to be viewed as a peremptory command, a disobedience of which ought at the least to be visited with a penance. But no penance of the kind is seen in any of our Smritis or digests.

There is a much stronger ground for holding that Śaunaka himself 20 regarded this precept as purely directory. In his kārikās, Śaunaka has laid down a number of precepts positive as well as negative in reference to adoption. The following are such precepts by Śaunaka in this matter²:—

- (1) The adopting person should ask for a son;
- (2) By the Brāhmaṇas, the adoption (literally reception) of a son should be made from amongst *Sapinda*s;
- (3) In absence of him, from *Asapinda*s; but from elsewhere it should not be made;
- (4) In all classes it should be from amongst the [respective] 30 castes, and not from elsewhere;
- (5) One with one son should not make a gift of a son;
- (6) One with many sons should make the gift of a son with every effort.

All the above precepts are equally commendatory, and there is no reason for holding one more obligatory than the rest. But there is still another argument positively showing that Śaunaka himself viewed this matter in the light I am doing now. For, in reference to one alone out of the above precepts, viz., No. 4, he says that its disregard would work a partial disability in the temporal status of the adopted; in other words, if one of a different caste be adopted, he will be entitled only to maintenance, but his adoption stands.¹ The non-attachment of any penalty in case of the disobedience of the rest of the precepts leads one, on the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, fairly to the inference that they were laid down as recommendations, or, if I may call them, duties of imperfect obligation, a disregard of which could not be taken account of by any temporal power. In every one of our ancient Smritis, there is a complete fusion of commands of perfect and commands of imperfect obligation, and this fact once realized, it cannot be a hard matter to draw the line of demarcation. An attempt to give effect to all texts alike as though they were of an equally obligatory nature, would be to ignore a rule well known to all students of the Hindu Dharmaśāstra.

² Part I. p. 40.

I now pass on to the second text, namely, that of Vasishṭha. It runs as follows² :—शुरूणीतसम्भः पुत्रो मातागुनिभक्तकन्यसु प्रदत्तकिययिन्यायेषु मातापितरौ यमवतः न त्वेकं पुत्रं दद्यात् यतिगृहीयात् वा स हि संनानाय पूर्वेषाम्. Translation :—“Man produced from virile seed and uterine blood proceeds from his father and his mother as an effect [from its cause]. Therefore his father and mother have power to give, to sell, or to abandon their son. But no one should give or receive an only son, for he saves the man [from put or hell].”

This text on the most approved principles of criticism must also be treated as a recommendatory one, inasmuch as it contains a precept that is intended for a certain specified purpose. It is a rule of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā that all texts supported by the assigning of a reason are to be deemed not as vidhi but simply as artha-vāda (recommendatory). When a text is treated as an artha-vāda, it follows that it has no obligatory force whatever. Sabara Svāmī constructs an adhiḥkāraṇa (a topic) on this head, which he calls hetumannigadādhiḥkāraṇa (a topic in regard to texts which contain a clause containing the reason of the precept) out of five sūtras of Jaiminī, ch. I., quarter II., 26—30, and which he begins as follows³ :—अथ ये हेतुमन्निगदाः—शूर्पेण कुहोनि, तेन हि भनं कियते—इत्येवमादयः तेषु सन्देहः किं स्तुतिस्तेषां कार्यं उत हेतुः Translation :—Now in regard to such nigada (texts) having [a clause assigning a] reason, as ‘one should sacrifice by means of Surpa (a winnowing basket); for by means of that food is prepared,’ a doubt arises as to whether they are simply commendatory or contain a reason [making them obligatory]. His final reply to this query is तस्माद्वेतुमन्निगदस्यापि स्तुतिरेव कार्यम्. Translation :—“Therefore the import of texts having a clause that contains a reason is commendation only.' This principle is made still clearer by Śabarasvāmin in his comments on Jaimini's sūtra 4, of chap. I. quarter III. (see Mīmāṃsā Darśana, Bib. Indic. p. 68). Kubera has made use of this principle for showing that in one case at least the text of Vasishṭha in question is not peremptory. He says where the adopter is an uncle, an only son may be adopted though as a Dvyāmushyāyana, and holds that this may be allowed in spite of the said text which is apparently universal, because the extinction of lineage which is assigned in the text as the reason of the prohibition 10 does not apply in the case of a Dvyāmushyāyana adoptee. Kubera by this reasoning distinctly subscribes to the principle that the statement of a reason in a text controls its apparent scope and character. Nanda Paṇḍita too does the same.¹

² The above is the reading of the Samakāraustubha, the Dat. Ch. and the Dat. 40 Mīm. and the Calcutta Edition of Smritis. The Mayūkhā reads स हि ज्ञायते पुत्र्य instead of स हि संनानाय पूर्वेषां, see above Part I., p. 42, l. 6. This difference of reading is immaterial for the purposes of the following discussion.

³ See the Mīmāṃsā Darśana, Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 53 to 55.

The principle being thus clear, all its consequences must follow; and on the analogy of Kubera and Nanda Paṇḍita who allow a Dvyāmushyāyana adoption of an only son by an uncle because the fear of the extinction of lineage does not in that case arise, we may say that an only son may be given in adoption by a father or mother who propose to attend to their own salvation, and that of their 20 forefathers by either begetting another son, or adopting a son, or by following one of the numerous ways beforementioned² of satisfying the debt to the manes. I am not putting forward any imaginary contingencies; for within my knowledge there are numerous examples of people having given away their only sons in adoption, and having subsequently either got legitimate sons or adopted sons on despair of begetting issue. These examples are drawn from all classes and from all strata of society in this Presidency.³

I will now shew that there are instances in the Vedas and Purāṇas of a violation of this alleged prohibition, and that, among the digest writers, 30 Vijñāneśvara, Śrinātha Bhaṭṭa and Jagannāth have expressly stated their views, declaring this text to be merely commendatory.

The first historical instance of the adoption of an only son is that of Rishi Atri giving away all his sons to Aurva.⁴ He thus made himself

³ The following may be noted as historically well-known cases of the adoption of an only son:—Shahaji, son of Mahārāja Pratāp Simha (Sattara); H. H. Siveji Mahārāja (Kolhapur), the reigning prince is an only son; so was his adopting father 40 H. H. Rajaram Mahārāja, who died at Florence, and who was moreover a sister's son; and his father afterwards adopted a son with the sanction of the British Government. Several cases amongst the well-known Purandares of Śāsavad, Bahiropanṭ Pingley, the last Peshwa of the Satara Rajas, the late Chief of Bhore, and scores of other examples are available.

sonless and broke through the above precept. Again, as described in the Kālikā Purāṇa, the adoption of the son of Bhairava by Votāla is another example. This is explained away by some writers as being an instance of the Dvyāmushyāṇa form of adoption, and as not affecting Vasishṭha's general precept.¹ But this explanation is unsatisfactory. For, even granting that Suveśa, the son of Bhairava, was a Dvyāmushyāṇa, the text of Vasishṭha under consideration makes no such distinction, and lays down its precept in general terms, that an only son should neither be given nor received. If therefore giving and receiving is as necessary in the Dvyāmushyāṇa adoption as it is in the Kcvala 10 (simple or absolute) adoption, (and this necessity of the gift and acceptance is conveyed by the word dattaka itself), then it appears to me to be a simple trifling with language to say that a gift and acceptance of an only son, be it of any kind, has, as a matter of history, taken place, and yet the text has remained unviolated. The next instance I cite is that from the *Devī Bhāgavata*² of the sale of his only son Rohita or Rohitāśya by Harischandra, a king of the solar dynasty. This instance, although that of the sale of an only son, is quite in point, because sale according to Hindu law involves gift and acceptance as much as any charitable gift,³ and because the prohibition of the 20 gift of an only son is introduced as an exception to the early part of the text, which in general terms asserts the parent's power over the sons in respect of gift in adoption, sale, or abandonment. If sale involves a gift, and if that gift is prohibited in respect of an only son, it seems inevitable that the sale of an only son should, under the said text, be considered as much prohibited as his gift in adoption.⁴

I shall now give the views of Sanskrita digest-writers on this subject. The Dattaka Nirṇaya of Śrinātha Bhaṭṭa quoting Vasishṭha's text in question says in reference to its prohibition of the gift of an only son as follows:—अत्र एकपुत्रदाननिषेधो दुरदृष्टज्ञापनार्थं न तु दानासिद्धयर्थः—Transla- 30 tion:—Here the prohibition of the gift of an only son [is made] to show the sin [which its violation involves] and not the invalidity of the gift [itself].

Jagannātha says in reference to this text that though the acceptance of an only son is prohibited, "this does not invalidate the adoption of such a son actually given."⁵ Last of all, Viṣṇūśaṅkara says the same thing. I will here extract the major portion of his comments on the latter line of chap. II. v. 130 where Yājñavalkya defines an adopted son. They run as follows :—

Translation :—He who is given by his mother with her husband's consent, while her husband is absent or [without his assent] after her husband's decease, or who is given 10 by his father, or by both, being of the same class with the person to whom he is given, becomes his dattaka (adopted) son. Thus Manu (chap. IX. v. 168) says : “He whom his father or mother affectionately gives to another as his son, being alike (by class) and in a time of distress, confirming the gift with water is called an adopted son.”

By specifying distress, [it is intimated that the son] should not be given unless there be distress. This prohibition regards the man [and not the act of adoption].¹ So an only son should not be given.* For Vasishṭha ordains ‘Let no man give or accept an only son.’ Nor, though a numerous progeny exist, should an eldest son be given ; for he chiefly fulfils the office of a son, as is shown by the following text. “By the eldest son, as soon as born, a man becomes the father of male issue.”

20 Here in reference to the injunction of Manu chap. IX. v. 168 that a son should not be given in adoption except in distress, Vijñāneśvara says दानुरयं प्रतिषेधः which has been translated by Colebrooke as follows :—
“This prohibition regards the giver [not the taker].” This rendering, though sufficient to show that a violation of the precept contained in the passage will not invalidate the adoption made, is inaccurate, and has led to much misconception on the subject. Some of Mr. Colebrooke's readers, seeing that the violation of one precept, viz., that about the non-gift of a son except in distress, was considered allowable, because, as they thought, the precept respected the giver alone, have 30 been led to infer that in the case of another precept, which respects both the giver and the taker, no such violation could be allowed. But nothing could have been further from Vijñāneśvara's mind when writing the above line ; for as one deeply versed in Hindu Dharmaśāstra, he knew full well that the questions of the invalidity of an act, and the moral sin attaching to the doer on account of that act, were independent of each other. He also knew that the prohibition of the gift of a thing implied the prohibition of its acceptance, even if such prohibition were not expressly laid down. This has been declared by Nanda Paṇḍita

¹ Colebrooke readers दानुरयं प्रतिषेधः by ‘this prohibition regards the giver [not the 40 taker]’ This is the apparent sense of the passage. I have given the correct rendering above, and my grounds for it will be given further on.

* Colebrooke uses the words ‘must not be given’ here for the Sanskrit words न देयः, which he himself in the next following sentence translates by ‘should not be given.’ This difference in the rendering of one and the same expression is unwarrantable, and has misled some of Mr. Colebrooke's readers into wrong conclusions.

himself in reference to the aforementioned¹ text of Sannaka prohibiting the gift in adoption of an only son. He says :—अथ स्वन्विगुनिर्बन्धपरस्वत्वापादनस्य दानपदार्थत्वात् परस्वत्वापादनस्य च परप्रतिग्रहं विज्ञानुपपत्तेरनमप्यभिप्रेतम् । तेन प्रतिग्रहनिषेधो व्युत्पन्नेव सिध्यति.² Translation :—“ Since the word dan (gift) means the establishing another's property after the previous extinction of one's own : and since another's property cannot be established without his acceptance, that [acceptance] too is condemned. Thus, a prohibition likewise against acceptance is established by that very [text].”³ It would accordingly not be doing any credit to Vijñāneśvara's acumen to say that the antithesis he contemplated in the said 10 line, was between the giver and the taker. The real antithesis contemplated by him has been brought out by the Mayūkha in its extract of this line of Vijñāneśvara. The Mayūkha says :—अथ निषेधो दत्तुं नृपायै नक्तव्ये इति विज्ञानेश्वरः.⁴ Translation :—“ Vijñāneśvara says this prohibition is for the man alone, i. e. is purushārtha (affecting the doer), and not kratvartha (affecting the rite).” This interpretation gives the words of Vijñāneśvara their real significance, and shews that the word दत्तुः (of the giver) as used by him here is of generic import, and stands for the doer of an act or acts in reference to which this remark may be made. It is necessary to treat the word दत्तुः (of the giver) as अविवक्षित (illustrative) as our writers would say ; for Vijñāneśvara intends that his remark दत्तुं नृपायै प्रतिषेधः (this prohibition regards the man) should be understood to apply to the two prohibitions that follow, viz., that in reference to an only son and that in reference to the eldest son. It is on this hypothesis alone that we can explain Nīlakaṇṭha's remark that Vijñāneśvara considers the prohibition about the eldest son as regarding the man alone, and not the act.⁵ And it appears that the use of the word तदा (likewise) by Vijñāneśvara before his passages containing the said two prohibitions would demand that Vijñāneśvara should be understood as applying his remark made in reference to the first precept to the two precepts that 30 follow. Now the intermediate precept, viz., that about the only son expressly referring to the giver and the taker, it will be hard to apply to it a remark which literally refers to the giver alone, unless the word ‘giver’ in the remark was interpreted as above explained.

² See Dat. Mīm. p. 19 ll. 2—4.

³ Mr. Sutherland translates तमप्यभिप्रेतम् by “(Sannaka) implies this also in his text in question.” (See Stokes' H. L. B. p. 572 ll. 5—9.) This is incorrect : tam (that) in Sanskrit refers to prati-graha (acceptance) and āśakṣipati means ‘condemns.’ Mr. Sutherland's translation does not bring out the sense of both these words, and gives 40 something as their translation, which makes the passage look either unmeaning or tautological.

⁴ See above Part I. p. 39 ll. 9, 10.

⁵ See above Dat. I. p. 20 ll. 98, 99 and translation Part II.

The result of the above interpretation of Vijñāneśvara's passage on adoption is that he considers all the prohibitions he notes in reference to that subject as purushārtha (referring to the doer.) What the distinction between purushārtha and kratvartha commandments is, Vijñāneśvara himself has told us in his disquisition on the nature of property (see Mit. chap. II. l. 46 p. 2 ll. 5—11 and its translation by Colebrooke chap. I. Sec. I. para. 10 Stokes' H. L. B. pp. 368, 369). Vijñāneśvara was there concerned with the text of Gautama, which lays down the different ways of acquiring property proper to different classes.¹ In reference to this text, he discusses the question whether the enumeration of the ways of acquiring property is intended to exclude property in things acquired by ways other than those enumerated. He concludes by saying that the rule contained in the text being purushārtha, a breach thereof involves the man in sin, but cannot prevent property arising in things acquired by sinful ways recognized by the people though not laid down by the text. Similarly in the present instance, the directions of Smṛiti-writers as to how the adoption should be made are simply purushārtha, and their breach will not affect the validity of an adoption once made. And Vijñāneśvara confirms this conclusion by his interpretation of those three texts that he has cited on the subject.

The following passage from the Nirṇayasindhu² will show that though an act be reprobated by the Śāstras, yet its performance when complete cannot fail to produce its natural consequences. It runs as follows:—

“दक्षिणायै तु यो विप्रः शुद्रस्य जुहुयाद्रविः ब्राह्मणस्तु भवेच्छुद्रः शुद्रस्तु ब्राह्मणो भवेत् ॥ अत्र माधवाचार्यः यो विप्रः शुद्रदक्षिणामादाय तदीयं हविः शान्तिपुष्ट्यादिसिद्धये वैदिकैर्मन्त्रैर्जुहोति तस्य विप्रस्यैव दोषः शुद्रस्तु होमफलं लभत एवेति व्याचक्षते.”

Translation:—A Brāhmaṇa who for a money gift performs a sacrifice on behalf of a Śūdra shall become a Śūdra, while the Śūdra will become a Brāhmaṇa. Mādhavācārya commenting on this says: ‘that Brāhmaṇa who receiving presents from a Śūdra sacrifices his offerings by means of Vedic mantras for the accomplishment of Śānti (the appeasement of evil influences) and Puṣṭi (prosperity) becomes himself sinful. The Śūdra on the other hand does obtain the fruit of that sacrifice.’ The text of Parāśara contained in this passage is cited by Nīlakaṇṭha in his Vyavahāra Mayūkha (see Part I, page 42 ll. 2—3 and translation, Part II. p. 56, l. 10 to p. 57, l. 3).

It is sometimes said that the prohibition about an only son deserves to be distinguished from other prohibitions, because the breach of the former is declared by Vasishṭha to affect injuriously the interests of the ancestors while the other prohibitions refer only to parties to the act of adoption. This distinction is without a difference, for if a man can jeopardize the interests of his ancestors by prohibiting his wife from adoption,¹ w'y can he not do the same while alive by giving away his only son?

Having briefly discussed the Sanskrit texts and digests on this point, I now pass to English writers. I naturally begin with Sir T. Strange. He thus² refers to the case of the adoption of an only son:—

"Such are, in this respect, the restrictions inculcated, but not always enforced; 10 since, as in other instances, so with regard to both these prohibitions respecting an eldest and an only son, where they most strictly apply, they are directory only; and an adoption of either, however blameable in the giver, would nevertheless, to every legal purpose, be good; according to the maxim of the civil law, prevailing perhaps in no code more than in that of the Hindoos, factum valet, quod fieri non debuit."

This is consonant to the daily practice and the usages of the people.

In vol. II. there is a note by Mr. Colebrooke at p. 109 to say that the absolute gift of such a son is forbidden. Beyond the two texts above quoted there is no authority for this statement, and Mr. Colebrooke's translation in two different ways of Vijñānesvara's word तद्वत्: (not fit to 20 be given) occurring twice in one and the same passage is wrong,³ and probably has misled Mr. Colebrooke himself. The Sanskrit is not capable of two renderings, and yet he says in regard to the eldest son that he should not be given, and in regard to the only son that he must not be given. A fruitful parent of disputes! Mr. Ellis's note⁴ discusses the same case, and comes to the following conclusion:—

"The point is scarcely worth further discussion, the undoubted law in this, as in all other cases of adoption, marriage, &c. being that if the act be duly completed, it cannot be reversed."

Colebrooke⁵ thus translates Jagannatha's comments respecting the 30 validity of an adoption so made:—

"Let no man accept an only son, because he should not do that whereby the family of the natural father becomes extinct, but this does not invalidate the adoption of such a son actually given to him."

Mr. W. H. Macnaughten speaking of the precept against the adoption of the eldest or the only son observes⁶:—

"But this is an injunction rather against the giving than the receiving an only or elder son in adoption, and the transfer having been once made, it cannot be annulled."

⁶ Principles of Hindu Law by W. H. Macnaughten, vol. I. p. 67, note.

This seems but reasonable, considering that the adoption having once been made, the boy ipso facto loses all claim to the property of his natural family. See Bombay Reports, case of Huebut Rao v. Govind Rao, vol. II. page 75 ; also Elem. Hin. Law App. pp. 82, 83."

In vol. II. of the same work¹ are two Bengal cases, which have been sometimes used against such adoptions. The only authority on which they rest is the text of Vasishtha (नैक पुत्रं दत्तात् &c.) which has not been correctly rendered, and of which the most has been made by Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera. The note beginning at p. 178 is incorrect : " By 0 him who has one son only, the gift of that son is not legal." This translation of नैकपुत्रेण कृतं पुत्रदानं कदाचन is wrong. It should be—"By one having an only son, the gift of a son should not be made." Again, the words "on account of difficulty" in the last line of the same page are not correct. The phrase is यत्नतः which means "by [every] effort." The rest of Śaunaka's text likewise is not well rendered. Again, the author of Vaijayantī and Dattaka Mīmāṃsā is one and the same, namely, Nanda Paṇḍita ; and in no place has Nanda Paṇḍita or any of the above authors maintained that such an adoption, if made, would be void. Mr. Steele says that "an only son may be adopted with the concur- 20 rence of both parties."²

Mr. Mayne has well summed up the cases on this subject.³ And when he is supplied with correct translations of the several texts, and an ampler account of our usages, he will have proper materials with which to work. I think the subject of Dvyaṃmushyāyāna adoption, which is commented on by our digest-writers, has been a great stumbling-block in this discussion. That the digests do contain reference to the Dvyaṃmushyāyāna adoption there is no doubt. But the only Purāṇic instance of Bhairava and Vēṭāla having a son in common is 30 tioned, nor is one available as I am now able to say after an enquiry extending over a series of years. The result is that the conclusion arrived at by the Madras Sadr Court appears to me to be correct—namely, that the Dvyaṃmushyāyāna form of adoption is not recognised in this age.⁴ At any rate, whatever may be the theory, it is so in practice. Mr. Mayne is, I think, naturally led to some of his conclusions by this obsolete form of adoption. Further, he is not correct in saying that in the matter of the adoption of an only son, in Western India, there is very little authority either way.¹ I have cited several published cases decided between 1821 to 1868; and adduced the authority of digest-writers to show that such an adoption is perfectly valid. The case alluded to² by him is no authority at all. Sir J. Arnould's remark is, as Mr. Mayne³ observes, a mere obiter dictum, and further it ignores a course of decisions of the Bombay Sadr Diwāni Adalat and the High Court for 48 years, and the usages of the people. Sir Joseph Arnould was not acquainted with Sanskrit, and could not have referred to original authorities. But instead of at once going to Bengal—the law of which on this subject is in many respects quite 10 opposed to the law of Bombay—he should have gone to Madras for information. Mr. Mayne then alludes to Sir F. Macnaughten, who has quoted Śrinātha Bhaṭṭa,⁴ a high authority directly in favor of this kind of adoption; but he says nothing about this in his conclusions. Sir F. Macnaughten did not know our digests, nor the fact that there were means of salvation other than the adoption of a son open to a Hindu; nor does he appear to have had any notion of our Mīmāṃsā doctrines or of country usages. He gives his rules for Bengal as he deduces them. He attacks the Paṇḍits of Poona, Bombay, and in fact all over the country, as if whenever they came near courts of justice, they were at once tainted 20 with corruption.⁵ It is evident he did not know Sanskrit; whence he obtained his information I do not know, and to what tests it was submitted, is not very clear; but I am constrained to say with regret that a work like this, redolent of violent prejudice and preconceptions, is not at all calculated to produce conviction; and that, I apprehend, is the aim of all works of an argumentative character. To return to the argument: the breach of a precept against adoption of an only son may produce sin—aye deep sin, but does it render such an adoption a nullity if once effected? This is the point, and those who argue that it does so, are, in my opinion, confounding what is nothing more than a 30 moral obligation with another and a different thing, viz., an absolute legal prohibition.

Jīmūtavāhana premising certain texts of Vyāsa and Nārada which prohibit an alienation of immoveable property by one coparcener without the consent of the rest, says:—तेन दानविक्रयकर्तव्यताविषेणान् तत्करणाद्विषयिकस्यो भवति न तु दानादानविषयि: वचनश्रुतेनापि वस्तुनोऽन्यथाकरणादपि:⁶ Translation:—Thus the effecting of gift or sale being prohibited, if they should [still] be effected there would be the transgression of a vidhi (command); but there could be no invalidity of gift and the like [already accomplished], for a thing cannot have its nature changed by even a hundred texts.

In respect of marriages completed in contravention of the rule about the Sapinda relationship, and the sameness of gotra or pravara, it is laid down that though the bride so wedded cannot be the wife of the bridegroom for any conjugal or religious purposes, yet the ceremonies of marriage being complete, she cannot be wedded by another, and must be maintained by the bridegroom whom she has married.
 10 (See Nirṇayasindhu, pari. iii, 1st half, l. 30, p. 2, ll. 5—8, and Dharma-sindhu, pari. iii, 1st half, l. 57, p. 1, ll. 4—9.)

Again, those who hold that the doctrine of factum valet cannot be invoked to uphold acts done in contravention of texts will be surprized to find that a bride once married to an impotent individual is not free to marry another, and must look for maintenance to the family of that husband.¹

It has been declared in the Purāṇas that while in the past ages an act mentally done was irrevocable, the present Kali age enjoys the privilege of irrevocability attaching only to such acts as have been 20 formally gone through. Thus Sāvitrī's choice of Satyawat for her husband was irrevocable, though actual marriage had not taken place.² In the present age marriage when once performed would be irrevocable, at all events in the higher classes.

In respect to the subject of adoption, the applicability of the principle "factum valet" has been expressly laid down by Sir T. Strange (vol. I. p. 87), by Mr. Colebrooke³ (see Strange H. L. vol. II. p. 126), by Mr. Ellis⁴ (Strange H. L. vol. II. p. 126), and by Mr. Steele (p. 53).

The observance of it in practice has also been testified⁴ to by the Poona Śāstris in 1852 A. C. in the document which I have above 30 published.

The next subject for consideration is what ceremonies are necessary for adoption. There is much diversity of statement on this subject; but the better opinion seems to be that nothing beyond the giving and Extracts of Colebrooke's and Ellis's Statements on factum valet (2 Strange 126).

"The adoption being complete, it cannot be annulled. An adopted son may be disinherited for like reasons as the legitimate son. (Mitāksh. on Inh. chap. II.
 40 sect. X.) but he cannot forfeit the relation of son."—Colebrooke.

"Certainly :—however defective the ceremony, and however small in consequence the spiritual benefit, the act of adoption cannot be set aside on any account whatever; a fortiori, not on account of any informality."—Ellis.

⁴ See above p. 477 ll. 20, 21.

taking is necessary to constitute a valid adoption. I shall briefly state what has been said in favour of and against this proposition.

Mr. Sutherland considers the performance of rites laid down by Śaunaka, Baudhāyana and Vasishṭha so imperative, that a neglect of them would work a partial disability to the extent of succession.¹ He cites the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā (p. 29, translation sec. V. paras. 45, 56) and Dattaka Chandrikā p. 52 (translation sec. II. para. 17) and p. 65 (translation sec. VI. para. 3).

Mr. Justice Strange considers the performance of ceremonies necessary for the three higher castes (see p. 27 para. 107). 10

The Dharmasindhu considers the ritual essential; but he notes the practice to the contrary.²

Against these are arrayed Sir Thomas Strange—(vol. I. pp. 93—97), Mr. Steele (pp. 52, 53, 185, 186), the Dvaitanirṇaya (see above Part I. p. 41 ll. 21—23 translation, Part II. p. 55 ll. 39—42), Jagannātha's Vivāda Bhaṅgārṇava (Colebrooke's translation, vol. II. pp. 389, 390). The Samskāraustubha does not raise this question specifically; but in reference to the question of succession of an adopted son on the birth of a legitimate brother, it quotes from the Vidhānamālā those texts which Nanda Paṇḍita and Kubera referring them to Manu construe as general- 20 ly disqualifying from inheritance a son adopted without the due performance of the ritual. The Samskāraustubha shews that those texts refer to the case of an adopted son who has got a legitimate brother subsequent to his adoption.³ The Laugākshibhāskara goes into this question very elaborately, and comes to the conclusion that the Homa (sacrifice) or any other ceremonies beyond giving and taking are not essential for any of the four classes. A decision to the same effect has been passed by the High Court of Madras in Singamma v. Venkatacharlu (IV. M. H. C. R. p. 165).

There are other minor points in regard to adoption; these I must 30 pass over for the present.

I shall now make a few brief remarks on decided cases. The first Calcutta case against the adoption of an only son which I shall notice is that of Raja Upendra Lal Roy v. Srimati Rani Prasannamayī.⁴ The decision is passed on the meaning of Vasishṭha's text⁵ above cited; and on the analogy of a widow being unable to adopt without the assent of the husband. I am sorry there is no explanation of the terms "religious and legal injunctions" which the judgment uses. The distinction between the act and the doer is not at all dwelt upon, nor is the Mīmāṃsā doctrine in that matter explained, and the sin of the extinction of lineage seems to have swayed the decision. Not one of the large number of authorities, digests and cases (except one Madras case) available is noticed or discussed. It is said that a widow or woman cannot adopt without the husband's assent; similarly it is urged an only son cannot be given. In the first place, I cannot see the analogy; and, in the next place, I maintain that the woman can adopt, and her power to do this is admitted at least in this 10 presidency. The next ground is "the want of dominion" over the son; but this is opposed to authority.¹ No digests are noticed, except Dattaka Mīmāṃsā and the Dattaka Chandrikā; and the two cases from Mr. W. Macnaughten's second volume which are mentioned give no reasons; and they rest moreover on the authority of Nanda Paṇḍita alone.

The next case I shall notice is that of Manick Chunder Dutt v. Bhuggobutty Dossee.² To follow Mr. Justice Markby, what is to be considered is—(1) the language of the text, (2) the comments thereon, and (3) decided cases. To call the text itself a prohibitory one is beg-20 ging the question. The case does not consider whether the text is an arthavāda or Vidhi, and if the latter, whether it will affect the Kratu (act) or merely subject the Kartṛi (doer) to a penalty. The text about the eldest son is considered permissive, and about the only son mandatory. Upon what principle of the Mīmāṃsā the distinction is founded it is not easy to see and none is shown. The texts are as under :—

[About an only son.]

नैकपुत्रेण कर्तव्यं पुत्रदानं कदाचन ॥ Translation :—By one having an only son, the gift of a son should never be made.

[About the eldest son.]

न व्येष्टं पुत्रं दद्यात् ॥ Translation :—An eldest son should not be given.
 30 The one is 'should not be made,' the other 'should not be given.' No distinction can here be found in the language. And yet the court has made the distinction.³ Again, only one digest-writer—namely, Jaganātha—is noticed, but dissented from—no reasons being assigned for the dissent. The Mayūkhā and Bālabhāṭṭa are not noticed; nor are there any sufficient reasons assigned for setting aside Srinātha Bhāṭṭa. The mistake in Mr. Colebrooke's translation in not using "should" in translating the same word on both occasions, but in one place using 'must' instead, has not been presented to the court, nor has the note in 1 Macnaughten 67 been discussed. None of the Bombay cases except one in the fourth volume Bom. H. C. Reports are noticed at all. Unless Mr. Justice Markby is a Sanskrit scholar, his reason for rejecting Śrinātha Bhaṭṭa is inexplicable. If a Brāhmaṇa perform a Vedic Yajña for a Śūdra, he commits a heinous sin greater than that of extinction of lineage, and he may suffer for the sin. Similarly does a Śūdra incur sin in performing a Yajña (sacrifice), for he is prohibited from performing it (see Śūdra Kamalākara l. 1). But the Yajña actually performed is good notwithstanding. The authority of Mr. Colebrooke at p. 107 vol. II. Strange's Hindu Law is based on the wrong use of the 10 word "must" (Stokes' H. L. B. p. 416, l. 6).

The next is a Bombay case (Lakshmappa v. Ramara and others)¹ decided at the end of 1875, but one of the judgments in which was published in 1879. In this case the point for decision was—whether the adoption of a Śūdra after his marriage was valid. Mr. Justice Nánābhai Haridas held that it was so, and so are clearly the authorities. The next judgment is by his Lordship the Chief Justice, and it lays down that—

"A gift by a Hindu widow, of her deceased husband's only son, is invalid in the absence of an express authority conferred upon her by him during his lifetime. Such 20 an adoption, being null and void ab initio, cannot be supported by the maxim quod fieri non debuit factum valet."

Further, the father's power of giving away his only son is questioned in the same judgment, although no decision on that point is pronounced. It may be mentioned that neither of the two above points was before the court for a decision, and that the fact that the plaintiff was the only son of his natural father was assumed and had not been found; so that it may be said that the judgment on these points is an obiter dictum. As such, however, it is against the course of decisions from 1821. The first remark that occurs in reference to it is that Mr. Colebrooke's 30 mistake in regard to the translation of the words ऋण्यः (should not be given) does not seem to have been brought to the court's notice. There is no warrant for translating the same words by two different renderings such as "must not" and "should not." With all deference therefore to Mr. Colebrooke's learning, his translation is clearly wrong.² As regards the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, it is said that it supports the distinction taken by Mr. Colebrooke in so far as it abstains from attaching to the prohibition about an only son that remark which it is said to have made on noticing the prohibition about the eldest son. This reasoning is unsound, as it does not correctly represent the general 40 tenor of Nīlakaṇṭha's remarks. On the subject of adoption, Nīlakaṇṭha commences with the text of Manu (ch. IX. v. 168) which Vijñāneśvara notices in his comments on Yājñavalkya chap. II. v. 130.¹ Then out of the three Pratishedhas (prohibitions) mentioned by Vijñāneśvara after the above text of Manu, viz., (I.) that about the giving of a son except in distress; (II.) that about an only son; and (III.) that about the eldest son, Nīlakanṭha notices only the first and the last, because Vijñāneśvara's remarks in reference thereto did not meet with his approval, and he wanted to dissent from Vijñāneśvara on those points. Then, discussing the question as to whether a daughter could be adopted or not, Nīlakanṭha passes to another head, viz., the पुत्रप्राप्तिप्रकारः (the manner of the adoption of a son), and it is under this head that he cites Śaunaka's and Vasishṭha's texts about an only son without making any remark thereon. This being so, it is not correct to attribute to Nīlakanṭha the remark on the prohibition of the eldest son that such prohibition refers to the giver and not to the taker (note that this remark on the said prohibition has been expressly cited by Nīlakanṭha as one made by Vijñāneśvara), and secondly, it is incorrect to ground the inference drawn on Nīlakanṭha's silence in respect to the only son. As already shown, Nīlakanṭha understood Vijñāneśvara as repeating his remark 'this prohibition applies to the giver alone,' after all the three prohibitions noted by him, including that about an only son. Having so understood him, if Nīlakanṭha rejects that remark in reference to the first and third prohibitions, and says nothing about it in reference to the second prohibition, viz., that about an only son, the indisputable inference from his silence is that he accepted Vijñāneśvara's remark in reference to an only son. It is said Nīlakanṭha was 'challenged' expressly to make the remark by a text of Vasishṭha. I do not see how he was, particularly as the text in question could and ought to be construed as directory and not imperative, as I have already shown. Again, it is probably by an oversight that the prohibition about the eldest son has been referred to Śaunaka, who says nothing of the kind. But it serves to increase the confusion. The value of the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā and Chandrikā I have discussed before; but there is no "strong" condemnation of such an adoption in sec. IV. paras. 3, 6, and 8. The Mitāksharā contains no such absolute prohibition as is here stated. The passage appears to have been misunderstood, as well as Mayūkha's remark, which, as has been already observed, makes the matter still clearer. The Dattaka Mīmāṃsā has never been such an authority in this presidency as it is now stated to be.² It does not regulate the ceremonies of the people, and it is an importation from the Gauda provinces. I cannot also understand what it is that constitutes Mr. Sutherland an expert on the subject of adoption. He has translated two treatises, it is true, but these require revision, and even on Bengal questions the translation is admitted to be imperfect. Mr. Colebrooke's opinion, as I have already shown, is also founded on the incorrect translation of the words न दत्तः. In regard to the character of the Report of the late Sadr Dewani Adalat I would not constitute myself a critic, but it strikes me that if the Reports were badly selected, and even if the court was not "strongly constituted," those circumstances do not afford sufficient reason for overturning a course of decisions extending over at least fifty-nine 10 years, a course too which was in conformity to the law and usages of the country as understood and expounded by former governments. There is no decision whereby the gift by C of the child of A and B without their knowledge or consent has ever been sanctioned by the courts or by the people, so far as can be ascertained. As regards the Vyavasthas mentioned at page 390 very little can be gathered from the extracts given.

The conclusion in regard to cases applicable to this side of India to which I have arrived on this subject may be well stated in the words of the last Full Bench decision of the High Court at Allahabad, from 20 whose judgment in Hanuman Tewari v. Shiral, the following is an extract² :—

"The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay have all ruled in favour of the doctrine of factum valet. In the Calcutta Court Sir Edward Ryan, C. J., in delivering judgment in Sreemutty Joymony Dossee v. Sreemutty Sibosoondry Dossee, (1) said: The adoption of an only son is no doubt blameable by Hindu law, but when done it is valid. In Bombay the question was distinctly raised in the case of Raje Vayankatrao Anandrao Nimbalkar v. Jayantrao, (2) before Warden and Gibbs, J. J., who were both of opinion that the adoption of an only 30 son having once taken place, and the requisite ceremonies having been duly performed, cannot be set aside. Gibbs, J., in delivering his judgment, said: The rulings of this Court, as shown from 2 Borr. p. 83, downwards, as also of the Calcutta Court, have been that an adoption once made cannot be set aside. If the adopted be not a proper person, the sin lies on the giver and receiver alone, but the adoption must stand. In the High Court of Madras the same doctrine was approved and applied in the case of Ohinna Gaundān v. Kumara Gaundān, (3) before Scotland, C. J., and Frere, J. In delivering judgment, Scotland, C. J., went carefully through all the authorities, concluding thus: 'On the 40 whole the case (i.e. the validity of such an adoption) is concluded by authority; but I must say, with all possible respect for Mr. Justice Strange, that upon principle and reason I should have felt myself bound to decide the point in the same way.' This appears to be the Madras case alluded to in the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter in the Calcutta case I have referred to. In a subsequent Madras case, Singamma v. Vinjamura Venkatacharlu,⁽⁴⁾ before Bittleston and Ellis, J. J., the law laid down by Scotland, C. J., was carefully considered and distinctly approved, and it appears to me to be sound and worthy of 10 acceptance by us."

To the above, must be added the following most important observations of the Privy Council in Srimati Uma Devi v. Gokoolamund Das Mahapatra :—

"It was urged at the Bar that the maxim 'Quod fieri non debuit factum valet,' though adopted by the Bengal school, is not recognised by other schools, and notably by that of Benares. That it is not recognised by those schools in the same degree as in Bengal is undoubtedly true. But that it receives no application except in Lower Bengal is a proposition which is contradicted not only by the passage already cited from Sir William Macnaughten's work, but by decided cases. The High Court of 20 Madras in Chinna Ganagan v. Kumara Ganagan and the High Court of Bombay in Raje Vayankatrao Anandrao Nimbalkar v. Jayantrao bin'ur Ranadive acted upon it; and did so in reference to the adoption of an only son of his natural father, on which the High Court of Calcutta in Rajah Opundur Lall Ray v. Ranees Bromo Mayee has refused to give effect to it, considering that particular prohibition to be imperative.

"Their Lordships feel that it could be highly objectionable on any but the strongest grounds to subject the natives of India in this matter to a rule more stringent than that enunciated by such text writers as Sir William Macnaughten and Sir Thomas Strange. Their treatises have long been treated as of high authority by the Courts 30 of India, and to overrule the propositions in question might disturb many titles.

"Upon a careful review of the authorities their Lordships cannot find any which would constrain them to invalidate the adoption of the defendant, even if it were more clearly proved than it is that Hulodhur Dass could have adopted Dinobundhoo, the only son of his brother. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment of the High Court and to dismiss this appeal with costs."

In regard to an adoption of a sister's son and a daughter's son, I have room only for a few brief remarks. The cases of Gopal Narhar Safray v. Hanmant Ganesh Safray and another,² and *Bhagirthibai v. Radhabai*³ decide that among Bráhmaṇas the adoption of a daughter's 40 son is "incestuous and invalid," and cannot be supported on the doctrine of factum valet. These decisions are opposed to the unambiguous language of the Vyavabára Mayúkha and the Dvaita Nirṇaya on the subject. Their Lordships were probably misled by Mr. Borradaile's translation of the Mayúkha, for it is asserted that the Mayúkha prohibits such an adoption, whereas Nīlakaṇṭha has taken particular pains to disprove the alleged prohibition. The passage has been entirely misunderstood. I refer my readers for a correct rendering of it to pp. 53, 54 above. As regards the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā, the Dattaka Chandrikā, and the Samakāra-kaustubha I have fully discussed their doctrines on the subject before. In reference to the extracts taken from the Vyavasthās, which are yet to be published, they do not displace my conclusions on the subject, and I regret they cannot be accepted in their 10 present form until the original questions and replies of all authorities are published. No earlier published case adverse to the right of the sister's son and the daughter's son is available, and the usage in this presidency being uniformly in accordance with the opinions of the Mayúkha, the effect of these decisions will, I fear, tend to upset titles and promote litigation. Only a few weeks ago a gentleman who, when questioned, admitted that the law and usage of the country was in favour of the adoption of daughter's sons, sought for precedents against the validity of such adoptions in the shape of some new decisions, which, he was told, had been 20 passed. The effect of such decisions may, therefore, be easily conceived. It seems that in neither case was it brought to the notice of their Lordships that both Nīlakaṇṭha and Śankara Bhaṭṭa have plainly stated that the immemorial usage of the country was in favour of such adoptions. It was not proper to have drawn any inference from the 'admission' of the learned pleader that no instances of the adoption of a daughter's son in the locality of the litigants were deposed to in the case. No issue about such custom was, it seems, raised in the lower courts; and any remarks of the court as to the likelihood of the existence of that custom can therefore have no judicial force. A document containing the recognition of an adoption of the kind by one of the Śanka- 30 rāchāryas is set aside on the ground that the law had neither invested him with 'any dispensing or judicial power,' nor was he agreed to as an arbitrator. What law is here meant I do not know. The jurisdiction of Śankarāchārya over Smārtas in matters of religion is independent of any consent of the parties.¹ Adoption is to a considerable extent a matter of religion, and the decision by a Śankarāchārya that a certain adoption is valid and not sinful has been and is still regarded by the community as final. With the greatest deference I must observe that that authority has better means than our present courts of knowing the accepted law and usages of the people; and our civil courts ought not 40 to undertake to reject an adoption on the ground of its sinfulness, when such adoption has been declared by the Śankarāchārya not to be sinful.

² Ind. Law Rep., 3 Bombay Ser. 273.

³ Id. 298.

My previous remarks on the essential constituents of an adoption, together with those on the doctrine of factum valet, apply to adoptions of a sister's son and a daughter's son alike. There being a proper giver and receiver, and a gift and acceptance, the adoption must stand even on the imperfect doctrines of Dattaka Chandriká and Dattaka Mímámsá.

I now beg to add that from an extract of the Dattápradínika Section of the Smṛiti Chandriká with which I was lately favored by Dr. Burnell, I am fortified in my conclusion that the printed Dattaka Chandriká is not the work of Devaṇṇa-bhaṭṭa.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

The following are subjects upon which I have yet to publish my observations, on the texts as well as the customary law in relation thereto. My time and space being limited, I am not able to do so in this work, and must therefore content myself with a bare enumeration thereof:—

I. Partition—

- (a) Evidence of.
- (b) Impartible property.
- (c) Primogeniture.
- 20 (d) Eldership.
- (e) Mother's share.
- (f) Charges on ancestral property—such as marriages, debt, Maháyátrá (great pilgrimage)—expenses, maintenance, &c.
- (g) Gifts of ornaments to female relations.

II. Succession—

- (a) Ordinary property.
- (b) Offices—1, Temporal; 2, Religious.
- (c) Strīdhana.
- 30 (d) The doctrines of vesting and survivorship—are they applicable to the Hindu law?

III. Alienation—

- (a) Sales.
 - (b) Gifts.
 - (c) Mortgages.
